QUA

Q Is a consonant borrowed from the Latin or French, for which, though q is commonly placed in the Saxon alphabet, the Saxons generally used cy, eo; as cyellan or ceyllan, to quell: qu is, in English, pronounced as by the Italians and Spaniards cu; as quail, quench, except quoit, which is spoken, according to the manner of the French, coit: the name of this letter is cue, from queue, French, tail; its form being that of an O with a tail.

QUAB. n. f. [derived, by Skinner, from gobio, the Latin name.] A sort of fish.

To QUACK. v. n. [quacken, Dutch, to cry as a goose.]

1. To cry like a duck. This word is often written quake, to represent the sound better.

Wild-ducks quack where grasshoppers did sing. King.

2. To chatter boastfully; to brag loudly; to talk ostentatiously. Believe mechanick virtuosi Can raise them mountains in Potofi, Seek out for plants with signatures, To quack of universal cures. Hudibras, p. iii.

QUACK. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. A boastful pretender to arts which he does not understand. The change, schools and pulpits are full of quacks, jugglers and plagiarists. L'Estrange.

Some quacks in the art of teaching, pretend to make young gentlemen masters of the languages, before they can be masters of common sense. Felton on the Classics.

2. A vain boastful pretender to physick; one who proclaims his own medical abilities in publick places. At the first appearance that a French quack made in Paris: a little boy walked before him, publishing with a shrill voice, "My father cures all sorts of distempers;" to which the doctor added in a grave manner, "The child says true." Addison.

3. An artful tricking practitioner in physick. Despairing quacks with curses fled the place, And vile attorneys, now an useless race. Pope.

1. The fourth part; the quarter. In sixty-three years may be lost eighteen days, omitting the intercalation of one day every fourth year, allowed for this quadrant or six hours supernumerary. Brown.

Q.

QUA

2. The quarter of a circle. The obliquity of the ecliptick to the equator, and from thence the diurnal differences of the sun's right ascensions, which finish their variations in each quadrant of the circle of the ecliptick, being joined to the former inequality, arising from the excentricity, makes these quarterly and seeming irregular inequalities of natural days. Holder on Time.

3. An instrument with which altitudes are taken. Some had compasses, others quadrants. Tatler, N^o 81.

Thin taper sticks must from one center part; Let these into the quadrant's form divide. Gay.

QUADRANTAL. adj. [from quadrant.] Included in the fourth part of a circle. To fill that space of dilating, proceed in straight lines, and dispose of those lines in a variety of parallels: and to do that in a quadrantal space, there appears but one way possible; to form all the interfections, which the branches make, with angles of forty-five degrees only. Derham's Physico-Theol.

QUADRATE. adj. [quadratus, Latin.]

1. Square; having four equal and parallel sides.

2. Divisible into four equal parts. The number of ten hath been extolled, as containing even, odd, long and plain, quadrates and cubical numbers. Brown.

Some tell us, that the years Moses speaks of were somewhat above the monthly year, containing in them thirty-six days, which is a number quadrates. Hakewill on Providence.

3. [Quadrans, Lat.] Suited; applicable. This perhaps were more properly quadrant. The word consumption, being applicable to a proper or improper consumption, requires a general description, quadrates to both. Harvey on Consumptions.

QUADRATE. n. f.

1. A square; a surface with four equal and parallel sides. And 'twixt them both a quadrates was the base, Proportion'd equally by seven and nine; Nine was the circle set in heaven's place, All which compacted, made a goodly diapase. Fa. Queen.

Whether the exact quadrates or the long square be the better, is not well determined; I prefer the latter, provided the length do not exceed the latitude above one third part. Wotton.

The powers militant That stood for heav'n, in mighty quadrates join'd Of union irresistible, mov'd on In silence their bright legions. Milton.

To our finite understanding a quadrates, whose diagonal is commensurate to one of the sides, is a plain contradiction. More's Divine Dialogues.

2. [Quadrat, Fr.] In astrology, an aspect of the heavenly bodies, wherein they are distant from each other ninety degrees, and the same with quartile. Dist.

To QUADRATE. v. n. [quadrato, Lat. quadrer, Fr.] To suit; to be accommodated. Aristotle's rules for Epick poetry, which he had drawn from his reflections upon Homer, cannot be supposed to quadrates exactly with the heroick poems, which have been made since his time; as it is plain, his rules would have been still more perfect, could he have perused the Aeneid. Addison.

QUADRATICK. adj. Four square; belonging to a square. Dist.

QUADRATICK equations. In algebra, are such as retain, on the unknown side, the square of the root or the number sought: and are of two sorts; first, simple quadratics, where the square of the unknown root is equal to the absolute number given; secondly, affected quadratics, which are such as have, between the highest power of the unknown number and the absolute number given, some intermediate power of the unknown number. Harris.

QUADRATURE. n. f. [quadratura, Fr. quadratura, Latin.]

1. The act of squaring. The speculations of algebra, the doctrine of infinites, and the quadratures of curves should not intrench upon our studies of morality. Watts's Improvement of the Mind.

2. The

- QUERE. [Latin.] Enquire; seek; a word put when any thing is recommended to enquiry.
Quere, if 'tis steeped in the same liquor, it may not prevent the fly and grub. Mortimer's Husbandry.
- To QUAFF. v. a. [of this word the derivation is uncertain: Junius, with his usual idleness of conjecture, derives it from the Greek, καφίζω in the Eolick dialect used for καφίζω. Skinner from go off, as go off, quaff, quaff. It comes from coffer, Fr. to be drunk.] To drink; to swallow in large draughts.
He calls for wine; a health, quoth he, as if H' ad been abroad carousing to his mates

QUA

- After a storm, quafft off the muscadei,
And threw the fops all in the sexton's face. Shakeſp.
I found the prince, and found the queen.
With such a deep demeanour in great sorrow,
That tyranny, which never quafft but blood,
Would, by beholding him, have wash'd his knife
With gentle eye drops. Shakeſp. Henry IV. p. ii.
On flow'rs repos'd, and with rich flow'rets crown'd,
They eat, they drink, and in communion sweet Quaff immortality and joy. Milton's Par. Lost, b. v.

And quaff with blameless Ethiops in the deep. Dryden.- QUAFFER. n. f. [from quaff.] He who quaffs.
- To QUAFFER. v. n. [a low word, I suppose, formed by chance.] To feel out. This seems to be the meaning.
Ducks, having larger nerves that come into their bills than geese, quaffer and grope out their meat the most. Derham.
- QUAGGY. adj. [from quagmire.] Boggy; soft; not solid. Amf.
This word is somewhere too in Clarissa.
- QUAGMIRE. n. f. [that is, quagmire.] A shaking marsh; a bog that trembles under the feet.
The fen and quagmire, to marsh by kind,
Are to be drained. Tuſſer.
Your hearts I'll stamp out with my horse's heels,
And make a quagmire of your mingled brains. Shakeſp.
Poor Tom! whom the foul fiend hath through ford and whirlpool, o'er bog and quagmire.
The wet particles might have easily ever mingled with the dry, and so all had either been sea or quagmire. More.
The brain is of such a clammy confidence, that it can no more retain motion than a quagmire. Glanville's Scry.
- QUAID. part. [of this participle I know not the verb, and believe it only put by Spenser, who often took great liberties, for quailed, for the poor convenience of his rhyme.] Crushed; dejected; depressed.
Therewith his sturdy courage soon was quaid,
And all his senses were with sudden dread dismay'd. F. Qu.
- QUAIL. n. f. [quaglia, Italian.] A bird of game.
His quails ever
Beat mine, in-hoop'd at odds. Shakeſp. Ant. and Cleop.
Hen birds have a peculiar sort of voice, when they would call the male, which is so eminent in quails, that men, by counterfeiting this voice with a quail pipe, easily drew the cocks into their snares. Roy on the Creation.
- A fresher gale

- To QUAIL. v. a. [cpellan, Saxon.] To crush; to quell; to depress; to sink; to overpower.
To drive him to despair, and quite to quail,
He shewed him painted in a table plain
The damned ghosts. Fairy Queen, b. i.
Three, with fiery courage, he assails;
Three, all as kings adorn'd in royal wife:
And each successive after other quails,
Still wond'ring whence so many kings should rise. Daniel.
- QUAINT. adj. [quaint, Fr. compais, Lat.]
1. Nice; scrupulously, minutely, superfluously exact; having petty elegance.
Each ear sucks up the words a true love scattereth,
And plain speech oft, than quaint phrase framed is. Sidney.

QUA

- You were glad to be employ'd,
To shew how quaint an orator you are. Shakeſp.
He spends some pages about two similitudes; one of mine, and another quainter of his own. Stillingfleet.- 2. Subtle; artful. Obsolete.
- 3. Neat; pretty; exact.
But for a fine, quaint, graceful and excellent fashion, yours is worth ten on's.
Her mother hath intended,
That, quaint in green, she shall be loose enrob'd
With ribbands pendent, flaring 'bout her head. Shakeſp.
I never saw a better fashion'd gown,
More quaint, more pleasing, nor more commendable. Shakespeare.
- 4. Subtly excogitated; fine spun.
I'll speak of frays,
Like a fine bragging youth, and tell quaint lies,
How honourable ladies sought my love,
Which I denying they felt sick and died.
He his fabrick of the heavens
Hath left to their disputes, perhaps to move
His laughter at their quaint opinions wide Hereafter. Milton's Par. Lost, b. viii.
- 5. Quaint is, in Spenser, quailed; depressed. I believe 'by a very licentious irregularity.
With such fair flight him Guyon fail'd:
Till at the last, all breathless, weary and faint,
Him spying, with fresh onset he assail'd,
And kindling new his courage, seeming quaint,
Struck him so hugely, that through great constraint
He made him stoop. Fairy Queen, b. ii.
- 6. Affecting; foppish. This is not the true idea of the word, which Swift seems not to have well understood.
To this we owe those monstrous productions, which under the name of trips, spies, amusements, and other conceited appellations, have overrun us, and I wish I could say, those quaint fopperies were wholly absent from graver subjects. Swift.
- QUAINTLY. adv. [from quaint.]
1. Nicely; exactly; with petty elegance.
When was old Sherwood's hair more quaintly curl'd, Or nature's cradle more enchas'd and pur'd. B. Johnson.
- 2. Artfully.
Breathe his faults so quaintly,
That they seem the taints of liberty,
The flash and outbreak of a fiery mind.
3. Ingeniously with success. This is not the true sense.
As my Buxoma
With gentle finger stroak'd her milky care,
I quaintly stole a kiss. Gay.
- QUAINTNESS. n. f. [from quaint.] Nicety; petty elegance.
There is a certain majesty in simplicity, which is far above all the quaintness of wit. Pope.
- To QUAKE. v. n. [cpacan, Saxon.]
1. To shake with cold or fear; to tremble.

If Cupid hath not spent all his quiver in Venice, thou wilt quake for this. Shakespeare.
Do his business as the better day Would quake to look on. Shakespeare. Hamlet.
Who honours not his father,
Henry the fifth, that made all France to quake, Shake he his weapon at us, and pass by. Shakespeare.
The mountains quake at him, and the hills melt, and the earth is burnt at his presence. Nab. i. 5.
Son of man eat thy bread with quaking, and drink thy water with trembling and carefulness. Ezek. xii. 18.
In fields they dare not fight where honour calls,
The very noise of war their souls does wound,
They quake but hearing their own trumpets found. Dryden.
- 2. To shake; not to be solid or firm.
Next Smedley div'd; slow circles dimpled o'er
The quaking mud, that clos'd and op'd no more. Pope.
- QUAKE. n. f. [from the verb.] A shudder; a tremulous agitation.
As the earth may sometimes shake,
For winds shut up will cause a quake;
So often jealousy and fear
Stol'n to mine heart, cause tremblings there. Suckling.
- QUAKING-GRASS. n. f. An herb. Anyworth.
- QUALIFICATION. n. f. [qualification, Fr. from qualify.]
1. That which makes any person or thing fit for any thing.

But qualify the fire's extreme rage.
Left it should burn above the bounds of reason. Shakespeare.
I have drunk but one cup to-night, and that was craftily qualified too; and behold what innovation it makes here. Shakespeare.
They would report that they had records for twenty thousand years, which must needs be a very great untruth, unless we will qualify it, expounding their years not of the revolution of the sun, but of the moon. Abbot.
It hath so pleased God to provide, for all living creatures, wherewith he hath filled the world, that such inconveniences, as we contemplate afar off, are found, by trial and the witness of men's travels, to be so qualified, as there is no portion of the earth made in vain. Raleigh's Hist. of the World.
So happy 'tis you move in such a sphere,
As your high majesty with awful fear
In human breasts might qualify that fire,
Which kindled by those eyes had flamed higher. Waller.
Children should be early instructed in the true estimate of things, by opposing the good to the evil, and compensating or qualifying one thing with another. L'Estrange.
My proposition I have qualified with the word, often; thereby making allowance for those cases, wherein men of excellent minds may, by a long practice of virtue, have rendered even the heights and rigours of it delightful. Atterbury.
- 5. To ease; to alluage.
He balms and herbs therto apply'd,
And evermore with mighty spells them charm'd,
That in short space he has them qualify'd,
And him restor'd to health, that would have dy'd. Spenser.
- 6. To modify; to regulate.
It hath no larinx or throttle to qualify the sound. Brown.
- QUALITY. n. f. [qualitas, Lat. qualite, Fr.]
1. Nature relatively considered.
These, being of a far other nature and quality, are not so strictly or everlastingly commanded in scripture. Hooker.
Other creatures have not judgment to examine the quality of that which is done by them, and therefore in that they do, they neither can accuse nor approve themselves. Hooker.
Since the event of an action usually follows the nature or quality of it, and the quality follows the rule directing it, it concerns a man, in the framing of his actions, not to be deceived in the rule. South.
The power to produce any idea in our mind, I call quality of the subject, wherein that power is. Locke.
- 2. Property; accident.
In the division of the kingdom, it appears not which of the dukes he values most; for qualities are so weighed, that curiosity in neither can make choice of either's moiety. Shakespeare.
No sensible qualities, as light and colour, heat and sound, can be subsistent in the bodies themselves absolutely considered, without a relation to our eyes and ears, and other organs of sense: these qualities are only the effects of our sensation, which arise from the different motions upon our nerves from objects without, according to their various modification and position. Bentley.
- 3. Particular efficacy.
O, mickle is the powerful grace, that lies
In plants, herbs, stones, and their true qualities. Shakespeare.
- 4. Disposition; temper.
To-night we'll wander through the streets, and note
The qualities of people. Shakespeare. Ant. and Cleopatra.
- 5. Virtue or vice.
One doubt remains, said I, the dames in green,
What were their qualities, and who their queen? Dryden.
- 6. Accomplishment; qualification.
He had those qualities of horsemanship, dancing and fencing, which accompany a good breeding. Clarendon.
- 7. Character.
The attorney of the dutchy of Lancaster partakes of both qualities, partly of a judge in that court, and partly of an attorney general. Bacon's Advice to Villiers.
We,

QUA

We, who are hearers, may be allowed some opportunities in the quality of standers-by. Swift.

8. Comparative or relative rank.
It is with the clergy, if their persons be respected, even as it is with other men; their quality many times far beneath that which the dignity of their place requireth. Hooker.
We lived most joyful, obtaining acquaintance with many of the city, not of the meanest quality. Bacon.
The masters of these horses may be admitted to dine with the lord lieutenant: this is to be done, what quality forever the persons are of. Temple.

quaternary of the elements, which are the principles of bodies, but in the letters of the name of God. Brown.
- QUATRIN. n. f. [from quatrains, Fr.] A stanza of four lines rhyming alternately: as,
Say, Stella, what is love, whose fatal pow'r
Robs virtue of content, and youth of joy?
What nymph or goddess in a luckless hour
Disclos'd to light the mischief-making boy. Mr. Mulso.
I have writ my poem in quatrains or stanzas of four in alternate rhyme, because I have ever judged them of greater dignity for the found and number, than any other verse in use. Dryden.
- TO QUATYER. v. n. [from quater, Saxon.]
1. To shake the voice; to speak or sing with a tremulous voice.
Miso sitting on the ground with her knees up, and her hands upon her knees tuning her voice with many a quavering cough, thus discour'd. Sidney, b. ii.
The division and quavering, which please so much in music, have an agreement with the glittering of light playing upon a wave. Bacon's Nat. Hist.
- Now sportive youth
Carol incoherent rhythms with suiting notes,
And quaver unharmonious. Philips.
We shall hear her quavering them half a minute after us, to some sprightly airs of the opera. Addison.

In a most curious mantle, wrought by the hand
Of his queen mother. Shakefp. Cymbeline.
2. A woman who is sovereign of a kingdom.
That queen Elizabeth lived sixty-nine, and reigned forty-five years, means no more than, that the duration of her existence was equal to sixty-nine, and the duration of her government to forty-five annual revolutions of the sun. Locke.
Have I a queen
Past by my fellow rulers of the world?
Have I refus'd their blood to mix with yours,
And raise new kings from so obscure a race? Dryden.
- TO QUEEN. v. n. To play the queen.
A threepence bow'd would hire me,
Old as I am, to queen it. Shakefp. Henry VIII.
Of your own state take care: this dream of mine,
Being now awake, I'll queen it no inch farther,
But milk my ewes and weep. Shakefp. Winter's Tale.
- QUEEN-APPLE. n. f. A species of apple.
The queen-apple is of the summer kind, and a good cyder apple mixed with others. Mortimer's Husbandry.

- TO QUELL. v. a. [from quell, Saxon.] To crush; to subdue;
originally, to kill.
What avails
Valour or strength, though matchless, quell'd with pain,
Which all subdues, and makes remits the hands Of mightiest? Milton's Par. Lost, b. vi.
Compulsion quell'd
His best of man, and gave him up to tears
A space; till firmer thoughts restrain'd excess. Milton.
This quell'd her pride, but other doubts remain'd,
That once disdaining, she might be disdain'd. Dryden.
He is the guardian of the public quiet, appointed to restrain violence, to quell seditions and tumults, and to preserve that peace which preserves the world. Atterbury.
- TO QUELL. v. n. To die. Speiser.

word. Skinner.
- TO QUENCH. v. a.
1. To extinguish fire.
Since stream, air, sand, mine eyes and ears conspire,
What hope to quench, where each thing blows the fire. Sidney.
No English soul
More stronger to direct you than yourself;
If with the lap of reason you would quench,
Or but allay, the fire of passion. Shakefp. Henry VIII.
This is the way to kindle, not to quench.
A little fire is quickly trodden out,
Which, being suffer'd, rivers cannot quench. Shakefp.
The fire had power in the water, forgetting his own virtue;
and the water forgot his own quenching nature. Wisd. xix. 20.
Milk quencheth wild-fire better than water, because it entireth better. Bacon's Nat. Hist.
Subdu'd in fire the stubborn metal lies;
One draws and blows reciprocating air,
Others to quench the hissing mals prepare. Dryden.
You have already quench'd sedition's brand,
And zeal, which burnt it, only warms the land. Dryden.
When your work is forged, do not quench it in water to cool it, but throw it down upon the floor or hearth to cool of itself; for the quenching of it in water will harden it. Moxon.

QUE

2. To still any passion or commotion.
But if all aim but this be levell'd false,
The supposition of the lady's death
Will quench the wonder of her infamy. Shakefp.
3. To allay thirst.
Every draught to him, that has quenched his thirst, is but a further quenching of nature, a provision for rheum and dif-eases, a drowning of the spirits. South.
4. To destroy.
When death's form appears, the fear'st not
An utter quenching or extinguishment;
She would be glad to meet with such a lot,
That so she might all future ill prevent. Davies.
Covered with skin and hair keeps it warm, being naturally very cold, and also to quench and dissipate the force of any stroke, and retund the edge of any weapon. Ray.
- TO QUENCH. v. n. To cool; to grow cool.
Dost thou think, in time
She will not quench, and let instructions enter Where folly now possesses? Shakefp. Cymbeline.
- QUENCHABLE. adj. [from quench.] That may be quenched.
- QUENCHER. n. f. [from quench.] Extinguisher; one that quenches.
- QUENCHLESS. adj. [from quench.] Unextinguishable.
Come, bloody Clifford, rough Northumberland,
I dare your quenchless fury to more rage. Shakefp.
The judge of torments, and the king of tears,
He fills a burnish'd throne of quenchless fire. Crashaw.
- QUERELLE. n. f. [from querela, Lat. querelle, Fr.] A complaint to a court.
A circumduction obtains not in causes of appeal, but in causes of first instance and simple querels only. Ayliffe.
- QUERENT. n. f. [from querens, Latin.] The complainant; the plaintiff.
- QUERIMONIOUS. adj. [from querimonia, Latin.] Querulous;
complaining.
- QUERIMONIOUSLY. adv. [from querimonious.] Querulously;
with complaint.
To thee, dear Thom, myself addressing,
Most querimoniously confessing. Denham.
- QUERIMONIOUSNESS. n. f. [from querimonious.] Complaining temper.
- QUERIST. n. f. [from quero, Lat.] An enquirer; an asker of questions.
I shall propose some considerations to my gentle querist. Speck.
The juggling sea god, when by chance trepan'd
By some instructed querist sleeping on the strand, Impatient of all answers, strait became A stealing brook. Swift's Miscellanies.
- QUERN. n. f. [from quern, Saxon.] A handmill.
Skim milk, and sometimes labour in the quern,
And bootless make the breathless huswife churn. Shakefp.
Some apple-colour'd corn Ground in fair querns, and some did spindles turn. Chapm.
- QUERPO. n. f. [corrupted from cuervo, Spanish.] A drel close to the body; a waistcoat.
I would fain see him walk in querpo, like a cased rabbit, without his holy furr upon his back. Dryden.
- QUERRY, for querry. n. f. [from querry, Fr.] A groom belonging to a prince, or one conversant in the king's stables, and having the charge of his horses; also the stable of a prince. Bailey.
- QUERULOUS. adj. [from querulus, Latin.] Mourning; habitually complaining.
Although they were a people by nature hard-hearted, querulous, wrathful and impatient of rest and quietness, yet was there nothing of force to work the subversion of their state, till the time before-mentioned was expired. Hooker.
The pressures of war have cowed their spirits, as may be gathered from the very accent of their words, which they prolate in a whining kind of querulous tone, as if still complaining and crest-fallen. Howell's Vocal Forest.
Though you give no countenance to the complaints of the querulous, yet curb the insolence of the injurious. Locke.
- QUERULOUSNESS. n. f. [from querulous.] Habit or quality of complaining mournfully.
- QUERRY. n. f. [from quere, Lat.] A question; an enquiry to be resolved.
I shall conclude, with proposing only some queries, in order to a farther search to be made by others. Newton.
This shews the folly of this query, that might always be demanded, that would impiously and absurdly attempt to tie the arm of omnipotence from doing any thing at all, because it can never do its utmost. Bentley.
- TO QUERRY. v. a. [from the noun.] To ask questions.
Three Cambridge fops
Each prompt to query, answer and debate. Pope.
- QUEST. n. f. [from queste, Fr.]
1. Search; act of seeking.
None but such as this bold ape unblest,
Can ever thrive in that unlucky quest. Hubbard's Tale.
If lusty love should go in quest of beauty,
Where should he find it fairer than in Blanch. Shakefp.
Fair

QUE

Fair silver bukin'd nymphs,
I know this quest of yours and free intent
Was all in honour and devotion meant.
To the great mistress of your princely shrine. Milton.
An aged man in rural weeds,
Following, as seem'd, the quest of some stray ewe. Milton.
One for all Myself expose, with lonely steps to tread
Th' unfounded deep, and the void immense
To search with wand'ring quest a place foretold Should be. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. ii.
Since first break of dawn, the fiend,
Mere serpent in appearance, forth was come,
And on his quest, where likeliest he might find
The only two of mankind. Milton.
I would be not strange, should we find Paradise at this day where Adam left it; and I the rather note this, because I see there are some so earnest in quest of it. Woodward.
There's not an African,
That traverses our vast Numidian deserts
In quest of prey, and lives upon his bow,
But better practices these boasted virtues. Addison's Cato.
We see them active and vigilant in quest of delight. Spect.
2. [For inquest.] An empanell'd jury.
What's my offence?
Where is the evidence, that doth accuse me?
What lawful quest have given their verdict up Unto the frowning judge. Shakespeare. Richard III.
3. Searchers. Collectively.
You have been hotly call'd for,
When, being not at your lodging to be found,
The senate sent above three several quests
To search you out. Shakespeare. Othello.
4. Enquiry; examination.
O place and greatness! millions of false eyes
Are stuck upon thee; volumes of report Run with these false and most contrarious quests
Upon thy doings. Shakespeare. Measure for Measure.
5. Request; desire; solicitation.
Gad not abroad at every quest and call
Of an untrained hope or passion. Herbert.
To QUEST. v. n. [quester, Fr. from the noun.] To go in search.
QUESTANT. n. f. [from quester, Fr.] Seeker; endeavourer after.
See, that you come
Not to woo honour, but to wed it; when
The bravest questant shrinks, find what you seek,
That fame may cry you loud. Shakespeare.
QUESTION. n. f. [question, Fr. questio, Latin.]
1. Interrogatory; any thing enquired.
Because he that knoweth least is fittest to ask questions, it is more reason for the entertainment of the time, that ye ask me questions, than that I ask you. Bacon.
2. Enquiry; disquisition.
It is to be put to question, whether it be lawful for christian princes to make an invasive war simply for the propagation of the faith. Bacon's Holy War.
3. A dispute; a subject of debate.
There arose a question between some of John's disciples and the Jews about purifying. Jo. iii. 25.
4. Affair to be examined.
In points of honour to be try'd,
Suppose the question not your own. Swift.
5. Doubt; controversy; dispute.
This is not my writing,
Though I confess much like the character:
But out of question 'tis Maria's hand. Shakespeare.
'Tis time for him to shew himself, when his very being is called in question, and to come and judge the world, when men begin to doubt whether he made it. Tillotson.
The doubt of their being native impressions on the mind, is stronger against these moral principles than the other; not that it brings their truth at all in question. Locke.
Our own earth would be barren and desolate, without the benign influence of the solar rays, which without question is true of all the other planets. Bentley.
6. Judicial trial.
But whosoever be found guilty, the communion book hath surely deserved least to be called in question for this fault. Hooker, b. v. f. 31.
7. Examination by torture.
Such a presumption is only sufficient to put the person to the rack or question, according to the civil law, and not bring him to condemnation. Ayliffe's Parergon.
8. State of being the subject of present enquiry.
If we being defendants do answer, that the ceremonies in question are godly, comely, decent, profitable for the church, their reply is childish and disorderly to say, that we demand the thing in question, and shew the poverty of our cause, the goodness whereof we are fain to beg that our adversaries would grant. Hooker, b. iv. f. 4.

QUE

If he had said, it would purchase six shillings and threepence weighty money, he had proved the matter in question. Locke.
Nor are these assertions that dropped from their pens by chance, but delivered by them in places where they profess to state the points in question. Atterbury's Preface.
9. Endeavour; search. Not in use.
As it more concerns the Turk than Rhodes,
So may he with more facile question bear it;
For that it stands not in such warlike brace,
But altogether lacks the abilities
That Rhodes is dress'd in. Shakespeare.
To QUESTION. v. n. [from the noun.]
1. To enquire.
Suddenly out of this delightful dream
The man awoke, and would have question'd more;
But he would not endure the woful theme. Spenser.
He that questioneth much shall learn much, and content much; but especially if he apply his questions to the skill of the persons whom he asketh. Bacon's Essays.
2. To debate by interrogatories.
I pray you think you question with a Jew;
You may as well use question with the wolf,
Why he hath made the ewe bleat for the lamb. Shakespeare.
To QUESTION. v. a. [questionner, Fr.]
1. To examine one by questions.
Question your royal thoughts, make the case yours;
Be now the father, and propose a son;
Hear your own dignity so much prophand;
And then imagine me taking your part,
And in your pow'r to silence your son. Shakespeare.
But hark you, Kate,
I must not have you henceforth question me, Whither I go. Shakespeare. Henry IV, p. i.
This construction is not so undubitably to be received, as not at all to be questioned. Brown's Vulgar Errors.
2. To doubt; to be uncertain of.
O impotent estate of human life!
Where fleeting joy does lasting doubt inspire,
And most we question what we most desire. Prior.
3. To have no confidence in; to mention as not to be trusted.
Be a design never so artificially laid, if it chanceth to be defeated by some cross accident, the man is then run down, his counsels derided, his prudence questioned, and his person
QUESTIONABLE. adj. [from question.]
1. Doubtful; disputable.
Your accustomed clemency will take in good worth, the offer of these my simple labours, bestowed for the necessary justification of laws heretofore made questionable, because not perfectly understood. Hooker's Dedication.
That persons drowned float, the ninth day when their gall breaketh, is a questionable determination, both in the time and cause. Brown's Vulgar Errors.
It is questionable, whether the use of steel springs was known in those ancient times. Wilkins's Math. Magick.
It is questionable, whether Galen ever saw the dissection of a human body. Baker's Reflections on Learning.
2. Suspicious; liable to suspicion; liable to question.
Be thy advent wicked or charitable,
Thou com'st in such a questionable shape,
That I will speak to thee. Shakespeare. Hamlet.
QUESTIONARY. adj. [from question.] Enquiring; asking questions.
I grow laconick even beyond laconicism; for sometimes I return only yes or no to questionary epistles of half a yard long. Pope to Swift.
QUESTIONABLENESS. n. f. [from question.] The quality of being questionable.
QUESTIONER. n. f. [from question.] An enquirer.
QUESTIONLESS. adv. [from question.] Certainly; without doubt.
Questions hence it comes that many were mistaken. Ral.
Questionless duty moves not so much upon command as promise; now that which proposes the greatest and most suitable rewards to obedience, and the greatest punishments to disobedience, doubtless is the most likely to enforce the one and prevent the other. South.
QUESTMAN. n. f. [quest, man, and monger.] Starter of QUESTMONGER. n. law suits or prosecutions.
Their principal working was upon penal laws, wherein they spared none, great nor small, but raked over all new and old statutes, having ever a rabble of promoters, questmongers, and leading jurors at their command. Bacon.
QUESTTRIST. n. [from quest.] Seeker; pursuer.
Six and thirty of his knights,
Hot questtrists after him, met him at the gate,
Are gone with him tow'rd Dover. Shakespeare. King Lear.
QUESTUARY. adj. [from questus, Lat.] Studious of profit.
Although lapidaries and questuary enquirers affirm it, yet the writers of minerals conceive the stone of this name to be a mineral concretion, not to be found in animals. Brown.
QUIB. n. f. A sarcasm; a bitter taunt. Ans. The same perhaps with quip.
To QUIBBLE. v. n. [from the noun.] To pun; to play on the sound of words.
The first service was neats tongues sliced, which the philosophers took occasion to discourse and quibble upon in a grave formal way. L'Estrange.
QUIBBLE. n. f. [from quidlibet, Latin.] A low conceit depending on the sound of words; a pun.
This may be of great use to immortalize puns and quibbles, and to let posterity see their forefathers were blockheads. Add.
Quirks or quibbles have no place in the search after truth. Watts.
QUIBLER. n. f. [from quibble.] A punster.
QUICK. adj. [epic, Saxon.]
1. Living; not dead.
They swallowed us up quick, when their wrath was kindled against us. Psalms cxiv. 3.
If there be quick raw flesh in the risings, it is an old leprosy. Lev. xiii. 10.
The quick and the dead. Common Prayer.
As the sun makes; here noon, there day, there night Melts wax, dries clay, makes flow'rs, some quick, some dead. Davies.
Thence shall come,
When this world's dissolution shall be ripe,
With glory and pow'r to judge both quick and dead. Milt.
2. Swift; nimble; done with celerity.
Prayers whereunto devout minds have added a piercing kind of brevity, thereby the better to express that quick and speedy expedition, wherewith ardent affections, the very wings of prayer, are delighted to present our suits in heaven. Hooker, b. v. f. 33.
3. Speedy; free from delay.
Oft he to her his charge of quick return Repeated. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. ix.
4. Active; spritely; ready.
A man of great facility in business, and he preserved so great a vigour of mind even to his death, when near eighty, that some, who had known him in his younger years, did believe him to have much quicker parts in his age than before. Clarendon.
A man must have passed his noviciate in finning, before he comes to this, he never so quick a proficient. South.
The animal, which is first produced of an egg, is a blind and dull worm; but that which hath its resurrection thence, is a quick eyed, volatile and sprightly fly. Grew's Cosmol.
QUICK. adv. Nimble; speedily; readily.
Ready in gybes, quick answer'd, faucy, and
As quarrelous as the weazel. Shakespeare. Cymbeline.
This shall your understanding clear
Those things from me that you shall hear, Conceiving much the quicker. Droghda's Nymphid.
They gave those complex ideas, that the things they were continually to give and receive information about, might be the easier and quicker understood. Locke.
This is done with little notice, if we consider how very quick the actions of the mind are performed, requiring not time, but many of them crowded into an instant. Locke.
QUICK. n. f.
1. A live animal.
Peeping close into the thick,
Might see the moving of some quick,
Whose shape appeared not;
But were it fairy, fiend or snake,
My courage earned it to wake,
And manful threat forth. Spenser.
2. The living flesh; sensible parts.
If Stanley held, that a son of king Edward had still the better right, it was to teach all England to say as much; and therefore that speech touched the quick. Bacon.
Seiz'd with sudden smart,
Stung to the quick, he felt it at his heart. Dryden.
The thoughts of this disgraceful composition so touches me to the quick, that I cannot sleep. Arbuthnot's Hist. of J. Bull.
Scarifying gangrenes, by several incisions down to the quick, is almost universal, and with reason, since it not only discharges a pernicious ichor, but makes way for topical applications. Sharp's Surgery.
3. Living plants.
For indoling of land, the most usual way is with a ditch and bank set with quick. Mortimer's Husbandry.
QUICKBEAM, or quicktree. n. f.
Quickbeam or wild forb, by some called the Irish ash, is a species of wild ash, preceded by blossoms of an agreeable scent. Mortimer's Husbandry.
To QUICKEN. v. a. [epic, Saxon.]
1. To make alive.
All they that go down into the dust, shall kneel before him;
and no man hath quicken'd his own soul. Psalms xxii. 30.
I will never forget thy commandments; for with them thou hast quicken'd me. Psalms exix.

QUI

This my mean task would be
As heavy to me, as 'tis odious; but
The mistress which I serve, *quicken*s what's dead,
And makes my labours pleasures. Shakespeare. Tempest.
To quicken with kissing; had my lips that power,
Thus would I wear them out. Shakespeare. Ant. and Cleop.
Fair soul, since to the fairest body join'd
You give such lively life, such *quicken*ing pow'r,
And influence of such celestial kind,
As keeps it still in youth's immortal flower. Davies.
He throws
His influence round, and kindles as he goes;
Hence flocks and herds, and men, and beasts and fowls
With breath are quicken'd, and attract their souls. Dryden.
2. To hasten; to accelerate.
You may sooner by imagination quicken or slack a motion, than raise or cease it; as it is easier to make a dog go faster, than to make him stand still. Bacon's Nat. Hist.
Others were appointed to consider of penal laws and proclamations in force, and to quicken the execution of the most principal. Hayward.
Though any commodity should shift hands never so fast, yet, if they did not cease to be any longer traffick, this would not at all make or quicken their vent. Locke.
3. To sharpen; to actuate; to excite.
Though my senses were astonish'd, my mind forced them to quicken themselves; because I had learnt of him, how little favour he is wont to shew in any matter of advantage. Stanley.
It was like a fruitful garden without an hedge, that *quicken*s the appetite to enjoy so tempting a prize. South.
They endeavour by brandy to quicken their taste already extinguish'd. Tatler, N^o 57.
This review he makes use of, as an argument of great force to quicken them in the improvement of those advantages to which the mercy of God had called them by the gospel. Rogers's Sermons.
The desire of fame hath been no inconsiderable motive to quicken you in the pursuit of those actions, which will best deserve it. Swift.
To QUICKEN. v. n.
1. To become alive: as, a woman *quicken*s with child.
These hairs, which thou dost ravish from my chin,
Will quicken and accuse thee; I'm your host;
With robbers hands, my hospitable favour
You should not ruffle thus. Shakespeare. King Lear.
They rub out of it a red dust, that converteth after a while into worms, which they kill with wine when they begin to quicken. Sandys's Journey.
The heart is the first part that *quicken*s, and the last that dies. Ray on the Creation.
2. To move with activity.
Sees by degrees a purer blush arise,
And keener lightnings quicken in her eyes. Pope.
QUICKENER. n. f. [from quicken.]
1. One who makes alive.
2. That which accelerates; that which actuates.
Love and enmity, aversion and fear are notable whetters and quickeners of the spirit of life in all animals. More.
QUICKLIME. n. f. [calx viva, Lat. quick and lime.] Lime unquenched.
After burning the stone, when lime is in its perfect and unaltered state, it is called quicklime. Hill's Materia Medica.
QUICKLY. adv. [from quick.] Nimble; speedily; actively.
Thou com'st to use thy tongue: thy story quickly. Shak.
Pleasure dwells no longer upon the appetite than the necessities of nature, which are quickly and easily provided for;
and then all that follows is an oppression. South.
QUICKNESS. n. f. [from quick.]
1. Speed; velocity; celerity.
What any invention hath in the strength of its motion, is abated in the slowness of it; and what it hath in the extraordinary quickness of its motion, must be allowed for in the great strength that is required unto it. Wilkins.
Joy, like a ray of the sun, reflects with a greater ardour and quickness, when it rebounds upon a man from the breast of his friend. South's Sermons.
2. Activity; briskness.
The best choice is of an old physician and a young lawyer;
because, where errors are fatal, ability of judgment and moderation are required; but where advantages may be wrought upon, diligence and quickness of wit. Wotton.
The quickness of the imagination is seen in the invention, the fertility in the fancy, and the accuracy in the expression. Dryden.
3. Keen sensibility.
Would not quickness of sensation be an inconvenience to an animal, that must lie still. Locke.
4. Sharpness; pungency.
Thy generous fruits, though gather'd ere their prime,
Still shew'd a quickness; and maturing time
But mellow'd what we write to the dull sweets of rhyme. Dryden.

Ginger renders it brisk, and corrects its windiness, and juice of corianders whereof a few drops tinge and add a pleasant quickness. Mortimer's Husbandry.

QUICKSAND. n. f. [quick and sand.] Moving sand; unsoft ground.

What is Edward, but a ruthless sea? Shakeſp.
What Clarence, but a quickſand of deceit? Shakeſp.
Undergirding the ſhip, and fearing left they ſhould fall into the quickſands, they ſtrake fail, and ſo were driven. Act. xxvii.
But when the veſſel is on quickſands caſt,
The flowing tide does more the ſinking haſte. Dryden.
Trajan, by the adoption of Nerva, ſtems the tide to her relief, and like another Neptune ſhoves her off the quickſands. Addiſon on Ancient Medals.
I have marked out ſeveral of the ſhals and quickſands of life, in order to keep the unwary from running upon them. Addiſon.

To QUICKSET. v. a. [quick and ſet.] To plant with living plants.

In making or mending, as needeth thy ditch,
Get ſet to quickſet it, learn cunningly which. Tuſſer.
A man may ditch and quickſet three poles a day, where the ditch is three foot wide and two foot deep. Mortimer.

QUICKSET. n. f. [quick and ſet.] Living plant ſet to grow.

Plant quickſets and tranſplant fruit trees towards the de-create. Evelyn's Kalendar.
Nine in ten of the quickſet hedges are ruined for want of ſkill. Swift's Miſcellanies.

QUICKSIGHTED. adj. [quick and ſight.] Having a ſharp ſight.

No body will deem the quickſighted amongſt them to have very enlarged views in ethics. Locke.
No article of religion hath credulity enough for them; and yet theſe ſame cautious and quickſighted gentlemen can ſwallow down this ſottiſh opinion about perſpicacious atoms. Bentley.

QUICKSIGHTEDNESS. n. f. [from quickſighted.] Sharpneſs of ſight.

The ignorance that is in us no more hinders the knowledge that is in others, than the blindneſs of a mole is an argument againſt the quickſightedneſs of an eagle. Locke.

QUICKSILVER. n. f. [quick and ſilver; argentum vivum, Lat.] Quickſilver, called mercury by the chymiſts, is a naturally fluid mineral, and the heavieſt of all known bodies next to gold, and is the more heavy and fluid, as it is more pure; its nature is ſo homogeneous and ſimple, that it is a queſtion whether gold itſelf be more ſo: it penetrates the parts of all the other metals, renders them brittle, and in part diſſolves them: it is wholly volatile in the fire, and may be driven up in vapour by a degree of heat very little greater than that of boiling water: it is the leaſt tenacious of all bodies, and every ſmaller drop may be again divided by the lighteſt touch into a multitude of others, and is the moſt diviſible of all bodies: mercury very readily mixes with gold, ſilver, lead and tin, by chymical operations, but not without difficulty with copper and iron; and it mixes eaſily with zink and biſmuth among the ſemimetals: the ſpecific gravity of pure mercury is to water as 14020 to 1000, and as it is the heavieſt of all fluids, it is alſo the coldeſt, and when heated the hotteſt: of the various ores, in which mercury is found, cinnabar is the richeſt and moſt valuable, which is extremely heavy, and of a bright and beautiful red colour: native cinnabar is principally found in the mines of Friuli, belonging to the Venetians, in Italy, and ſome others in Spain, Hungary, and the Eaſt Indies: quickſilver is alſo found ſometimes in its pure and fluid ſtate lodged in cavities of hard ſtones in the cinnabar mines, and the purer ores are chiefly compoſed of cinnabar in ſmall quantities, mixed with various other ſubſtances: the ancients all eſteemed quickſilver a poiſon, nor was it brought into internal uſe till about two hundred and twenty years ago, which was firſt occaſioned by the ſhepherds, who ventured to give it their ſheep to kill worms, and as they received no hurt by it, it was ſoon concluded, that men might take it ſafely: in time, the diggers in the mines, when they found it crude, ſwallowed it in vaſt quantities, in order to ſell it privately, when they had voided it by ſtool: but too free a uſe of ſo powerful a medicine cannot be always without danger: the miners ſeldom follow their occupation above three or four years, and then die in a moſt miſerable condition; and the artiſers, who have much dealing in it, are generally ſeized with paralytick diſorders: however, under proper regulation, it is a moſt excellent medicine. Hill's Materia Medica.

Mercury is very improperly called a metal, for though it has weight and ſimilarity of parts, it is neither diſſolvable by fire, malleable nor fixed: it ſeems to conſtitute a particular claſs of ſoſils, and is rather the mother or baſis of all metals, than a metal itſelf: mercury is of conſiderable uſe in gilding, making looking-glaſſes, in refining gold, and various other mechanical operations beſides medicine. Chambers.

Cinnabar maketh a beautiful purple like unto a red roſe; the beſt was wont to be made in Libia of brimſtone and quickſilver burnt. Peaſham on Drawing.

QUI

QUICKSILVERED. adj. [from quickſilver.] Overlaid with quickſilver.

Metal is more difficult to poliſh than glaſs, and is afterwards very apt to be ſpoiled by tarniſhing, and reflects not ſo much light as glaſs quickſilvered over does: I would propound to uſe inſtead of the metal a glaſs ground concave on the fore-ſide, and as much convex on the backſide, and quickſilvered over on the convex ſide. Newton's Opticks.

QUIDAM. [Latin.] Somebody.

For envy of ſo many worthy quidams, which catch at the garland, which to you alone is due, you will be perſuaded to pluck out of the hateful darkneſs thoſe to many excellent poems of yours, which lie hid, and bring them forth to eternal light. Spencer.

QUIDDANY. n. f. [cydonium, cydoniatum, Lat. quiddan, German, a quince.] Marmalade; confection of quinces made with ſugar.

QUIDDIT. n. f. [corrupted from quiddit, Lat. or from que dit, Fr.] A ſubtily; an equivocation. A low word.

Why may not that be the ſkull of a lawyer? where be his quiddits now? his quilllets? his caſes? and his tricks? Shak.

QUIDDITY. n. f. [quidditas, low Latin.]

1. Elience; that which is a proper answer to the queſtion, quid eſt? a ſcholatiſtick term.

He could reduce all things to acts,
And knew their natures and abſtracts,
Where entity and quiddity,
The ghoults of deſunct bodies fly. Hudibras, p. i.

2. A trifling nicety; a cavil; a captious queſtion.

Miſomer in our laws, and other quiddities, I leave to the profeſſors of law. Camden's Remains.

QUIESCENCE. n. f. [from quiesco, Lat.] Reſt; reſpite.

Whether the earth move or reſt, I undertake not to determine: my work is to prove, that the common inducement to the belief of its quieſcence, the teſtimony of ſenſe, is weak and frivolous. Glanvill's Sciſs.

QUIESCENT. adj. [quieſcens, Latin.] Reſting; not being in motion; not moving; lying at reſpite.

Though the earth move, its motion muſt needs be as in-ſenſible as if it were quieſcent. Glanvill's Sciſs.

The right ſide, from whence the motion of the body beginneſs, is the active or moving ſide; but the ſiniſter is the weaker or more quieſcent ſide. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

Sight takes in at a greater diſtance and more variety at once, comprehending alſo quieſcent objects, which hearing does not. Holder's Elements of Speech.

If it be in ſome part movent, and in ſome part quieſcent, it muſt needs be a curve line, and ſo no radius. Grew.

Preſion or motion cannot be propagated in a fluid in right lines beyond an obſtacle which ſtops part of the motion, but will bend and ſpread every way into the quieſcent medium, which lies beyond the obſtacle. Newton's Opticks.

QUIET. adj. [quiet, Fr. quietus, Latin.]

1. Still; free from diſturbance.

Breaking off the end for want of breath,
And ſlyding ſoft, as down to ſleep her laid,
She ended all her woe in quiet death. Fa. Queen.

This life is beſt,
If quiet life is beſt; ſweeter to you,
That have a ſharper known. Shakeſp. Cymbeline.

2. Peaceable; not turbulent; not offenſive; mild.

Let it be in the ornament of a meek and quiet ſpirit. 1 Pet.

3. Still; not in motion.

They laid wait for him, and were quiet all the night. Judges xvi. 2.

4. Smooth; not ruffled.

Happy is your grace,
That can tranſlate the ſtubborneſs of fortune
Into ſo quiet and ſo ſweet a ſtyle. Shakeſp.

QUIET. n. f. [quiet, Lat.] Reſt; reſpite; tranquillity; freedom from diſturbance; peace; ſecurity.

They came into Laith unto a people that were at quiet and ſecure. Judges xviii. 27.

There fix'd their arms, and there renew'd their name,
And there in quiet rules. Dryden's Aeneis.

Indulgent quiet, pow'r ſerene,
Mother of joy and love. Hugheſ.

To QUIET. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To calm; to lull; to pacify; to put to reſt.

The loweſt degree of faith, that can quiet the ſoul of man, is a firm conviction that God is placable. Forbes.

2. To ſtill.

Putting together the ideas of moving or quieting corporal motion, joined to ſubſtance, we have the idea of an immaterial ſpirit. Locke.

QUIETER. n. f. [from quiet.] The perſon or thing that quiets.

QUIETISM. n. f. [from quiet.]

What is called by the poets apathy or diſpaſſion, by the ſcepticks indiſturbance, by the Moliniſts quietiſm, by common men peace of conſcience, ſeems all to mean but great tranquility of mind. Temple.

QUI

QUIETLY. adv. [from quiet.]

1. Calmly; without violent emotion.

Let no man for his own poverty become more oppreſſing in his bargain, but quietly, modeſtly and patiently recommend his eſtate to God, and leave the ſucceſs to him. Taylor.

2. Peaceably; without offence.

Although the rebels had behaved themſelves quietly and modeſtly by the way as they went; yet they doubted that would but make them more hungry to fall upon the ſpoil in the end. Bacon's Henry VII.

3. At reſt; without agitation.

QUIETNESS. n. f. [from quiet.]

1. Coolneſs of temper.

This cruel quietneſs neither returning to miſlike nor proceeding to favour; gracious, but gracious ſtill after one manner. Sidney, b. ii.

That which we move for our better inſtruction ſake, turneth into anger and choler in them; they grow altogether out of quietneſs with it; they answer ſtunningly. Hooker.

2. Peace; tranquillity.

Stop effluſion of our chriſtian blood,
And ſtabliſh quietneſs on ev'ry ſide. Shakeſp. Henry VI.

What miſeries have both nations avoided, and what quietneſs and ſecurity attained by their peaceable union? Hayward.

3. Stillneſs; calmneſs.

QUIETSDOME. adj. [from quiet.] Calm; ſtill; undiſturb'd.

Not in uſe.

Let the night be calm and quietſome,
Without tempeſtuous ſtorms or ſad affray. Spencer.

QUIETUDE. n. f. [quietudo, Fr. from quiet.] Reſt; reſpite; tranquillity. Not in common uſe.

From the equal diſtribution of the phlegmatick humour, the proper alloy of fervent blood, will flow a future quietude and ſerenity in the affections. Wotton on Education.

QUILL. n. f.

1. The hard and ſtrong feather of the wing, of which pens are made.

Birds have three other hard ſubſtances proper to them; the bill, which is of a like matter with the teeth, the ſhell of the egg, and their quills. Bacon's Nat. Hiſtory.

2. The inſtrument of writing.

I will only touch the duke's own deportment in that iſland, the proper ſubject of my quill. Wotton's Buckingham.

Thoſe lives they fail'd to reſcue by their ſkill,
Their muſe would make immortal with her quill. Garth.

From him whole quills ſtand quiver'd at his ear,
To him that notches ſticks at Weſtminſter. Pope.

3. Prick or dart of a porcupine.

Near theſe was the black prince of Monomotapa, by whoſe ſide was ſeen the quill darting porcupine. Arbutnot and Pope.

4. Reed on which weavers wind their threads.

The preſumptuous damſel raſhly dar'd
The goddeſs' ſelf to challenge to the field,
And to compare with her in curious ſkill,
Of work with loom, with needle, and with quill. Spencer.

5. The inſtrument with which muſicians ſtrike their ſtrings.

His flying fingers and harmonious quill Strike ſev'n diſtinguiſh'd notes, and ſev'n at once they fill. Dryden's Aeneis.

QUILLET. n. f. [quidlibet, Lat.] Subtily; nicety; fraudulent diſtinction.

Why may not that be the ſkull of a lawyer? where be his quiddits now? his quilllets? his caſes? and his tricks? Shak.

A great foul weighs in the ſcale of reaſon, what it is to judge of, rather than dwell with ſo ſcrupulous a diligence upon little quilllets and niceties. Digby.

Ply her with love letters and billets,
And bait them well for quirks and quilllets. Hudibras.

QUILT. n. f. [couette, Fr. kuilt, Dutch; culcita, culcitra, Lat.] A cover made by ſtitching one cloth over another with ſome ſoft ſubſtance between them.

Quilts of roſes and ſpices are nothing ſo helpful, as to take a cake of new bread, and bedew it with a little ſack. Bacon.

In both tables, the beds were covered with magnificent quilts amongſt the richer fort. Arbutnot on Cairns.

She on the quilt ſinks with becoming woe, Wrapt in a gown, for ſickneſs and for ſhow. Pope.

To QUILT. v. a. [from the noun.] To ſtitch one cloth upon another with ſomething ſoft between them.

The ſharp ſteel arriving forcibly
On his horſe neck before the quilted ſell,
Then from the head the body ſundred quite. Fairy Queen.

A bag quilted with bran is very good, but it drieth too much. Bacon's Natural Hiſtory.

Entellus for the ſtrife prepares,
Strip'd of his quilted coat, his body bares, Compoſ'd of mighty bone. Dryden's Aeneis.

A chair was ready,
So quilted, that he lay at eaſe reclind.
Mayn't I quilt my rope? it galls my neck. Dryden.

QUINAR. adj. [quinarus, Lat.] Conſiſting of five.

This quinary number of elements ought to have been re-ſtrained to the generality of animals and vegetables. Boyle.

QUI

QUINCE. n. f. [coin, Fr. quiddan, German.]

1. The tree.

The quince tree is of a low ſtature; the branches are diffuſed and crooked; the flower and fruit is like that of the pear tree; but, however cultivated, the fruit is ſour and aſtringent, and is covered with a kind of down: of theſe ſpecies are fix. Miller.

2. The fruit.

They call for dates and quinces in the paſtry. Shakeſp.

A quince, in token of fruitfulneſs, by the laws of Solon, was given to the brides of Athens upon the day of their marriage. Peaſham on Drawing.

To QUINCH. v. n. [this word ſeems to be the ſame with quench, winch and quack.] To ſtir; to ſtounce as in reſentment or pain.

Beſtow all my ſoldiers in ſuch ſort as I have, that no part of all that realm ſhall be able to dare to quinch. Spencer.

QUINCUNCIAL. adj. [from quincunx.] Having the form of a quincunx.

Of a pentagonal or quincuncial diſpoſition, Sir Thomas Brown produces ſeveral examples in his diſcourſe about the quincunx. Roy on the Creation.

QUINCUNX. n. f. [Latin.]

Quincunx order is a plantation of trees, diſpoſed originally in a ſquare, conſiſting of five trees, one at each corner, and a fifth in the middle, which diſpoſition, repeated again and again, forms a regular grove, wood or wilderneſs; and, when viewed by an angle of the ſquare or parallelogram, preſents equal or parallel alleys.

Brown produces ſeveral examples in his diſcourſe about the quincunx. Roy on the Creation.

He whole light'ning pierc'd th' Iberian lines,
Now forms my quincunx, and now ranks my vines. Pope.

QUINQUAGESIMA. [Latin.] Quinquageſima ſunday, ſo called becauſe it is the fiftieth day before Eaſter, reckoned by whole numbers; ſhrove ſunday. Diet.

QUINQUANGULAR. adj. [quinque and angulus, Lat.] Having five corners.

Each talus, environed with a cruſt, conforming itſelf to the ſides of the talus, is of a figure quinquangular. Woodw.

Exactly round, ordinately quinquangular, or having the ſides parallel. Morſe's Antidote againſt Aſheſim.

QUINQUARTICULAR. adj. [quinque and articulus, Lat.] Conſiſting of five articles.

They have given an end to the quinquarticular controverſy, for none have ſince undertaken to lay more. Sanderſon.

QUINQUEFID. adj. [quinque and fido, Lat.] Cloven in five.

QUINQUEFOLIATED. adj. [quinque and folium, Lat.] Having five leaves.

QUINQUENNIAL. adj. [quinquennis, Lat.] Laſting five years; happening once in five years.

QUINCY. n. f. [corrupted from quincy.] A tumid inflammation in the throat, which ſometimes produces ſuffocation.

The throbbing quincy 'tis my ſtar appoints,
And rheumatims I ſend to rack the joints. Dryden.

Great heat and cold, ſucceeding one another, occaſion pleuriſies and quincies. Arbutnot on Air.

QUINT. n. f. [quint, Fr.] A ſet of five.

For ſtate has made a quint
Of generals he's liſted in't. Hudibras, p. iii.

QUINTAIN. n. f. [quintain, Fr.] A poſt with a turning top.
See QUINTIN.

My better parts
Are all thrown down; and that, which here ſtands up,
Is but a quintain, a mere lifeleſs block. Shakeſp.

QUINTESSENCE. n. f. [quinta eſſentia, Lat.]

1. A fifth being.

From their groſs matter the abſtracts the forms,
And draws a kind of quinteſſence from things. Davies.

The ethereal quinteſſence of heav'n Flew upward, ſpirited with various forms,
That rowl'd orbicular, and turn'd to ſtars. Milton.

They made fire, air, earth, and water, to be the four elements, of which all earthly things were compounded, and ſuppoſed the heavens to be a quinteſſence or fifth ſort of body diſtinct from all theſe. Wall's Logick.

2. An extract from any thing, containing all its virtues in a ſmall quantity.

To me what is this quinteſſence of duſt? man delights not me, nor woman neither. Shakeſp. Hamlet.

Who can in memory, or wit, or will,
Or air, or fire, or earth, or water find?
What alchymiſt can draw, with all his ſkill,
The quinteſſence of theſe out of the mind. Davies.

For I am a very dead thing,
In whom love wrought new alchymy,
For by his art he did expreſs
A quinteſſence even from nothingneſs,
From dull privations and lean emptineſs.
Paracelſus, by the help of an intenſe cold, teaches to ſeparate the quinteſſence of wine. Boyle.

Let there be light! ſaid God; and forthwith light
Ethereal, fiſt of things, quinteſſence pure, Sprung from the deep. Milton's Paraſiſe Loſt, b. vii.

When

QUI

When the supreme faculties move regularly, the inferior passions and affections following, there arises a serenity and complacency upon the whole soul, infinitely beyond the greatest bodily pleasures, the highest quintessence and elixir of worldly delights.

QUINTESSENTIAL. adj. [from quintessence.] Consisting of quintessence.

Venturous assertions as would have puzzled the authors to have made them good, specially considering that there is nothing contrary to the quintessential matter and circular figure of the heavens; so neither is there to the light thereof.

QUINTIN. n. f. [I know not whence derived; Minbew deduces it from quintus, Lat. and calls it a game celebrated every fifth year; palsus quintanus, Lat. Ans. quintaine, Fr.] An upright post, on the top of which a cross post turned upon a pin, at one end of the cross post was a broad board, and at the other a heavy sand bag; the play was to ride against the broad end with a lance, and pass by before the sand bag coming round, should strike the tilter on the back.

At quintin he,
In honour of his bridegroom,
Hath challeng'd either wide countess;
Come cut and long tail, for there be Six batchelors as bold as he,
Adjoining to his company,
And each one hath his livery.

QUINTUPLE. n. f. [quintuplus, Lat.] Fivefold.
In the country, the greatest proportion of mortality, one hundred and fifty-six, is above quintuple unto twenty-eight the least.

QUIP. n. f. [derived, by the etymologists, from whip.] A sharp jest; a taunt; a sarcasm.

Notwithstanding all her sudden quips,
The least whereof would quell a lover's hope,
Yet, spaniel like, the more she spurns my love,
The more it grows, and fawneth on her still.
If I sent him word his beard was not well cut, he would Send me word, he cut it to please himself: this is called the quip modest.

Nymph bring with thee
Jest and youthful jollity,
Quips, and cranks, and wanton wiles,
Nods, and becks, and wreathed smiles.

QUIP. v. a. To rally with bitter sarcasms.

QUIRE. n. f. [cheur, Fr. chore, Italian.]
1. A body of fingers; a chorus.

The trees did bud and early blossoms bore,
And all the quire of birds did sweetly sing,
And told that garden's pleasures in their caroling.
Myself have lim'd a bush for her,
And plac'd a quire of such enticing birds,
That the will light to listen to their lays.

At thy nativity a glorious quire
Of angels in the fields of Bethlehem sung
To shepherds watching at their folds by night,
And told them the Messiah now was born.

I may worship thee
For ay, with temples vow'd and virgin quires.

As in beauty she surpass'd the quire,
So nobler than the rest was her attire.

2. The part of the church where the service is sang.
I am all on fire,

Not all the buckets in a country quire
Shall quench my rage.
Some run for buckets to the hallow'd quire,
Some cut the pipes, and some the engines play.

The fox obscene to gaping toms retires,
And wolves with howling fill the sacred quires.

3. [Cahier, Fr.] A bundle of paper consisting of twenty-four sheets.

TO QUIRE. v. n. [from the noun.] To sing in concert.

There's not the smallest orb which thou behold'st,
But in his motion like an angel sings,
Still quiring to the young-ey'd cherubims.

My throat of war be turn'd
Which quired with my drum, into a pipe
Small as an eunuch, or the virgin's voice
That babies lull asleep.

QUYRSTER. n. f. [from quire.] Chorister; one who sings in concert, generally in divine service.

The coy quyrsters, that lodge within,
Are prodigal of harmony.

QUIRK. n. f. [of this word I can find no rational derivation.]
1. Quick stroke; sharp fit.

I've felt so many quirks of joy and grief,
That the first face of neither on the start,
Can woman me unto't.

2. Smart taunt.
Some kind of men quarrel purposely on others to taste their valour; belike, this is a man of that quirk.

I may chance to have some odd quirks and remnants of wit broken on me.

QUI

Conceits, puns, quips or quibbles, jests and repartees may agreeably entertain, but have no place in the search after truth.

3. Subtlety; nicety; artful distinction.

Most fortunately he hath achiev'd a maid,
That paragon description and wild fame,
One that excels the quirks of blazoning pens.

Let a lawyer tell them he has spied some defect in an entail; how solicitous are they to repair that error, and leave nothing to the mercy of a law quirk?

Ply her with love letters and billets,
And bait them well for quirks and quilllets.

There are a thousand quirks to avoid the stroke of the law.

4. Loose light tune.
Now the chapel's silver bell you hear,
That summons you to all the pride of pray'r;
Light quirks of musick, broken and uneven.

TO QUIR. v. a. part. quir; pret. I have quirt or quitted.
[quirt, Fr. quitare, Italian; quitar, Spanith.]
1. To discharge an obligation; to make even.

We will be quit of thine oath, which thou hast made us to swear.

By this act, old tyrant,
I shall be quit with thee; while I was virtuous,
I was a stranger to thy blood, but now
Sure thou wilt love me for this horrid crime.

To John I ow'd great obligation;
But John, unhappily, thought fit
To publish it to all the nation;
Sure John and I are more than quit.

2. To set free.
Thou art quit from a thousand calamities; therefore let thy joy, which should be as great for thy freedom from them, as is thy sadness when thou feel'st any of them, do the same cure upon thy discontent.

Henceforth I fly not death, nor would prolong Life much: bent rather how I may be quit
Fairest and easiest of this cumbrous charge.

To quit you wholly of this fear, you have already looked death in the face; what have you found so terrible in it.

3. To carry through; to discharge; to perform.
Never worthy prince a day did quit
With greater hazard, and with more renown.

4. To clear himself of an affair.
Samson hath quit himself
Like Samson, and heroically hath finish'd
A life heroic, on his enemies
Fully reveng'd hath left them years of mourning.

5. To repay; to requite.
He fair the knight saluted, louting low,
Who fair him quitted, as that courteous was.
Enkindle all the sparks of nature,
To quit this horrid act.

6. To vacate obligations.
For our reward,
All our debts are paid; dangers of law,
Actions, decrees, judgments against us quitted.

One step higher
Would set me highest, and in a moment quit
The debt immense of endless gratitude.

7. To pay any obligation; to clear a debt; to be tantamount.
They both did fail of their purpose, and got not so much as to quit their charges; because truth, which is the secret of the most high God, whose proper handy-work all things are, cannot be compassed with that wit and those senses which are our own.

Far other plaints, tears and laments
The time, the place, and our estates require,
Think on thy sins, which man's old foe presents
Before that judge that quits each soul his hire.

Does not the air feed the flame? and does not the flame at the same time warm and enlighten the air? and does not the earth quit scores with all the elements in the noble fruits that issue from it.

Still I shall hear, and never quit the score,
Stunn'd with hoarse Codrus' Theleid o'er and o'er.

Iron works ought to be confined to certain places, where there is no conveyance for timber to places of vent, so as to quit the cost of the carriage.

8. [Contracted from acquit.] To absolve; to acquit.
Nor further seek what their offences be,
Guiltless I quit, guilty I set them free.

9. To abandon; to forsake.
Their father,
Then old and fond of illuse, took such sorrow,
That he quit being.

Honours are promis'd
To all will quit 'em; and rewards propos'd
Even to slaves that can detect their courses.

QUO

Such variety of arguments only distract the understanding, such a superficial way of examining is to quit truth for appearance, only to serve our vanity.

10. To resign; to give up.
The prince, renown'd in bounty as in arms,
With pity saw the ill-conceal'd distress,
Quitted his title to Campaspe's charms,
And gave the fair one to the friend's embrace.

QUITCHGRASS. n. f. [spice, Saxon.] Dog grass.

They are the best corn to grow on grounds subject to quitchgrass or other weeds.

QUITE. adv. [this is derived, by the etymologists, from quitté, discharged, free, Fr. which however at first appearance unlikely is much favoured by the original use of the word, which was, in this combination, quite and clean; that is, with a clean riddance: its present signification was gradually introduced.] Completely; perfectly.

Those latter exclude not the former quite and clean as unnecessary.

He hath sold us, and quite devoured our money.

If some foreign ideas will offer themselves, reject them, and hinder them from running away with our thoughts quite from the subject in hand.

The same actions may be aimed at different ends, and arise from quite contrary principles.

QUITRENT. n. f. [quit and rent.] Small rent reserved.
Such a tax would be insensible, and pass but as a small quittance, which every one would be content to pay towards the guard of the seas.

My old master, a little before his death, wished him joy of the estate which was falling to him, desiring him only to pay the gifts of charity he had left as quittrents upon the estate.

QUITS. interj. [from quit.] An exclamation used when any thing is repaid and the parties become even.

1. Discharge from a debt or obligation; an acquittance.
Now I am rememb'red, he scorn'd at me!

2. Recompence; return; repayment.
Mine eyes saw him in bloody state,
Render'ing faint quittance, wearied and outbreath'd,
To Henry Monmouth.

Plutus, the god of gold,
Is but his steward; no meed but he repays
Sevenfold above itself; no gift to him
But breeds the giver a return exceeding
All use of quittance.

We shall forget the office of our hand,
Sooner than quittance of desert and merit.

TO QUITTANCE. v. a. [from the noun.] To repay; to recompense. A word not used.

Embrace me then this opportunity,
As fitting best to quittance their deceit.

QUITTER. n. f.
1. A deliverer.

2. Scoria of tin.

QUITTERBONE. n. f.
Quitterbone is a hard round swelling upon the coronet, between the heel and the quarter, and grows most commonly on the inside of the foot.

QUIVER. n. f. [this word seems to be corrupted from couverir, Fr. or cover.] A case for arrows.

As Dianne hunted on a day,
She chanc'd to come where Cupid lay,
His quiver by his head,
One of his shafts the stole away,
And one of hers did close convey
Into the other's stead;

With that love wounded my love's heart,
But Dianne beasts with Cupid's dart.
Diana's nymphs would be arrayed in white, their arms and shoulders naked, bows in their hands, and quivers by their sides.

Her sounding quiver on her shoulder ty'd,
One hand a dart, and one a bow supply'd.

QUIVER. adj. Nimble; active.

There was a little quiver fellow, and he would manage you his piece thus; and he would about and about.

TO QUIVER. v. n.
1. To quake; to play with a tremulous motion.

The birds chaunt melody on every bush,
The green leaves quiver with the cooling wind.

O'er the pommel cast the knight,
Forward he flew, and pitching on his head,
He quiver'd with his feet, and lay for dead.

With what a spring his furious soul broke loose,
And left the limbs still quivering on the ground.

Eurydice with quivering voice he mourn'd,
And Heber's banks Eurydice return'd.

Dancing sun beams on the waters play'd,
And verdant alders form'd a quivering shade.

QUO

The dying gales that pant upon the trees,
The lakes that quiver to the curling breeze.

2. To shiver; to shudder.
Zelmane would have put to her helping hand, but she was taken with such a quivering, that she thought it more wisdom to lean herself to a tree and look on.

QUIVERED. adj. [from quiver.]
1. Furnished with a quiver.

'Tis chastity,
She that has that, is clad in compleat steel,
And like a quiver'd nymph with arrows keen,
May trace huge forests and unharbour'd heaths,
Infamous hills, and perilous sandy wilds.

2. Sheathed as in a quiver.
From him whose quills stand quivered at his ear,
To him who notches sticks at Westminster.

TO QUOB. v. n. [a low word.] To move as the embryo does in the womb; to move as the heart does when throbbing.

QUODLIBET. n. f. [Latin.] A nice point; a subtlety.
He who reading on the heart,
When all his quodlibets of art
Could not expound its pulse and heat,
Swore, he had never felt it beat.

QUODLIBETARIAN. n. f. [quodlibet, Lat.] One who talks or disputes on any subject.

QUODLIBETICAL. adj. [quodlibet, Lat.] Not restrained to a particular subject: in the schools theses or problems, anciently proposed to be debated for curiosity or entertainment, were so called.

QUOIF. n. f. [coiffe, Fr.]
1. Any cap with which the head is covered. See COIF.

Hence thou sickly quoif,
Thou art a guard too wanton for the head,
Which princes, flesh'd with conquest, aim to hit.

2. The cap of a serjeant at law.
TO QUOIF. v. a. [coiffer, Fr.] To cap; to dress with a headdress.

She is always quuffed with the head of an elephant, to show that this animal is the breed of that country.

QUOIFFURE. n. f. [coiffure, Fr.] Head-dress.
The lady in the next medal is very particular in her quoiffure.

QUOIL. n. f. See COIL.

QUOIN. n. f. [coin, Fr.]
1. Corner.

A sudden tempest from the desert flew
With horrid wings, and thundered as it blew,
Then whirling round, the quoin together strook.

Build brick houses with strong and firm quoin or columns at each end.

2. An instrument for raising warlike engines.

QUOIR. n. f. [coete, Dutch.]
1. Something thrown to a great distance to a certain point.
He plays at quits well.

When he played at quits, he was allowed his breeches and stockings.

2. The discus of the ancients is sometimes called in English quoit, but improperly; the game of quois is a game of skill; the discus was only a trial of strength, as among us to throw the hammer.

TO QUOIT. v. n. [from the noun.] To throw quois; to play at quois.

Noble youths for mastery should strive
To quoit, to run, and steeds and chariots drive.

TO QUOIT. v. a. To throw.
Quit him down, Bardolph, like a shove-groat filling.

QUONDAM. [Latin.] Having been formerly. A ludicrous word.

This is the quondam king, let's seize upon him.

What lands and lordships for their owner know
My quondam barber, but his worship now.

QUOOK. preterite of quake. Obsolete.
Freely up those royal spoils he took,
Yet at the lion's skin he inly quook.

QUORUM. n. f. [Latin.] A bench of justices; such a number of any officers as is sufficient to do business.

They were a parcel of mummers, and being himself one of the quorum in his own country, he wondered that none of the Middlesex justices took care to lay some of them by the heels.

QUOTA. n. f. [quotus, Lat.] A share; a proportion as assigned to each.

Scarce one in this list but engages to supply a quota of brisk young fellows, equip with hats and feathers.

QUOTATION. n. f. [from quote.]
1. The act of quoting; citation.

2. Passage adduced out of an author as evidence or illustration.
He, that has but ever so little examined the citations of writers, cannot doubt how little credit the quotations deserve, where the originals are wanting.

He rang'd his tropes, and preach'd up patience,
Back'd his opinion with quotations.

TO QUOTE.

QUO

To QUOTE. v. a. [quoter, Fr.] To cite an author or passage of an author; to adduce by way of authority or illustration the words of another.

The second chapter to the Romans is here quoted only to paint the margin.

St. Paul quotes one of their poets for this saying.

He changed his mind, say the papers, and quote for it Melchior Adams and Hopkinson.

He quoted texts right upon our Saviour, though he expounded them wrong.

He will, in the middle of a session, quote passages out of Plato and Pindar.

QUOTER. n. s. [from quote.] Citer; he that quotes.

I proposed this passage entire, to take off the disguise which its quoter put upon it.

QUOTH. verb. imperfect. [this is only part of quodan, Saxon, retained in English, and is now only used in ludicrous language. It is used by Sidney irregularly in the second person.] Quoth I, say I or said I; quoth he, says he or said he.

Enjoying quoth you.

Shall we, quoth he, so basely brook

This paltry ass.

Sidney, b. ii.

Hudibras.

QUO

QUOTIDIAN. adj. [quotidian, Fr. quotidianus, Latin.] Daily; happening every day.

Quotidian things, and equidistant hence

Shut in for man in one circumference.

Nor was this a short fit of shaking, as an ague, but a quotidian fever, always increasing to higher inflammation.

QUOTIDIAN. n. s. [febris quotidiana, Lat.] A quotidian fever; a fever which returns every day.

If I could meet that fancymonger, I would give him some good counsel; for he seems to have the quotidian of love.

QUOTIENT. n. s. [quotient, Fr. quoties, Latin.]

In arithmetick, quotient is the number produced by the division of the two given numbers the one by the other.

To make all the steps belonging to the same pair of stairs of an equal height, they consider the height of the room in feet and inches, and multiply the feet by twelve, whose product, with the number of odd inches, gives the sum of the whole height in inches, which sum they divide by the number of steps they intend to have in that height, and the quotient shall be the number of inches and parts that each step shall be high.

RAB

R, Is called the canine letter, because it is uttered with some resemblance to the growl or snarl of a cur: it has one constant sound in English, such as it has in other languages; as red, rose, more, mutual: in words derived from the Greek, it is never mute, unless the second r may be accounted mute, where two rr are used; as myrrh.

TO RABATE. v. n. [rabatre, Fr.] In falconry, to recover a hawk to the fist again.

TO RABBIT. v. a. [rabatre, rabster, Fr.] To pare down pieces of wood so as to fit one another.

The rabbit plane is to cut part of the upper edge of a board straight or square down, that the edge of another board, cut down in the same manner, may join into the square of the first; and this lapping over of two boards is called rabbiting.

The window frame hath every one of its lights rabbitted on its outside about half an inch into the frame, and all these rabbets, but that on the ground-fell, are grooved square.

RA'BBET. n. s. [from the verb.] A joint made by paring two pieces so that they wrap over one another.

Having drove in the hooks, they set the rabbets of the door within the rabbets of the door-post.

RA'BBET. n. s. A doctor among the Jews.

The Hebrew rabbins say, that nature hath given man, for the pronouncing of all letters, the lips, the teeth, the tongue, the palate and throat.

Be not ye called rabbis; for one is your master, even Christ, and all ye are brethren.

RA'BBET. n. s. [rabbe, rabbelin, Dutch.] A furry animal that lives on plants, and burrows in the ground.

I knew a wench married, as she went to the garden for parsley to stuff a rabbit.

A company of scholars, going to catch conies, carried one with them which had not much wit, and gave in charge, that if he saw any, he should be silent for fear of scaring of them; but he no sooner espied a company of rabbits, but he cried aloud, ecce multi cuniculi; which he had no sooner said, but the conies ran to their burrows; and he being checked by them for it, answered, who would have thought that the rabbits understood Latin?

RA'BBLE. n. s. [rabula, Lat. rabulari, low Lat.] A tumultuous crowd; an assembly of low people.

Countrymen, will ye relent, and yield to mercy, Or let a rabble lead you to your deaths?

Go bring the rabble here to this place.

Of these his several ravishments, betrayings, and stealing away of men's wives, came in all those ancient fables, and all that rabble of Grecian forgeries.

The better sort abhors scurrility, And often censures what the rabble like.

That profane, atheistical, epicurean rabble, whom the whole nation so rings of, are not the wisest men in the world.

To gratify the barbarous audience, I gave them a short rabble scene, because the mob are represented by Plutarch and Polybius with the same character of baseness and cowardice.

In change of government, The rabble rule their great oppressors fate.

Do for'reign justice and revenge the state.

His enemies have been only able to make ill impressions upon the low and ignorant rabble, and to put the dregs of the people in a ferment.

RA'BBLEMENT. n. s. [from rabble.] Crowd; tumultuous assembly of mean people.

A rude rabblement, Whole like he never saw, he durst not hide,

But got his ready steed, and fast away 'gan ride.

Fa. 2u.

RAC

The rabblement houted, clapp'd their chopt hands, and uttered a deal of stinking breath.

There will be always tyrants, murderers, thieves, traitors, and other of the same rabblement.

RA'BID. adj. [rabidus, Lat.] Fierce; furious; mad.

RA'BINET. n. s. A kind of smaller ordnance.

RACE. n. s. [race, Fr. from radice, Lat.]

1. A family ascending.

2. Family descending.

He in a moment will create Another world; out of man, a race

Of men innumerable, there to dwell.

Male he created thee, but thy comfort Female for race.

High as the mother of the gods in place, And proud like her of an immortal race.

Hence the long race of Alban fathers come.

3. A generation; a collective family.

A race of youthful and unhandled colts, Fetching mad bounds.

4. A particular breed.

Instead Of spirits malign, a better race to bring

Into their vacant room.

In the races of mankind and families of the world, there remains not to one above another the least pretence to have the right of inheritance.

5. RACE of ginger. [rayz de gengibre, Spanish.] A root or sprig of ginger.

6. A particular strength or taste of wine, applied by Temple to any extraordinary natural force of intellect.

Of gardens there may be forms wholly irregular, that may have more beauty than of others; but they must owe it to some extraordinary dispositions of nature in the seat, or some great race of fancy or judgment in contrivance.

7. [Rai, Islandick.] Contest in running.

To describe races and games Or tilting furniture.

8. Course on the feet.

The flight of many birds is swifter than the race of any beasts.

9. Progress; course.

It suddenly fell from an excess of favour, which many examples having taught them, never slopt his race till it came to a headlong overthrow.

My race of glory run, and race of shame.

Their ministry perform'd, and race well run.

The great light of day yet wants to run Much of his race though steep.

He safe return'd, the race of glory past, New to his friends embrace.

10. Train; process.

An offensive war is made, which is unjust in the aggressor; the prosecution and race of the war carrieth the defendant to invade the ancient patrimony of the first aggressor, who is now turned defendant; shall he sit down, and not put himself in defence?

The race of this war fell upon the loss of Urbin, which he re-obtained.

RA'CEHORSE. n. s. [race and horse.] Horse bred to run for prizes.

The reason Hudibras gives, why those, who can talk on trifles, speak with the greatest fluency, is, that the tongue is like a racehorse, which runs the faster the less weight it carries.

RACEMA'TION. n. s. [racemus, Lat.] Cluster, like that of grapes.

A cock will in one day fertilitate the whole racemation or cluster of eggs, which are not excluded in many weeks.

RACEMI'FEROUS. adj. [racemus and fero, Latin.] Bearing clusters.

RA'CE.

RAC

- RA' CER. n. f. [from race.] Runner; one that contends in speed.
His stumbling founder'd jade can trot as high
As any other pegasus can fly;
So the dull eel moves nimbler in the mud,
Than all the swift-finn'd racers of the flood. Dorset.
A poet's form the plac'd before their eyes,
And bade the nimblest racer seize the prize. Pope.
- RA' CINESS. n. f. [from racy.] The quality of being racy.
RACK. n. f. [racke, Dutch, from racken, to stretch.]
1. An engine to torture.
Vex not his ghost; O let him pass! he hates him
That would, upon the rack of this rough world, Stretch him out longer. Shakespeare. King Lear.
Did ever any man upon the rack afflict himself, because he had received a cross answer from his mistress. Taylor.
Let them feel the whip, the sword, the fire,
And in the tortures of the rack expire. Addison.
2. Torture; extreme pain.
A fit of the stone puts a king to the rack, and makes him as miserable as it does the meanest subject. Temple.
A cool behaviour sets him on the rack, and is interpreted as an instance of aversion or indifference. Addison.
3. Any instrument by which extension is performed.
These bows, being somewhat like the long bows in use amongst us, were bent only by a man's immediate strength, without the help of any wedge or rack that are used to others. Wilkins's Mathematical Magick.
4. A distaff; commonly a portable distaff, from which they spin by twirling a ball.
The sisters turn the wheel,
Empty the woolly rack, and fill the reel. Dryden.
5. [Racke, Dutch, a rack.] The clouds as they are driven by the wind.
That, which is now a horse, even with a thought
The rack dissolves, and makes it indistinct
As water is in water. Shakespeare. Antony and Cleopatra.
The great globe itself,
Yea, all, which it inherits, shall dissolve;
And, like this insubstantial pageant, faded,
Leave not a rack behind. Shakespeare. Tempest.
We often see against some form,
A silence in the heav'n's, the rack stand still,
The bold winds speechless, and the orb below
As hush as death. Shakespeare. Hamlet.
The winds in the upper region, which move the clouds above, which we call the rack, and are not perceived below, pass without noise. Bacon's Natural History.
As wintry winds contending in the sky,
With equal force of lungs their titles try;
They rage, they roar: the doubtful rack of heav'n Stands without motion, and the tide undriv'n. Dryden.
6. [Racca, the occiput, Saxon; racca, Islandick, hinges or joints.] A neck of mutton cut for the table.
7. A grate.
8. A wooden grate in which hay is placed for cattle.
Their bulls they send to pastures far,
Or hills, or feed them at full racks within. May's Virgil.
The best way to feed cattle with it, is to put it in racks, because of the great quantity they tread down. Mortimer.
He bid the nimble hours
Bring forth the steeds; the nimble hours obey:
From their full racks the generous steeds retire. Addison.
9. Arrack; a spirituous liquor. See ARRACK.
To RACK. v. n. [from the noun.] To stream as clouds before
the wind.
Three glorious suns, each one a perfect sun,
Not separated with the racking clouds,
But sever'd in a pale clear-shining sky. Shakespeare.
To RACK. v. a. [from the noun.]
1. To torment by the rack.
Hold, O dreadful Sir,
You will not rack an innocent old man. Dryden and Lee.
2. To torment; to harass.
Th' apostate angel, though in pain,
Vaunting aloud, but rack'd with deep despair. Milton.
3. To harass by exaction.
The landlords there shamefully rack their tenants, exacting of them, besides his covenants, what he pleaseth. Spenser.
The commons ha't thou rack'd; the clergy's bags
Are lank and lean with thy extortions. Shakespeare.
He took possession of his just estate,
Nor rack'd his tenants with increase of rent. Dryden.
4. They racking and stretching scripture further than by God was meant, are drawn into sundry inconveniences. Hooker.
The wisest among the heathens rack'd their wits, and cast about every way, managing every little argument to the utmost advantage. Tillotson's Sermons.
5. To stretch; to extend.
Nor have I money nor commodity
To raise a present sum;
Try what my credit can in Venice do,
That shall be rack'd even to the uttermost. Shakespeare.

RAD

6. To defecate; to draw off from the lees. I know not whence this word is derived in this sense; rein, German, is clear, pure, whence our word to rinse; this is perhaps of the same race.
It is common to draw wine or beer from the lees, which we call racking, whereby it will clarify much the sooner. Bacon.
Some roll their cask about the cellar to mix it with the lees, and, after a few days refetlement, rack it off. Mortimer.
RACK-RENT. n. f. [rack and rent.] Rent raised to the utter-most.
Have poor families been ruined by rack-rents, paid for the lands of the church? Swift's Miscellanies.
RACK-RENT. n. f. [rack and rent.] One who pays the utmost rent.
Though this be a quarter of his yearly income, and the publick tax takes away one hundred; yet this influences not the yearly rent of the land, which the rack-renter or under-tenant pays. Locke.
RACK-RENT. n. f. [of uncertain derivation; M. Casaubon derives it, after his custom, from gaxia, the dash of fluctuation against the shore.]
1. An irregular clattering noise.
That the tennis court keeper knows better than I, it is a low ebb of linen with thee, when thou keep'st not racket there. Shakespeare. Henry IV. p. ii.
2. A confused talk, in burlesque language.
Ambition hath removed her lodging, and lives the next door to faction, where they keep such a racket, that the whole parish is disturbed and every night in an uproar. Swift.
3. [Raquette, Fr.] The instrument with which players strike the ball. Whence perhaps all the other senses.
When we have match'd our rackets to these balls,
We will in France play a set,
Shall strike his father's crown into the hazard. Shakespeare.
The body, into which impression is made, either can yield backward or it cannot: if it can yield backward, then the impression made is a motion; as we see a stroke with a racket upon a ball, makes it fly from it. Digby on the Soul.
He talks much of the motives to do and forbear, how they determine a reasonable man, as if he were no more than a tennis-ball, to be tossed to and fro by the rackets of the second causes. Bramhall against Hobbs.
- RA' CKING. n. f.
Racking pace of a horse is the same as an amble, only that it is a swifter time and a shorter tread; and though it does not rid so much ground, yet it is something easier. Far. Dict.
- RA' CKOON. n. f.
The racker is a New England animal, like a badger, having a tail like a fox, being clothed with a thick and deep fur: it sleeps in the day time in a hollow tree, and goes out at nights, when the moon shines, to feed on the sea fide, where it is hunted by dogs. Bailey.
- RA' CY. adj. [perhaps from rayz, Spanish, a root.] Strong;
flavorous; tasting of the soil.
Rich racy verbes in which we
The soil, from which they come, taste, smell, and see. Cowley.
From his brain that Helicon distill,
Whose racy liquor did his offspring fill. Denham.
The cyder at first is very luscious, but if ground more early, it is more racy. Mortimer's Husbandry.
The hospitable sage, in sign
Of social welcome, mix'd the racy wine,
Late from the mellowing cask restor'd to light,
By ten long years refin'd, and rosy bright. Pope.
RAD. the old pret. of read. Spenser.
- RAD. red and rad, differing only in dialect, signify counsel; as Conrad, powerful or skilful in counsel; Ethelred, a noble counsellor; Rodbert, eminent for counsel: Eubulus and Thrasylbulus have almost the same sense. Giffen.
- RA' DDock, or ruddock. n. f. A bird.
The raddock would,
With charitable bill, bring thee all this. Shakespeare.
- RA' DIANCE. n. f. [radiare, Lat.] Sparkling lustre; glitter.
By the sacred radiance of the sun,
By all the operations of the orbs,
Here I disclaim all my paternal care. Shakespeare. K. Lear.
Whether there be not too high an apprehension above its natural radiance, is not without just doubt; however it be granted a very splendid gum, and whose sparkles may somewhat resemble the glances of fire. Brown's Vulgar Errors.
The son
Girt with omnipotence, with radiance crown'd
Of majesty divine.
A glory surpassing the sun in its greatest radiance, which,
though we cannot describe, will bear some resemblance.
The rapid radiance instantaneous strikes
Th' illumin'd mountain. Thomson's Spring.

RAD

- RA' DIANT. adj. [radians, Lat.] Shining; brightly sparkling; emitting rays.
There was a fun of gold radiant upon the top, and before,
a small cherub of gold with wings displayed. Bacon.
Mark what radiant state the spreads,
In circle round her shining throne,
Shooting her beams like silver threads,
This, this is the alone. Milton's Arcades.
Virtue could see to do what virtue would
By her own radiant light, though fun and moon
Were in the flat sea funk. Milton.
I see the warlike host of heaven,
Radiant in glittering arms and beamy pride, Go forth to succour truth below. Milton.
- To RA' DIATE. v. n. [radiat, Lat.] To emit rays; to shine;
to sparkle.
Though with wit and parts their possessors could never engage God to send forth his light and his truth; yet now that revelation hath disclosed them, and that he hath been pleas'd to make them radiate in his word, men may recollect those scatter'd divine beams, and kindling with them the topics proper to warm our affections, enflame holy zeal. Boyle.
Light radiates from luminous bodies directly to our eyes, and thus we see the sun or a flame; or it is reflected from other bodies, and thus we see a man or a picture. Locke.
- RA' DIATED. adj. [radiatus, Lat.] Adorned with rays.
The radiated head of the phoenix gives us the meaning of a passage in Aulonius. Addison.
- RADIATION. n. f. [radiatio, Lat. radiation, Fr.]
1. Beamy lustre; emission of rays.
We have perspective houses, where we make demonstrations of all lights and radiations, and of all colours. Bacon.
Should I say I liv'd darker than were true,
Your radiation can all clouds subdue,
But one; 'tis best light to contemplate you. Donne.
2. Emission from a center every way.
Sound paralleleth in many things with the light, and radiation of things visible. Bacon's Natural History.
- RA' DICAL. adj. [radical, Fr. from radix, Latin.]
1. Primitive; original.
The differences, which are secondary and proceed from these radical differences, are, plants are all figurate and de-terminate, which inanimate bodies are not. Bacon.
Such a radical truth, that God is, springing up together with the essence of the soul, and previous to all other thoughts, is not pretended to by religion. Bentley.
2. Implanted by nature.
The emission of the loose and adventitious moisture doth betray the radical moisture, and carrieth it for company. Bac.
If the radical moisture of gold were separated, it might be contrived to burn without being consumed. Wilkins.
The sun beams render the humours hot, and dry up the radical moisture. Arbutnot.
3. Serving to origination.
RADICALITY. n. f. [from radical.] Origination.
There may be equivocal seeds and hermaphroditical principles, that contain the radicality and power of different forms; thus, in the seeds of wheat, there lieth obscurely the feminality of dandel. Brown's Vulgar Errors.
RADICALLY. adv. [from radical.] Originally; primitively.
It is no easy matter to determine the point of death in insects, who have not their vitalities radically confined unto one part. Brown's Vulgar Errors.
These great orbs thus radically bright,
Primitive founts, and origins of light Enliven worlds deny'd to human sight. Prior.
- RA' DICALNESS. n. f. [from radical.] The state of being radical.
To RA' DICATE. v. a. [radicatus, from radix, Lat.] To root; to plant deeply and firmly.
Meditation will radicate these seeds, fix the transient gleam of light and warmth, confirm resolutions of good, and give them a durable confidence in the soul. Hammond.
Nor have we let fall our pen upon discouragement of unbelief, from radicated beliefs, and points of high prescription. Brown's Vulgar Errors.
If the object stays not on the sense, it makes not impression enough to be remembered; but if it be repeated there, it leaves plenty enough of those images behind it, to strengthen the knowledge of the object: in which radicated knowledge, if the memory consist, there would be no need of referring those atoms in the brain. Glanvill's Defence.
- RADICATION. n. f. [radication, Fr. from radicate.] The act of fixing deep.
They that were to plant a church, were to deal with men of various inclinations, and of different habits of sin, and degrees of radiation of those habits; and to each of these some proper application was to be made to cure their souls.
Hammond's Fundamentals.
- RA' DICULE. n. f. [radicule, Fr. from radix, Lat.] Radicule is that part of the seed of a plant, which, upon its vegetation, becomes its root. Quincy.

RAG

- RA' DISH. n. f. [radic, Sax. radis, raifort, Fr. raphanus, Lat.]
A root.
The flower of the radish consists of four leaves, which are placed in the form of a cross; out of the flower-cup rises the pointal, which afterward turns to a pod in form of an horn, that is thick, spongy, and furnished with a double row of roundish seeds, which are separated by a thin membrane:
there are five species; of that which is commonly cultivated in the kitchen-gardens for its root, there are several varieties; as the small topped, the deep-red, and the long topped stripped radish. Müller.
- RA' DIUS. n. f. [Latin.]
1. The semi-diameter of a circle.
2. A bone of the fore-arm, which accompanies the ulna from the elbow to the wrist.
To RAFF. v. a. To sweep; to huddle; to take hastily without distinction.
Their causes and effects I thus raff up together. Carew.
To RA' FLE. v. n. [raffler, to snatch, Fr.] To cast dice for a prize, for which every one lays down a stake.
Letters from Hampstead give me an account, there is a late institution there, under the name of a raffing shop. Taylor.
- RA' FLE. n. f. [raffle, Fr. from the verb.] A species of game or lottery, in which many stake a small part of the value of some single thing, in consideration of a chance to gain it.
The toy, brought to Rome in the third triumph of Pompey, being a pair of tables for gaming, made of two precious stones, three foot broad, and four foot long, would have made a fine raffle. Arbutnot on Coins.
- RAFT. n. f. [probably from rat, Latin.] A frame or float made by laying pieces of timber cross each other.
Where is that son
That floated with thee on the fatal raft. Shakespeare.
Fell the timber of yon lofty grove,
And form a raft, and build the rising ship. Pope.
- RAFT. part. pass. of raff or raff. Spenser. Torn; rent.
RA' FTER. n. f. [rafter, Sax. rafter, Dutch; corrupted, says Junius, from roof tree.] The secondary timbers of the house; the timbers which are let into the great beam.
The rafters of my body, bone,
Being fill with you, the muscle, finew and vein;
Which tile this house, will come again. Donne.
Shepherd,
I trust thy honest offer'd courtesy,
Which oft is sooner found in lowly sheds
With smoky rafters, than in tap'stry halls. Milton.
On them the Trojans cast Stones, rafters, pillars, beams. Denham.
From the East, a Belgian wind
His hostile breath through the dry rafters sent;
The flames impell'd. Dryden.
The roof began to mount aloft,
Aloft rose every beam and rafter,
The heavy wall climb'd slowly after. Swift's Miscel.
- RA' FTERED. adj. [from rafter.] Built with rafters.
No raft' red roofs with dance and tabor found,
No noon-tide bell invites the country round. Pope.
- RAG. n. f. [Ryaccobe, torn, Saxon; gax, Fr.]
1. A piece of cloth torn from the rest; a tatter.
Cows, hoods and habits, with their wearers tost,
And flutter'd into rags. Milton.
Rags are a great improvement of chalky lands. Mortimer.
2. Any thing rent and tattered; worn out cloaths.
Fathers that wear rags,
Do make their children blind;
But fathers that bear bags,
Shall see their children kind. Shakespeare. King Lear.
Worn like a cloth;
Gnawn into rags by the devouring moth.
Content with poverty, my soul I arm;
And virtue, though in rags, will keep me warm. Dryden.
3. A fragment of drels.
He had first matter seen undrest;
He took her naked all alone.
Before one rag of form was on. Hudibras, p. i.
- RAGAMUFFIN. n. f. [from rag and I know not what else.]
I have led my ragamuffins where they were pepper'd; there's not three of my hundred and fifty left alive; and they are for the town's end to beg during life. Shakespeare. Henry IV.
Shall we brook that paltry ass
And feeble scoundrel, Hudibras,
With that more paltry ragamuffin,
Ralpho, vapouring and huffing.
Attended with a crew of ragamuffins, he broke into his house, turned all things topsy-turvy, and then set it on fire. Swift.
- RAGE. n. f. [rage, Fr.]
1. Violent anger; vehement fury.
This tiger-footed rage, when it shall find
The harm of unkind'd swiftness, will, too late,
Tie leaden pounds to's heels. Shakespeare. Coriolanus.

RAI

Desire not To allay my rages and revenges with Your colder reason. Shakefp.
Argument more heroic than the rage
Of Turnus for Lavinia disposs'd. Milton.
3. Vehemence or exacerbation of any thing painful.
The party hurt who hath been in great rage of pain, till the weapon was re-anointed. Bacon's Natural History.
Torment and loud lament and furious rage. Milton.
The rage of thirst and hunger now suppress'd. Pope.
To RAGE. v. n. [from the noun.]
1. To be in fury; to be heated with excessive anger.
Wine is a mocker, strong drink is raging; and whosoever is deceived thereby, is not wise. Prov. xx. 1.
Why do the heathen rage.
At this he only rag'd, and as they talk'd, Smote him into the midriff. Milton.
2. To rage; to exercise fury.
Heart-rending news,
That death should license have to rage among The fair, the wife, the virtuous. Waller.
3. To act with mischievous impetuosity.
The chariots shall rage in the streets, they shall jostle one against another, seem like torches, and run like the light-enings. Nab. ii. 4.
The madding wheels of brazen chariots rag'd. Milton.
After these waters had rag'd on the earth, they began to lessen and shrink, and the great fluctuations of this deep being quieted by degrees, the waters retired. Burnet.
RAGEFUL. adj. [rage and full.] Furious; violent.
This courtesy was worse than a baltinado to Zelmane; so that again with rageful eyes she had him defend himself; for no less than his life would answer it. Sidney, b. ii.
A popular orator may represent vices in so formidable appearances, and set out each virtue in so amiable a form, that the covetous person shall scatter most liberally his beloved idol, wealth, and the rageful person shall find a calm. Hamm.
RAGED. adj. [from rag.]
1. Rent into tatters.
How like a prodigal,
The scarfed bark puts from her native bay,
Hugg'd and embraced by the trumpet wind;
How like the prodigal doth she return
With over-weather'd ribs and ragged sails, Lean, rent, and beggar'd by the trumpet wind. Shakefp.
As I go in this ragged tattered coat, I am hunted away from the old woman's door by every barking cur. Arbutnot.
2. Uneven; consisting of parts almost dissimilar.
The earl of Warwick's ragged staff is yet to be seen pour-trayed in their church steeple. Carew's Survey of Cornwall.

The wolf would barter away a ragged coat and a raw-boned carcase, for a smooth fat one. L'Estrange.
What shepherd owns those ragged sheep? Dryden.
RAGGEDNESS. n. f. [from ragged.] State of being dressed in tatters.
Poor naked wretches, whoso'er you are,
That bide the pelting of this pitiless storm!
How shall your houseless heads and unfed sides,
Your loop'd and window'd raggedness defend you. Shakefp.
RAGINGLY. adv. [from raging.] With vehement fury.
RAGMAN. n. f. [rag and man.] One who deals in rags.
RAGOUT. n. f. [French.] Meat stewed and highly seasoned.
To the stage permit
Ragouts for Tereus or Thyestes dress,
'Tis talk enough for thee to expose a Roman feast. Dryden.
No fish they reckon comparable to a ragout of snails. Add.
When art and nature join, th' effect will be Some nice ragout, or charming fricafly. King's Cookery.
RAGWORT. n. f. [rag and wort.] A plant.
Ragwort hath a radiated flower, the tube of which is almost of a cylindrical figure, and the seeds are fastened to a down; the leaves are deeply lacinated or jagged. Miller.

RAI

the cross beam, by which they are connected: a rail is a series of cross beams supported with posts, which do not rise much above it.
A man, upon a high place without rails, is ready to fall. Bacon's Natural History.
A large square table for the commissioners, one side being sufficient for those of either party, and a rail for others which went round. Clarendon.
3. A kind of bird.
Of wild birds Cornwall hath quail, rail, partridge and pheasant. Carew's Survey of Cornwall.
4. [razle, Saxon.] A woman's upper garment. This is preserved only in the word night-rail.
To RAIL. v. a. [from the noun.]
1. To inclose with rails.
The hand is square, with four rounds at the corners; this should first have been planched over, and railed about with ballisters. Carew's Survey of Cornwall.
As the churchyard ought to be divided from other profane places, so it ought to be fenced in and railed.
Sir Roger has given a handsome pulpit-cloth, and railed in the communion-table. Addison's Spectator, N° 112.
2. To range in a line.
They were brought to London all railed in ropes, like a team of horses in a cart, and were executed some of them at London and Wapping, and the rest at divers places upon the sea coast. Bacon's Henry VII.
To RAIL. v. n. [railler, Fr. rallen, Dutch.] To use insolent and reproachful language; to speak to, or to mention in opprobrious terms.
Your husband is in his old limes again; he so rails against all married mankind, curses all Eve's daughters. Shakefp.
What a monstrous fellow art thou? thus to rail on one, that is neither known of thee, nor knows thee. Shakefp.
'Till thou can't rail the seals from off my bond,
Thou but offend'st thy lungs to speak so loud. Shakefp.
He tript me behind; being down, insulted, rail'd,
And put upon him such a deal of man,
That worthied him. Shakefp. King Lear.
Of words cometh railings and evil surmises. 1 Tim. vi.
Angels bring not railing accusation against them. 2 Pet. ii.
If any is angry, and rails at it, he may securely. Locke.
Thou art my blood, where Johnlon has no part;
Where did his wit on learning fix a brand,
And rail at arts he did not understand? Dryden.
Lest he for ever on me rails,
To talk of me he never fails. Swift.
RAILER. n. f. [from rail.] One who insults or defames by opprobrious language.
If I build my felicity upon my reputation, I am as happy as long as the railer will give me leave. South's Sermons.
Let no presuming impious railer tax Creative wisdom. Thomson's Summer.
RAILLERY. n. f. [raillerie, Fr.] Slight satire; satirical merriment.
Let railery be without malice or heat. Benj. Johnson.
A quotation out of Hudibras shall make them treat with levity an obligation wherein their welfare is concerned as to this world and the next: railery of this nature is enough to make the hearer tremble. Addison's Freeholder, N° 6.
Studies employed on low objects; the very naming of them is almost sufficient to turn them into railery.
To these we are solicited by the arguments of the subtle,
and the raileries of the prophane. Rogers's Sermons.
RAIMENT. n. f. [for arraiment, from array.] Vesture; vestment; cloaths; dress; garment. A word now little used but in poetry.
His raiments, though mean, received handfomeness by the grace of the wearer. Sidney.
O Protheus, let this habit make thee blush!
Be thou asham'd, that I have took upon me
Such an immodest raiment. Shakefp.
Living, both food and raiment she supplies. Dryden.
To RAIN. v. n. [reman, Saxon; regeren, Dutch.]
1. To fall in drops from the clouds.
Like a low-hung cloud, it rains so fast,
That all at once it falls. Dryden's Knight's Tale.
The wind is South-West, and the weather lowering, and like to rain. Locke.
2. To fall as rain.
The eye marvelleth at the whiteness thereof, and the heart is astonish'd at the raining of it. Ecclesi. xliii. 18.
They sat them down to weep; nor only tears
Rain'd at their eyes, but high winds rose within. Milton.
3. It RAINS. The water falls from the clouds.
That which serves for gain,
And follows but for form,
Will pack when it begins to rain,
And leave thee in the storm. Shakefp. King Lear.
To RAIN. v. a. To pour down as rain.
It rain'd down fortune, show'ring on your head. Shak. Rain

RAI

Rain sacrificial whips rings in his ear,
Make sacred even his stirrup. Shakefp. Timon of Athens.
Israel here had famish'd, had not God
Rain'd from heav'n manna. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. ii.
RAIN. n. f. [nen, Saxon.] The moisture that falls from the clouds.
When shall we three meet again;
In thunder, lightning, or in rain. Shakefp.
With strange rains, hails, and showers were they per-cuted. Wisdom xvi. 16.
The loft clouds pour
Into the sea an useless show'r,
And the vex'd sailors curse the rain,
For which poor farmers pray'd in vain. Waller.
Rain is water by the heat of the sun divided into very small parts ascending in the air, till encountering the cold, it becomes condensed into clouds, and descends in drops. Ray.
RAINBOW. n. f. [rain and bow.] The iris; the femicircle of various colours which appears in showery weather.
Casting of the water in a most cunning manner, makes a perfect rainbow, not more pleasant to the eye than to the mind, so sensibly to see the proof of the heavenly iris. Sidney.
To add another hue unto the rainbow. Shakefp.
The rainbow is drawn like a nymph with large wings dispread in the form of a femicircle, the feathers of fundry colours. Peach.
They could not be ignorant of the promise of God never to drown the world, and the rainbow before their eyes to put them in mind of it. Brown's Vulgar Errors.
This rainbow never appears but where it rains in the sunshine, and may be made artificially by spouting up water, which may break aloft, and scatter into drops, and fall down like rain; for the sun, shining upon these drops, certainly causes the bow to appear to a spectator standing in a true position to the rain and sun: this bow is made by refraction of the sun's light in drops of falling rain. Newton's Opticks.
The dome's high arch reflects the mingled blaze,
And forms a rainbow of alternate rays. Pope.
RAINDEER. [pjanar, Saxon; rangifer, Latin.] A deer with large horns, which, in the northern regions, draws sledges through the snow.
RAININESS. n. f. [from rainy.] The state of being showery.
RAIN-WATER. n. f. [rain and water.] Water not taken from springs, but falling from the clouds.
Court holy water in a dry house, is better than the rainwater out of doors. Shakefp. King Lear.
We took distilled rain-water. Boyle.
Rain-water is to be preferred before spring-water. Mort.
RAINY. adj. [from rain.] Showery; wet.
Our gayness and our guilt are all besmirch'd,
With rainy marching in the painful field. Shakefp. Hen. V.
A continual dropping in a very rainy day, and a contentious woman are alike. Prov. xxvii. 15.
To RAISE. v. a. [rysa, Swedish; reiser, Danish.]
1. To lift; to heave.
The elders went to raise him up from the earth. 2 Sam. xii.
Such a bulk as no twelve bars could raise Twelve staving bars. Pope.
2. To set upright: as, he raised a mast.
3. To erect; to build up.
Take his carcase down from the tree, cast it at the entering of the gate, and raise thereon a heap of stones. Jof. viii.
4. To exalt to a state more great or illustrious.
Counsellors may manage affairs, which nevertheless are far from the ability to raise and amplify an estate. Bacon.
Thou so pleas'd,
Can't raise thy creature to what height thou wilt Of union. Milton.
5. To amplify; to enlarge.
That eyeless head of thine was first fram'd flesh,
To raise my fortunes. Shakefp. King Lear.
6. To increase in current value.
The plate-pieces of eight were raised three-pence in the piece. Temple's Miscellane.
7. To elevate; to exalt.
The Peritians gazing on the sun,
Admir'd how high 'twas plac'd, how bright it shone;
But as his pow'r was known, their thoughts were rais'd,
And soon they worship'd, what at first they prais'd. Prior.
8. To advance; to promote; to prefer.
This gentleman came to be raised to great titles. Clarend.
9. To excite; to put in action.
He raiseth the stormy wind. Psalms cvii. 28.

sacrifices, were raised. Sandys's Journey.
These are spectres, the understanding raises to itself, to flatter its own laziness. Locke.
15. To bring from death to life.
He was delivered for our offences, and raised again for our justification. Romans iv. 25.
It is fown in dishonour, it is raised in glory; it is fown in weakness, it is raised in power. 1 Cor. xv. 23.
16. To occasion; to begin.
Raise not a false report. Exodus xxiii. 1.
The common ferryman of Egypt, that wafted over the dead bodies from Memphis, was made by the Greeks to be the ferryman of hell, and solemn stories raised after him. Bra.
Wantonness and pride
Raise out of friendship hostile deeds in peace. Milton.
17. To set up; to utter loudly.
All gaze, and all admire, and raise a shouting sound. Dry.
Soon as the prince appears, they raise a cry. Dryden.
18. To collect; to obtain a certain sum.
Britain, once despis'd, can raise
As ample fums, as Rome in Cæsar's days. Arbutnot.
I should not thus be bound,
If I had means, and could but raise five pound. Gay.
19. To collect; to assemble; to levy.
He out of smallest things could without end
Have rais'd incessant armies. Milton.
20. To give rise to.
Higher argument
Remains, sufficient of itself to raise
That name, unless years damp my wing. Milton.
21. To RAISE PASTE. To form paste into pies without a dish.
Miss Liddy can dance a jig, and raise paste. Spectator.
RAISER. n. f. [from raise.] He that raises.
Then shall stand up in his estate a raiser of taxes. Dan. xi.
They that are the first raisers of their houses, are most indulgent towards their children. Bacon.
He that boasts of his ancestors, the founders and raisers of a family, doth confess that he hath less virtue. Taylor.
Raiser of human kind! by nature cast,
Naked and helpless. Thomson's Autumn.
RAISIN. n. f. [racemus, Lat. raisin, Fr.]
Raisins are the fruit of the vine suffered to remain on the tree till perfectly ripened, and then dried either by the sun or the heat of an oven: grapes of every kind, preserved in this manner, are called raisins, but those dried in the sun are much sweeter and pleasanter than those dried in ovens; they are called jar raisins, from their being imported in earthen jars: the finest are the fruit of the vitis Damascena. Hill's Materia Med.
Dried grapes or raisins, boiled in a convenient proportion of water, make a sweet liquor, which, being betimes distilled, afford an oil and spirit much like the raisins themselves. Boyle.
RAKE. n. f. [rastrum, Lat. pace, Sax. racche, Dutch.]
1. An instrument with teeth, by which the ground is divided, or light bodies are gathered up.
At Midsummer down with the brembles and brakes,
And after abroad with thy forks and thy rakes. Tusser.
O that thy bounteous deity would please
To guide my rake upon the chinking found
Of some vast treasure hidden under ground. Dryden.
He examines his face in the stream, combs his rufal locks with a rake. Garth.
2. [Racaille, Fr. the low rabble; or rakel, Dutch, a worthless cur dog.] A loose, disorderly, vicious, wild, gay, thoughtless fellow; a man addicted to pleasure.
The next came with her son, who was the greatest rake in the place, but so much the mother's darling, that she left her husband for the sake of this graceless youth. Addison.
Raker hate fober grave gentlewomen.
Men, some to bus'ness, some to pleasure take;
But ev'ry woman is at heart a rake. Pope.
The mother begg'd the blessing of a rake.
To RAKE. v. a. [from the noun.]
1. To gather with a rake.
Mow barlie, and rake it, and set it on cocks. Tusser.
Harrows iron teeth shall every where

If it be such a precious jewel as the world takes it for, yet they are forced to rake it out of dunghills; and accordingly the apothecary gives it a value suitable to its extract. South.

2. To clear with a rake.
As they rake the green appearing ground,
The russet hay-cock rises. Thomson.

3. To draw together by violence.
An eager desire to rake together whatsoever might prejudice or any way hinder the credit of apocryphal books, hath caused the collector's pen so to run as it were on wheels, that the mind, which should guide it, had no leisure to think. Hooker, b. v. f. 20.

What piles of wealth hath he accumulated!
How, i' th' name of thrift,
Does he rake this together. Shakespeare, Henry VIII.

A sport more formidable
Had rak'd together village rabble. Hudibras, p. i.
Ill-gotten goods are squandered away with as little conscience as they were raked together. L'Estrange.

The statesman rakes the town to find a plot. Swift.

5. To heap together and cover.
Here i' th' sands
Ther I'll rake up, the post unanctified
Of murth'ous lechers. Shakespeare, King Lear.

The blazing wood may to the eye seem great,
But 'tis the fire rak'd up that has the heat,
And keeps it long. Suckling.

TO RAKE. v. n.
1. To search; to grope. It has always an idea of coarseness or noisomeness.
If you hide the crown
Ev'n in your hearts, there will he rake for it. Shakespeare, South.

It is as offensive, as to rake into a dunghill.
Another finds the way to dye in grain;
Or for the golden ore in rivers rakes,
Then melts the mafs. Dryden's Persius.

One is for raking in Chaucer for antiquated words, which are never to be reviv'd, but when found or significance is wanting. Dryden.

After having made essays into it, as they do for coal in England, they rake into the most promising parts. Addison.

2. To pass with violence.
When Pas hand reached him to take,
The fox on knees and elbows tumbled down:
Pas could not stay, but over him did rake,
And crown'd the earth with his first touching crown. Sidon.

The Belgians tack upon our rear,
And raking chafe-guns through our sterns they fend. Dryden.

RA'KEHEL. n. f. [from rake.] One that rakes.
RA'KEHEL. n. f. [of this word the etymology is doubtful: as it is now written, it is apparently derived from rake and hell, and may aptly represent a wretch whose life is passed in places of lewdness and wickedness: Skinner derives it from racaille, French, the rabble; Junius, from rekel, Dutch, a mongrel dog.] A wild, worthless, dissolute, debauched, sorry fellow.
Out of the fric of these rakehell horse-boys, growing up in knavery and villainy, are their kern supplied. Spenser.

The king, when he heard of Perkins's siege of Exeter, laid in sport, that the king of rakebells was landed in the West, and that he hoped now to see him. Bacon.

A rakehell of the town, whose character is set off with excessive prodigality, prophaneness, intemperance and lust, is rewarded with a lady of great fortune to repair his own, which his vices had almost ruined. Swift.

RA'KEHELLY. adv. [from rakehell.] Wild; dissolute.
I scorn the rakehell rout of our ragged rhimers, which without learning boast, without judgment jangle, and without reason rage and foam. Spenser's Pastorals.

No breaking of windows or glasses for spight,
And spoiling the goods for a rakehell prank. Benj. Johnson.

RA'KISH. adj. [from rake.] Loose; lewd; dissolute.
There seldom can be peculiarity in the love of a rakish heart. Clarissa.

TO RA'LLY. v. a. [rallier, Fr.]
1. To put disordered or dispersed forces into order.
With rallied arms to try what may be yet Regain'd in heav'n. Milton.

Publick arguing serves to whet the wits of hereticks, and by shewing weak parts of their doctrines, prompts them to rally all their sophistry to fortify them with fallacy. D. of Pie.

Luther deters men from solitariness; but he does not mean from a sober solitude, that rallies our scattered strengths, and prepares us against any new encounters from without. Atterb.

2. [Rallier, Fr.] To treat with slight contempt; to treat with satirical merriment.
Honeycomb has not lived a month, for these forty years, out of the smoke of London, and rallies me upon a country life. Addison's Spectator.

If after the reading of this letter, you find yourself in a humour rather to rally and ridicule, than to comfort me, I desire you would throw it into the fire. Addison.

R A M

Strephon had long confes'd his am'rous pain,
Which gay Corinna rally'd with disdain. Gay.

TO RA'LLY. v. n.
1. To come together in a hurry.
If God should shew this perverse man a new heaven and a new earth, springing out of nothing, he might say, that innumerable parts of matter chanced just then to rally together, and to form themselves into this new world. Villoison.

2. To come again into order.
The Grecians rally, and their pow'rs unite;
With fury charge us. Dryden's Aeneis.

3. To exercise satirical merriment.
RAM. n. f. [ram, Saxon; ram, Dutch.]
1. A male sheep; in some provinces, a tup.
The ewes, being rank, turned to the rams. Shakespeare.

An old sheep-whistling rogue, a ram tender.
You may draw the bones of a ram's head hung with strings of beads and ribbands. Peacocks on Drawing.

A ram their off'ring, and a ram their meat. Dryden.

The ram, having pass'd the sea, serenely shines,
And leads the year. Creech's Mamilus.

2. An instrument with an iron head to batter walls.
Antony,
Let not the piece of virtue, which is set
As the cement of our love,
To keep it builded, be the ram to batter
The fortress of it. Shakespeare, Antony and Cleopatra.

Judas calling upon the Lord, who without any rams or engines of war did cast down Jericho, gave a fierce assault against the walls. 2 Mac. xii. 15.

TO RAM. v. a. [from the noun.]
1. To drive with violence, as with a battering ram.
Ram thou thy faithful tidings in mine ears,
That long time have been barren. Shakespeare.

Having no artillery nor engines, and finding that he could do no good by ramming with logs of timber, he set one of the gates on fire. Bacon's Henry VII.

The charge with bullet, or paper wet and hard stopp'd, or with powder alone rammed in hard, maketh no great difference in the loudness of the report. Bacon's Nat. Hist.

A mariner loading his gun, while he was ramming in a cartridge, the powder took fire. Wise's Surgery.

Here many poor people roll in vast balls of snow, which they ram together, and cover from the sun shine. Addison.

A ditch drawn between two parallel furrows, was fill'd with some found materials, and rammed to make the foundation solid. Arbutnot on Coins.

2. To fill with anything driven hard together.
As when that devilish iron engine wrought
In deepest hell, and fram'd by furies skill,
With windy nitre and quick sulphur fraught,
And ram'd with bullet round ordain'd to kill. Fa. Queen.

He that proves the king,
To him will we prove loyal; till that time,
Have we ram'd up our gates against the world. Shakespeare.

They mined the walls, laid the powder, and rammed the mouth, but the citizens made a countermine. Hayward.

This into hollow engines, long and round,
Thick ram'd, at th' other bore with touch of fire
Dilated and infuriate, shall send forth
Such implements of mischief, as shall dash
To pieces. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. vi.

Leave a convenient space behind the wall to ram in clay. Mortimer's Husbandry.

TO RAMBLE. v. n. [rammelen, Dutch, to rove loosely and irregularly; to wander.]
Shame contracts the spirits, fixes the ramblings of fancy, and gathers the man into himself. South.

He that is at liberty to ramble in perfect darkness, what is his liberty better than if driven up and down as a bubble by the wind. Locke.

Chapman has taken advantage of an immeasurable length of verse, notwithstanding which, there is scarce any paraphrase so loose and rambling as his. Pope.

Never ask leave to go abroad, for you will be thought an idle rambling fellow. Swift's Directions to Footmen.

O'er his ample sides the rambling sprays Luxuriant shoot. Thomson's Spring.

RA'MBLE. n. f. [from the verb.] Wandering irregular excursion.
This conceit puts us upon the ramble up and down for relief, 'till very weariness brings us at last to ourselves. L'Estrange.

Coming home after a short Christmas ramble, I found a letter upon my table. Swift.

She quits the narrow path of sense
For a dear ramble through impertinence. Swift's Miscel.

RA'MBLER. n. f. [from ramble.] Rover; wanderer.
Says the rambler, we must e'en beat it out. L'Estrange.

RA'MBOOZE. n. f. A drink made of wine, ale, eggs and sugar.

RA'MBUSE. n. f. In the winter time; or of wine, milk, sugar and rosewater in the summer time. Bailey.

RA'MEKIN. n. f. [ramequin, Fr.] In cookery, small slices of bread covered with a farce of cheese and eggs. Bailey.

RAMENTS. n. f. [ramenta, Lat.] Scrapings; shavings. Dill.

RAMIFICATION. n. f. [ramification, Fr. from ramus, Latin.] Division or separation into branches; the act of branching out.
By continuation of profane histories or other monuments kept together, the genealogies and ramifications of some single families to a vast extension may be preserved. Hale.

As the blood and chyle pass together through the ramifications of the pulmonary artery, they will be still more perfectly mixed; but if a pipe is divided into branches, as they pass again subdivided, the red and white liquors, as they pass through the ramifications, will be more intimately mixed; the more ramifications, the mixture will be the more perfect. Arb.

TO RA'MIFY. v. a. [ramifier, Fr. ramus and facio, Lat.] To separate into branches.
The mint, grown to have a pretty thick stalk, with the various and ramified roots, which it shot into the water, presented a spectacle not unpleasant to behold. Boyle.

TO RA'MIFY. v. n. To be parted into branches.
Asparagus affects the urine with a fetid smell, especially if cut when they are white; when they are older, and begin to ramify, they lose this quality. Arbutnot on Aliments.

RA'MMER. n. f. [from ram.]
1. An instrument with which any thing is driven hard.
The master bricklayer must try the foundations with an iron crow and rammer, to see whether the foundations are found. Moxon's Mechanical Exercises.

 On that rapacious hand for ever blaze? Pope.
RAPACIOUSLY. adv. [from rapacious.] By rapine; by violent robbery.
RAPACIOUSNESS. n. f. [from rapacious.] The quality of being rapacious.
RAPACITY. n. f. [rapacitas, Lat. rapacitas, Fr. from rapax.] Addictedness to plunder; exercise of plunder; ravenousness.

RAP

Any of these, without regarding the pains of churchmen, grudge them those small remains of ancient piety, which the rapacity of some ages has scarce left to the church. Sprat.
RAP. n. f. [rapt, Fr. raptus, Latin.]
 1. Violent delirium of chaffity.
 You are both decypher'd
 For villains mark'd with rape. Shakefp. Titus Andronicus.
 Rape call you it, to seize my own,
 My true betroth'd love. Shakefp. Titus Andronicus.
 The parliament conceived, that the obtaining of women by force into possession, howsoever afterwards assent might follow by allurements, was but a rape drawn forth in length, because the first force drew on all the rest. Bacon's Henry VII.
 Witnesses that night
 In Gibeah, when the hospitable door
 Expos'd a matron, to avoid worse rape. Milton.
 The haughty fair,
 Who not the rape ev'n of a god could bear.
 Tell Thracian tyrant's alter'd shape,
 And dire revenge of Philomela's rape. Dryden.
 2. Privation; act of taking away.
 Fear grew after fear,
 Fig after fig came; time made never rape
 Of any dainty there. Chapman's Odyssey.
 3. Something snatched away.
 Sad widows by thee rifled, weep in vain,
 And ruin'd orphans of thy rapes complain. Sandys.
 Where now are all my hopes? oh never more Shall they revive! nor death her rapes restore! Sandys.
 4. The juice of grapes is drawn as well from the rape, or whole grapes pluck'd from the cluster, and wine pour'd upon them in a vessel, as from a vat, where they are bruised. Ray.
 5. A plant, from the seed of which oil is expressed.
RAPID. adj. [rapidus, Fr. rapidus, Lat.] Quick; swift.
 Part shun the goal with rapid wheels. Milton.
 While you so smoothly turn and rowl our sphere,
 That rapid motion does but rest appear. Dryden.
RAPIDITY. n. f. [rapidity, Fr. rapiditas, from rapidus, Lat.] Celerity; velocity; swiftness.
 Where the words are not monosyllables, we make them so by our rapidity of pronunciation. Addison's Spectator.
RAPIDLY. adv. [from rapid.] Swiftly; with quick motion.
RAPIDNESS. n. f. [from rapid.] Celerity; swiftness.
RAPIER. n. f. [rapier, Fr. fo called from the quickness of its motion.] A small sword used only in thruffling.
 I will turn thy falsehood to thy heart,
 Where it was forged, with my rapier's point. Shakefp.
 A soldier of far inferior strength may manage a rapier or fire-arms so expertly, as to be an overmatch for his adversary. Pope's Essay on Homer's Battles.
RAPIER-FISH. n. f.
 The rapier-fish, called xiphias, grows sometimes to the length of five yards: the sword, which grows level from the snout of the fish, is here about a yard long, at the basis four inches over, two-edged, and pointed exactly like a rapier: he preys on fishes, having first stabbed them with this sword. Grew's Museum.
RAPINE. n. f. [rapina, Lat. rapine, Fr.]
 1. The act of plundering.
 If the poverty of Scotland might, yet the plenty of England cannot, excuse the envy and rapine of the church's rights. King Charles.
 The logic of a conquering sword may silence, but convince it cannot; its efficacy rather breeds aversion and abhorrence of that religion, whose first address is in blood and rapine. Decoy of Piety.
 2. Violence; force.
 Her least action overaw'd
 His malice, and with rapine sweet bereav'd
 His fierceness of its fierce intent. Milton.
RAPPER. n. f. [from rap.] One who strikes.
RAPPORT. n. f. [rappat, Fr.] Relation; reference; proportion. A word introduced by the innovator, Temple, but not copied by others.
 'Tis obvious what rapport there is between the conceptions and languages in every country, and how great a difference this must make in the excellence of books. Temple.
TO RAP. v. n. [this word is used by Chapman for rap improperly, as appears from the participle, which from rap would be not rapt, but rapted.] To ravish; to put in ecstacy.
 You may safe approve,
 How strong in infatuation to their love
 Their rapping tunes are. Chapman's Odyssey.
RAPT. n. f. [from rap.] A trance; an ecstacy.
RAPTURE. n. f.
 1. Ecstacy; transport; violence of any pleasing passion; enthusiasm; uncommon heat of imagination.
 Musick, when thus applied, raises in the mind of the hearer great conceptions; it strengthens devotion, and advances praise into rapture. Addison's Spectator, N° 406.
 You grow correct, that once with rapture writ. Pope.

RAR

2. Rapidity; haste.
 The wat'ry throng,
 Wave rowling after wave, where way they found,
 If steep, with torrent rapture; if through plain Soft-cbbing; nor withstood them rock or hill. Milton.
RAPTURED. adj. [from rapture.] Ravished; transported.
 A bad word.
 He drew
 Such madding draughts of beauty to the soul,
 As for a while cancell'd his raptur'd thought
 With luxury too daring. Thomson's Summer.
RAPTUROUS. adj. [from rapture.] Ecstasick; transporting.
 Are the pleasures of it so inviting and rapturous? is a man bound to look out sharp to plague himself? Collier.
RARE. adj. [rarus, Lat. rare, Fr. in all the senses but the last.]
 1. Scarce; uncommon.
 Live to be rare, and gaze o' th' time;
 We'll have you, as our rarer monsters are,
 Painted upon a pole. Shakefp.
 2. Excellent; incomparable; valuable to a degree seldom found.
 This jealousy
 Is for a precious creature; as she's rare,
 Must it be great; and as his person's mighty, Must it be violent. Shakefp. Winter's Tale.
 On which was wrought the gods and giants fight,
 Rare work, all fill'd with terror and delight. Cowley.
 Above the rest I judge one beauty rare. Dryden.
 3. Thinly scattered.
 The cattle in the fields and meadows green
 Those rare and solitary, these in flocks
 Pasturing at once, and in broad herds upspring. Milton.
 4. Thin; subtle; not dense.
 They are of so tender and weak a nature, as they affect only such a rare and attenuate substance, as the spirit of living creatures. Bacon's Natural History.
 So eagerly the fiend
 O'er bog or steep, through strait, rough, dense, or rare,
 With head, hands, wings, or feet, purifies his way. Milt.
 The dense and bright light of the circle will obscure the rare and weak light of these dark colours round about it, and render them almost insensible. Newton's Opticks.
 Bodies are much more rare and porous than is commonly believed: water is nineteen times lighter, and by consequence nineteen times rarer than gold, and gold is so rare, as very readily, and without the least opposition, to transmit the magnetic effluvia, and easily to admit quicksilver into its pores, and to let water pass through it. Newton's Opticks.
 5. Raw; not fully subdued by the fire. This is often pronounced rear.
 New-laid eggs, with Baucis' busy care,
 Turn'd by a gentle fire, and roasted rare. Dryden.
RARESHOW. n. f. [this word is formed in imitation of the foreign way of pronouncing rare show.] A show carried in a box.
 The fashions of the town affect us just like a rareshow, we have the curiosity to peep at them, and nothing more. Pope.
 Of rareshows he lings, and Punch's feats. Gay.
RAREFACTION. n. f. [rarefactio, Fr. from rarefy.] Extension of the parts of a body, that makes it take up more room than it did before; contrary to condensation.
 The water within being rarefied, and by rarefaction resolved into wind, will force up the imoak. Wotton's Architecture.
 When exhalations, shut up in the caverns of the earth by rarefaction or compression, come to be straitened, they strive every way to set themselves at liberty. Burnet.
RAREFIABLE. adj. [from rarefy.] Admitting rarefaction.
TO RAREFY. v. a. [rarefier, Fr. rarus and factus, Lat. rarefy were more proper.] To make thin: contrary to condense.
 To the hot equator crowding fast,
 Where highly rarefied the yielding air Admits their steam. Thomson.
TO RAREFY. v. n. To become thin.
 Earth rarefies to dew; expanded more
 The subtil dew in air begins to soar. Dryden's Fables.
RARELY. adv. [from rare.]
 1. Seldom; not often; not frequently.
 Rarely they rise by virtue's aid, who lie Plung'd in the depth of helpless poverty. Dryden's Juven.
 Vanella in her bloom,
 Advanc'd like Atalanta's star,
 But rarely seen, and seen from far. Swift's Miscellanies.
 2. Finely; nicely; accurately.
 How rarely does it meet with this time's guise,
 When man was will'd to love his enemies. Shakefp.
RARENESS. n. f. [from rare.]
 Tickling is most in the soles, arm-holes and sides: the cause is the thinness of the skin, joined with the rareness of being touched there; for tickling is a light motion of the spirits, which the thinness of the skin, the suddenness and rareness of touch doth further. Bacon.

RAS

For the rareness and rare effect of that petition, I'll insert it as presented. Clarendon.
 Of my heart I now a present make;
 Accept it as when early fruit we send,
 And let the rareness the small gift commend. Dryden.
 2. Value arising from scarcity.
 Roses set in a pool, supported with some stay, is matter of rareness and pleasure, though of small use. Bacon.
 To worthiest things,
 Virtue, art, beauty, fortune, now I see Rareness or use, not nature, value brings. Donne.
RARITY. n. f. [raritas, Fr. raritas, Lat.]
 1. Uncommonness; infrequency.
 So far from being fond of any one for its rarity, if I meet with any in a field which pleases me, I give it a place in my garden. Spectator.
 2. A thing valued for its scarcity.
 Sorrow would be a rarity most belov'd,
 If all could so become it. Shakefp. King Lear.
 It would be a rarity worth the seeing, could any one show us such a thing as a perfectly reconciled enemy. South.
 I saw three rarities of different kinds, which pleased me more than any other shows of the place. Addison.
 3. Thinness; subtlety: the contrary to density.
 Bodies, under the same outward bulk, have a greater thinness and expansion, or thickness and solidity, which terms, in English, do not signify fully those differences of quantity; therefore I will do it under the names of rarity and density. Digby.
 This I do, not to draw any argument against them from the universal rest or accurately equal diffusion of matter, but only that I may better demonstrate the great rarity and tenuity of their imaginary chaos. Bentley's Sermons.
RASCAL. n. f. [rascal, Saxon, a lean beast.] A mean fellow; a scoundrel; a lorry wretch.
 For the rascal commons, leit he cared.
 And when him list the rascal routs appal,
 Men into stones therewith he could transnew. Fa. Queen.
 When Marcus Brutus grows so covetous
 To lock such rascal counters from his friends:
 Be ready, gods, with all your thunder-bolts,
 Dash him to pieces. Shakefp. Julius Caesar.
 The rascal people, thirsting after prey,
 Join with the traitor. Shakefp. Henry VI. p. ii.
 But for our gentlemen,
 The mouse ne'er thund' the cat, as they did budge
 From rascals worse than they. Shakefp.
 I am accus'd to rob in that thief's company; the rascal hath remov'd my horse. Shakefp. Henry IV. p. i.
 Scoundrels are insolent to their superiors; but it does not become a man of honour to contest with mean rascals. L'Estr.
 Did I not see you, rascal, did I not!
 When you lay snug to inap young Damon's goat? Dryden.
 I have sent, to serve my turn, in store,
 And he's a rascal who pretends to more. Dryden's Persius.
 The poor girl provoked told him he lyed like a rascal. Sw.
RASCALION. n. f. [from rascal.] One of the lowest people.
 That proud dame
 Us'd him so like a base rascalion,
 That old pig—what d'ye call him—malion,
 That cut his mistress out of stone,
 Had not so hard a hearted one. Hudibras, p. i.
RASCALITY. n. f. [from rascal.] The low mean people.
 Pretended philosophers judge as ignorantly in their way, as the rascality in theirs. Glanvill's Scaph.
 Jeroboam having procured his people gods, the next thing was to provide priests; hereupon, to the calves he adds a commission, for the approving, trying and admitting the rascality and lowest of the people to minister in that service. South.
RASCALLY. adj. [from rascal.] Mean; worthless.
 Would'st thou not be glad to have the niggardly rascally sheep-biter come by some notable shame. Shakefp.
 Our rascally porter is fallen fast asleep with the black cloth and fconces, or we might have been tacking up by this time. Swift.
TO RASE. v. a. [this word is written rase or raze: I would write rase, when it signifies to strike slightly, perstringere; and raze, when it signifies to ruin, delere; raser, Fr. rarus, Lat.]
 1. To skim; to strike on the surface.
 He certifies your lordship, that this night
 He dreamt the boar had rased off his helm. Shakefp.
 Was he not in the nearest neighbourhood to death? and might not the bullet, that rased his cheek, have gone into his head. South's Sermons.
 2. To overthrow; to destroy; to root up.
 Her battering engines bent to raze some city. Milton.
 3. To blot out by rasure; to erase.
 Though of their names in heav'nly records now
 Be no memorial, blotted out and rased. Milton.
RASH. adj. [rash, Dutch.] Hasty; violent; precipitate; acting without caution or reflection.
 This is to be bold without shame, rash without skill, full of words without wit. Afchan's Schoolmaster.
 21 E

RAT

Blast her pride, O ye blest gods! so will you wish on me, when the rat mood is on me. Shakefp.
I have scarce leisure to salute you,
My matter is to rat. Shakefp. Troilus and Cressida.
Be not rat with thy mouth, and let not thine heart be hasty to utter any thing before God; for God is in heaven, and thou upon earth; therefore let thy words be few. Ecclef.
Her rat hand in evil hour,
Forth reaching to the fruit, the pluck'd, she eat. Milton.
RASH. n. f. [rafcia, Italian.]
1. Sattin. Minshew.
2. [Corrupted probably from rafsh.] An efflorescence on the body; a breaking out.
RA'SHER. n. f. [rafura lardi, Lat.] A thin slice of bacon.
If we grow all to be pork eaters, we shall not shortly have a rafsher on the coals for money. Shakefp. Merch. of Venice.
White and black was all her homely cheer,
And rafshers of fang'd bacon on the coals. Dryden.
Quenches his thirst with ale in nut-brown bowls,
And takes the hasty rafsher from the coals. King.
RA'SHLY. adv. [from rafsh.] Hastily; violently; without due consideration.
This expedition was by York and Talbot Too rafshly plotted. Shakefp. Henry VI. p. i.
Men are not rafshly to take that for done, which is not done. Bacon's Natural History.
He that doth any thing rafshly, must do it willingly; for he was free to deliberate or not. L'Estrange's Fables.
Declare the secret villain,
The wretch so meanly base to injure Phædra,
So rafshly brave to dare the sword of Theseus. Smith.
RA'SHNESS. n. f. [from rafsh.] Foolish contempt of danger;
inconsiderate heat of temper; precipitation; temerity.
Who seeth not what sentence it shall enforce us to give against all churches in the world; in as much as there is not one, but hath had many things established in it, which though the scripture did never command, yet for us to condemn were rafshness. Hooker, b. iii. f. 6.
Nature to youth hot rafshness doth dispence,
But with cold prudence age doth recompence. Denham.
In so speaking, we offend indeed against truth; yet we offend not properly by falsehood, which is a speaking against our thoughts; but by rafshness, which is an affirming or denying, before we have sufficiently informed ourselves. South.
The vain Morat by his own rafshness wrought,
Too soon discover'd his ambitious thought,
Believ'd me his, because I spoke him fair. Dryden.
RASP. n. f. [raspo, Italian.] A delicious berry that grows on a species of the bramble; a raspberry.
Sorrel set amongst rasps, and the rasps will be the smaller.
Bacon's Natural History.
Now will the corinths, now the rasps supply
Delicious draughts, when prest to wines. Philips.
To RASP. v. a. [raspen, Dutch; rasper, Fr. raspare, Italian.]
To rub to powder with a very rough file.
Some authors have advised the rasping of these bones; but in this case it is needless. Wise's Surgery.
Having prepared hard woods and ivory for the lathe with rasping, they pitch it between the pikes. Moxon.
RASP. n. f. [from the verb.] A large rough file, commonly used to wear away wood.
Case-hardening is used by file-cutters, when they make coarse files, and generally most rasps have formerly been made of iron and case-hardened. Moxon's Mechanical Exercises.
RA'SPATORY. n. f. [raspatoir, Fr. from rasp.] A surgeon's rasp.
I put into his mouth a raspatory, and pulled away the corrupt flesh, and with cauteries burnt it to a crust. Wise's Surgery.
RA'SPBERRY, or Raspberry. n. f. A kind of berry.
Raspberries are of three sorts; the common wild one, the large red garden raspberry, which is one of the pleasantest of fruits, and the white, which is little inferior to the red. Mortimer's Husbandry.
RASPBERRY-BUSH. n. f. A species of bramble.
RA'SURE. n. f. [rasura, Lat.]
1. The act of scraping or shaving.
2. A mark in a writing where something has been rubbed out.
Such a writing ought to be free from any vituperation of rasure. Ayliffe's Parergon.
RAT. n. f. [ratte, Dutch; rat, Fr. ratta, Spanish.] An animal of the mouse kind that infests houses and ships.
Our natures do pursue,
Like rats that ravin down their proper bane. Shakefp.
Make you ready your stiff bats and clubs,
Rome and her rats are at the point of battle. Shakefp.
I have seen the time, with my long sword I would have made you four tall fellows skip like rats. Shakefp.
Thus horses will knable at walls, and rats will gnaw iron. Brown's Vulgar Errors.
If in despair he goes out of the way like a rat with a dose of arsenick, why he dies nobly. Dennis.

RAT

To smell a RAT. To be put on the watch by suspicion as the cat by the scent of a rat; to suspect danger.
Quoth Hudibras, I smell a rat, Ralpho, thou dost prevaricate. Hudibras, p. i.
RATABLE. adj. [from rate.] Set at a certain value.
The Danes brought in a reckoning of money by ores, per oras; I collect out of the abby-book of Burton, that twenty ores were ratable to two marks of silver. Camden's Remains.
RATABLY. adv. Proportionably.
Many times there is no proportion of shot and powder allowed ratably by that quantity of the great ordnance. Raleigh.
RATA'RIA. n. f. A fine liquor, prepared from the kernels of apricots and spirits. Bailey.
RATA'N. n. f. An Indian cane. Ditt.
RATCH. n. f. In clockwork, a sort of wheel, which serves to lift up the detents every hour, and thereby make the clock strike. Bailey.
RATE. n. f. [ratu, Lat. rate, old Fr.]
1. Price fixed on any thing.
How many things do we value, because they come at dear rates from Japan and China, which if they were our own manufacture, common to be had, and for a little money, would be neglected? Locke.
I'll not betray the glory of my name,
'Tis not for me, who have prefer'd a state,
To buy an empire at so base a rate. Dryden.
The price of land has never changed, in the several changes have been made in the rate of interest by law; nor now that the rate of interest is by law the same, is the price of land every where the same. Locke.
2. Allowance settled.
His allowance was a continual allowance, a daily rate for every day. 2 Kings xxv. 30.
They obliged themselves to remit after the rate of twelve hundred thousand pounds sterling per annum, divided into many monthly payments. Addison.
3. Degree; comparative height or valour.
I am a spirit of no common rate;
The summer still doth tend upon my state. Shakefp.
I have disabled mine estate,
By shewing something a more swelling port,
Than my faint means would grant continuance;
Nor do I now make moan to be abridged
From such a noble rate. Shakefp. Merchant of Venice.
In this did his holiness and godliness appear above the rate and pitch of other mens, in that he was so infinitely merciful. Calamy's Sermons.
To which relation whatsoever is done agreeably, is morally and essentially good; and whatsoever is done otherwise, is at the same rate morally evil. South.
4. Quantity assignable.
In goodly form comes on the enemy;
And by the ground they hide, I judge their number Upon or near the rate of thirty thousand. Shakefp.
5. That which sets value.
Heretofore the rate and standard of wit was very different from what it is now-a-days: no man was then accounted a wit for speaking such things, as deserved to have the tongue cut out. South's Sermons.
A virtuous heathen is, at this rate, as happy as a virtuous christian. Atterbury.
6. Manner of doing any thing; degree to which any thing is done.
Many of the horse could not march at that rate, nor come up soon enough. Clarendon, b. viii.
Tom hinting his dislike of some trifle his mistress had said, she asked him how he would talk to her after marriage, if he talked at this rate before? Addison.
7. Tax imposed by the parish.
They paid the church and parish rate,
And took, but read not the receipt. Prior.
To RATE. v. a. [from the noun.]
1. To value at a certain price.
I freely told you, all the wealth I had Ran in my veins, I was a gentleman;
And yet, dear lady,
Rating myself as nothing, you shall see How much I was a braggart. Shakefp. Merch. of Venice.
We may there be instructed, how to name and rate all goods, by those that will concentrate into felicity. Boyle.
You seem not high enough your joys to rate,
You stand indebted a vast sum to fate,
And should large thanks for the great blessing pay. Dryden.
2. [Reita, Islandick.] To chide hastily and vehemently.
Go rate thy minions, proud insulting toy,
Becomes it thee to be thus bold in terms
Before thy sovereign. Shakefp. Henry VI. p. iii.
An old lord of the council rated me the other day in the street about you, Sir. Shakefp. Henry IV. p. i.
What is all that a man enjoys, from a year's converse, comparable to what he feels for one hour, when his confidence shall take him aside and rate him by himself. South.

RAT

If words are sometimes to be used, they ought to be grave, kind and sober, representing the ill or unbecomingness of the faults, rather than a hasty rating of the child for it. Locke.
RATH. n. f. A hill. I know not whence derived.
There is a great use among the Irish, to make great as-semblies together upon a rath or hill, there to parly about matters and wrongs between townships or private persons.
Spenser on Ireland.
RATH. adv. Early.
Thus is my summer worn away and wasted,
Thus is my harvest hasten'd all too rath,
The ear, that budded fair, is burnt and blasted,
And all my hoped gain is turn'd to scathe. Spenser.
Strong Lagrean wines
Rath ripe and purple grapes there be. May's Virgil.
Rath ripe are some, and some of later kind,
Of golden some, and some of purple rind. May's Virgil.
RATH. adj. [nað, Saxon, quickly.] Early; coming before the time.
Bring the rath primrose that forsaken dies,
The tufted crow-toe and pale jessamine. Milton.
RA'THER. adv. [this is a comparative from rath; nað, Saxon, soon. Now out of use. One may still say, by the same form of speaking, I will sooner do this than that; that is, I like better to do this.]
1. More willingly; with better liking.
Almighty God desireth not the death of a sinner, but rather that he should turn from his wickedness and live. Common Prayer.
2. Preferably to the other; with better reason.
'Tis rather to be thought, than an heir had no such right by divine institution, than that God should give such a right, but yet leave it undetermined who such heir is. Locke.
3. In a greater degree than otherwise.
He sought through the world, but found in vain,
And no where finding, rather fear'd her slain. Dryden.
4. More properly.
This is an art,
Which does mend nature, change it rather, but The art itself is nature. Shakefp. Winter's Tale.
5. Especially.
You are come to me in a happy time,
The rather for I have some sport in hand. Shakefp.
6. To have RATHER. [this is, I think, a barbarous expression of late intrusion into our language, for which it is better to say will rather.] To desire in preference.
'Tis with reluctance he is provoked by our impetuosity to apply the discipline of severity and correction; he had rather mankind should adore him as their patron and benefactor.
Rogers's Sermons.
RATIFICATION. n. f. [ratification, Fr. from ratify.] The act of ratifying; confirmation.
RATIFIER. n. f. [from ratify.] The person or thing that ratifies.
They cry, "chuse we Laertes for our king?"
The ratifiers and props of every word,
Caps, hands and tongues applaud it to the clouds. Shakefp.
To RATIFY. v. a. [ratum facio, Latin.] To confirm; to settle.
The church being a body which dieth not, hath always power, as occasion requireth, no less to ordain that which never was, than to ratify what hath been before. Hooker.
By the help of these, with him above
To ratify the work, we may again
Give to our tables meat, sleep to our nights. Shakefp.
We have ratified unto them the borders of Judæa. 1 Mac.
God ratified their prayers by the judgment they brought down upon the head of him, whom they prayed against. South.
Tell me, my friend, from whence had'st thou the skill,
So nicely to distinguish good from ill?
And what thou art to follow, what to fly,
This to condemn, and that to ratify? Dryden.
RATIO. n. f. [Latin.] Proportion.
Whatever inclinations the rays have to the plane of incidence, the sine of the angle of incidence of every ray considered apart, shall have to the sine of the angle of refraction a constant ratio. Cheyne's Philosophical Principles.
To RATIOCINATE. v. n. [ratiocinar, Lat.] To reason;
to argue.
RATIOCINATION. n. f. [ratiocinatio, Lat.] The act of reasoning; the act of deducing consequences from premises.
In simple terms, expressing the open notions of things, which the second act of reason compoundeth into propositions, and the last into syllogisms and forms of ratiocination. Brown.
Can any kind of ratiocination allow Christ all the marks of the Messiah, and yet deny him to be the Messiah? South.
Such an inscription would be self-evident without any ra-tification or study, and could not fail constantly to exert its energy in their minds. Bentley.

RAT

RATIOCINATIVE. adj. [from ratiocinate.] Argumentative; advancing by process of discourse.
Some consecutions are so intimately and evidently connexed to, or found in the premises, that the conclusion is attained quasi per saltum, and without any thing of ratiocinative process, even as the eye sees his object immediately, and without any previous discourse. Hale's Origin of Mankind.
RATIONAL. adj. [rationalis, Latin.]
1. Having the power of reasoning.
2. Agreeable to reason.
What higher in her society thou find'st
Attractive, humane, rational, love still. Milton.
When the conclusion is deduced from the unerring dictates of our faculties, we say the inference is rational. Glanvill.
If your arguments be rational, offer them in as moving a manner as the nature of the subject will admit; but beware of letting the pathetic part swallow up the rational. Swift.
3. Wise; judicious; as, a rational man.
RATIONALE. n. f. [from ratio, Lat.] A detail with reasons:
as, Dr. Sparrow's Rationale of the Common Prayer.
RATIONALIST. n. f. [from rational.] One who proceeds in his disquisitions and practice wholly upon reason.
He often used this comparison; the empirical philosophers are like to pismires; they only lay up and use their store:
the rationalists are like to spiders; they spin all out of their own bowels: but give me a philosopher, who, like the bee, hath a middle faculty, gathering from abroad, but digesting that which is gathered by his own virtue. Bacon.
RATIONALITY. n. f. [from rational.]
1. The power of reasoning.
When God has made rationality the common portion of mankind, how came it to be thy inclosure? Gov. of the Tong.
2. Reasonableness.
In human occurrences, there have been many well directed intentions, whose rationalities will never bear a rigid examination. Brown's Vulgar Errors.
RATIONALLY. adv. [from rational.] Reasonably; with reason.
Upon the proposal of an agreeable object, it may rationally be conjectured, that a man's choice will rather incline him to accept than to refuse it. South.
RATIONALNESS. n. f. [from rational.] The state of being rational.
RA'TSBANE. n. f. [rat and bane.] Poison for rats; arsenick.
Poor Tom! that hath laid knives under his pillow, and halts in his pew, set ratsbane by his porridge. Shakefp.
He would throw ratsbane up and down a house, where children might come at it. L'Estrange.
When murder's out, what vice can we advance?
Unless the new-found pois'ning trick of France;
And when their art of ratsbane we have got,
By way of thanks, we'll fend 'em o'er our plot. Dryden.
I can hardly believe the relation of his being poisoned, but sack might do it, though ratsbane would not. Swift to Pope.
RA'TTEEN. n. f. A kind of stuff.
We'll rig in Meath-street Egypt's haughty queen,
And Anthony shall court her in ratteen. Swift.
To RA'TTLE. v. n. [ratelen, Dutch.]
1. To make a quick sharp noise with frequent repetitions and collisions of bodies not very sonorous: when bodies are sonorous, it is called jingling.
The quiver rattled against him. Job xxxix. 23.
The noise of a whip, of the rattling of the wheels, of prancing horses, and of the jumping chariots. Nab. iii. 2.
They had, to affright the enemies horses, big rattles covered with parchment, and small stones within; but the rattling of shot might have done better service. Hayward.
He was too warm on picking work to dwell;
He fagoted his notions as they fell,
And if they rhym'd and rattled all was well. Dryden.
There the assemblies all her blackest storms,
And the rude hail in rattling tempest forms. Addison.
2. To speak eagerly and noisily.
With jealous eyes at distance she had seen Whispering with Jove the silver-footed queen;
Then, impotent of tongue, her silence broke,
Thus turbulent in rattling tone she spoke. Dryden.
He is a man of pleasure, and a free-thinker; he is an af-fector of liberty and property; he rattles it out against popery. Swift.
To RA'TTLE. v. a.
1. To move any thing so as to make a rattle or noise.
Her chains the rattles, and her whip the snakes. Dryden.
2. To stun with a noise; to drive with a noise.
Sound but another, and another shall,
As loud as thine, rattle the welkin's ear,
And mock the deep-mouth'd thunder. Shakefp.
He should be well enough able to scatter the Irish as a flight of birds, and rattle away this swarm of bees with their king. Bacon's Henry VII.

RAV

3. To fold; to rail at with clamour.
Hearing Ætop had been beforehand, he sent for him in a rage, and rattled him with a thousand traitors and villains for robbing his house. L'Estrange.
She that would sometimes rattle off her servants pretty sharply, now if she saw them drunk, never took any notice. Arbutnot's History of John Bull.
- RA'TTLE. n. f. [from the verb.]
1. A quick noise nimbly repeated.
I'll hold ten pound my dream is out;
I'd tell it you but for the rattle
Of those confounded drums. Prior.
2. Empty and loud talk.
All this ado about the golden age, is but an empty rattle and frivolous conceit. Flakevill on P. evidence.
3. An instrument, which agitated makes a clattering noise.
The rattles of Ilis and the cymbals of Brasilea nearly enough resemble each other. Raleigh's History of the World.
They had, to afflict the enemies horses, big rattles covered with parchment and small stones within. Hayward.
Opinions are the rattles of immature intellects, but the advanced reasons have outgrown them. Glanvill's Sceps.
They want no rattles for their froward mood,
Nor nurse to reconcile them to their food. Dryden.
Farewel then verse, and love, and ev'ry toy,
The rhymes and rattles of the man or boy;
What right, what true, what fit we justly call,
Let this be all my care; for this is all. Pope.
4. A plant.
RA'TTLEHEADED. adj. [rattle and head.] Giddy; not steady.
RA'TTLESNAKE. n. f. A kind of serpent.
The rattlesnake is so called, from the rattle at the end of his tail.
She loses her being at the very sight of him, and drops plump into his arms, like a charmed bird into the mouth of a rattlesnake. Moore's Foundling.
RA'TTLESNAKE Root. n. f.
Rattlesnake root, called also feneka, belongs to a plant, a native of Virginia; the Indians use it as a certain remedy against the bite of a rattlesnake: it has been recommended in all cases, in which the blood is known to be thick and fizy. Hill.
RA'TTOON. n. f. A West Indian fox, which has this peculiar property, that if any thing be offered to it that has lain in water, it will wipe and turn it about with its fore feet, before it will put it to its mouth. Bailey.
To RAVAGE. v. a. [ravager, Fr.] To lay waste; to sack; to ransack; to spoil; to pillage; to plunder.
Already Cæsar
Has ravaged more than half the globe, and sees Mankind grown thin by his destructive sword. Addison.
His blasts obey, and quit the howling hill,
The flatter'd forest, and the ravag'd vale. Thomson.
RAVAGE. n. f. [ravage, Fr. from the verb.] Spoil; ruin; waste.
Some cruel pleasure will from thence arise,
To view the mighty ravage of your eyes.
Would one think 'twere possible for love
To make such ravage in a noble soul. Addison.
Those ravages were not then, what civilized mankind is now; but without mutual society, without arms of offence, without houses or fortifications, an obvious and exposed prey to the ravage of devouring beasts. Bentley.
RA'VAGER. n. f. [from ravage.] Plunderer; spoiler.
When that mighty empire was overthrown by the northern people, vast sums of money were buried to escape the plundering of the conquerors; and what remained was carried off by those ravagers. Swift's Miscellanies.
RA'VAGE, n. f. [raucus, Lat.] Hoarseness; loud rough noise.
Inequality not stay'd upon, but passing, is rather an encrease of sweetness; as in the purling of a wreathed string, and in the raucity of a trumpet. Bacon's Nat. Hist.
To RAVE. v. n. [reven, Dutch; river, Fr.]
1. To be delirious; to talk irrationally.
Men who thus rave, we may conclude their brains are turned, and one may as well read lectures at Bedlam as treat with such. Government of the Tongue.
It soon infecteth the whole member, and is accompanied with watching and raving. Wifeman's Surgery.
Her grief has wrought her into frenzy,
The images her troubled fancy forms
Are incoherent, wild; her words disjointed:
Sometimes she raves for musick, light and air;
Nor air, nor light nor musick calm her pains. Smith.
2. To burst out into furious exclamations as if mad.
This tempest of thy tongue, thus rave, and find No opposition? Sandys's Paraphrase on Job.
Our ravings and complaints are but like arrows shot up into the air, at no mark, and so to no purpose. Temple.
Wonder at my patience,
Have I not cause to rave, and beat my breast,
To rend my heart with grief, and run distracted. Addison.

RAV

- Revenge, revenge, thus raving through the streets,
I'll cry for vengeance. Southern's Spartan Dame.
He swore he could not leave me,
With ten thousand ravings. Rowe's Royal Convert.
3. To be unreasonably fond. With upon before the object of fondness. A colloquial and improper sense.
Another partiality is a fantastical and wild attributing all knowledge to the ancients or the moderns: this raving upon antiquity, in matter of poetry, Horace has wittily exposed in one of his satires. Locke.
To RA'VEL. v. a. [ravelen, Dutch, to entangle.]
1. To entangle; to entwine one with another; to make intricate; to involve; to perplex.
As you unwind her love from him,
Lest it should ravel, and be good to none,
You must provide to bottom it on me.
If then such praise the Macedonian got,
For having rudely cut the Gordian knot;
What glory's due to him that could divide
Such ravel'd int'rests, has the knot untied,
And without stroke so smooth a passage made,
Where craft and malice such obstructions laid. Wallar.
2. To unweave; to unknot; as, to ravel out a twist or piece of knit work.
Let him for a pair of recchy kisses,
Or padding in your neck with his damn'd fingers,
Make you to ravel all this matter out. Shakep. Hamlet.
Sleep that knits up the ravel'd sleeve of care. Shakep. in Digby.
3. To hurry over in confusion. This seems to be the meaning in Digby.
They but ravel it over loosely, and pitch upon disputing against particular conclusions, that at the first encounter of them fingle, seem harsh to them. Digby.
To RA'VEL. v. n.
1. To fall into perplexity or confusion.
Give the reins to wandering thought,
Regardless of his glory's diminution;
Till by their own perplexities involv'd,
They ravel more, still less resolv'd,
But never find self-satisfying solution. Milton's Agonistes.
2. To work in perplexity; to busy himself with intricacies.
It will be needless to ravel far into the records of elder times; every man's memory will suggest many pertinent instances. Decay of Pity.
The humour of raveling into all these mystical or intangled matters, mingling with the interest and passions of princes and of parties, and thereby heightened and inflamed, produced infinite disputes. Temple.
RA'VELIN. n. f. [French.] In fortification, a work that consists of two faces, that make a salient angle, commonly called half moon by the soldiers: it is raised before the courtes or counterescarp. Dié.
RA'VEN. n. f. [hæpæn, Saxon.] A large black fowl.
The raven himself is hoarse
That croakes the fatal entrance of Duncan Under my battlements. Shakep. Macbeth.
Come thou day in night,
For thou wilt lie upon the wings of night,
Whiter than snow upon a raven's back. Shakep.
I have seen a perfectly white raven, as to bill as well as feathers. Boyle on Colours.
He made the greedy ravens to be Elia's caterers, and bring him food. King Charles.
On several parts a several praise bestows,
The ruby lips, and well-proportion'd nose,
The snowy skin, the raven glossy hair,
The dimpled cheek. Dryden's Cymon and Iphigenia.
The raven once in snowy plumes was drest,
White as the whitest dove's unfilly'd breast,
His tongue, his prating tongue had chang'd him quite
To sooty blackness from the purest white. Addison.
To RA'VEN. v. a. [ræpæn, Saxon, to rob.] To devour with great eagerness and rapacity.
Thriftless ambition! that will raven up Thine own life's means. Shakep.
Our natures do pursue,
Like rats that raven down their proper bane,
A thirsty evil; and when we drink we die. Shakep.
The cloyed will
That satiate, yet unsatisfied desire, that tub
Both fill'd and running, ravening first the lamb, Longs after for the garbage. Shakep. Cymbeline.
There is a conspiracy of the prophets, like a roaring lion ravening the prey. Ezek. xxii. 25.
To RA'VEN. v. n. To prey with rapacity.
Benjamin shall raven as a wolf; in the morning he shall devour the prey, and at night he shall divide the spoil. Gen.
The Pharisees make clean the outside of the cup; but their inward part is full of ravening and wickedness. Luke xi.
They gaped upon me with their mouths, as a ravening and a roaring lion. Palm xxii. 13.

The

RAW

- The more they fed, they raven'd still for more,
They drain'd from Dan, and left Beerfheba poor;
But when some lay-preferment fell by chance,
The Gourmands made it their inheritance. Dryden.
Convulsions rack man's nerves and cares his breast,
His flying life is chas'd by raving pains.
Through all his doubles in the winding veins. Blackmore.
RA'VENOUS. adj. [from raven.] Furiously voracious; hungry to rage.
Thy desires
Are wolfish, bloody, starv'd and ravenous. Shakep.
As when a flock
Of ravenous fowl, though many a league remote,
Against the day of battle, to a field
Where armies lie encamp'd come flying, lur'd
With scent of living carcasses. Milton's Paradise Lost.
What! the kind Ilmena,
That nurs'd me, watch'd my sickness! oh she watch'd me,
As ravenous vultures watch the dying lion. Smith.
RA'VENOUSLY. adv. [from ravenous.] With raging voracity.
RA'VENOUSNESS. n. f. [from ravenous.] Rage for prey; furious voracity.
The ravenousness of a lion or bear are natural to them; yet their mission upon an extraordinary occasion may be an actus imperatus of divine providence. Hale.
RAUGHT. the old pret. and part. pass. of reach. Snatched; reached; attained.
His tail was stretched out in wond'rous length,
That to the house of heavenly gods it reach'd,
And with extorted power and borrow'd strength,
The ever-burning lamps from thence it brought. Fa. 2u.
And that as soon as ripe years he reach'd,
He might, for memory of that day's ruth,
Be called Ruddyman. Fairy Queen.
In like delights of bloody game,
He trained was till ripe years he reach'd,
And there abide whilst any beast of name
Walk'd in that forest. Fairy Queen.
This staff of honour reach'd, there let it stand,
Where best it fits to be, in Henry's hand. Shakep.
The hand of death has reach'd him. Shakep.
Gritus furiously running in upon Schenden, violently reach'd from his head his rich cap of fables, and with his horsemen took him. Kneller's History of the Turks.
RA'VIN. n. f. [from raven; this were better written raven.]
1. Prey; food gotten by violence.
The lion frang'd for his lionesses, and filled his holes with prey, and his dens with ravin. Nab. ii. 2.
To me, who with eternal famine pine,
Alike is hell, or paradise, or heav'n;
There best; where most with ravin I may meet. Milton.
2. Rapine; rapaciousness.
They might not lie long in a condition exposed to the ravin of any vermin that may find them, being unable to escape. Ray on the Creation.
RA'VINGLY. adv. [from rave.] With frenzy; with distraction.
In this depth of mutes and divers sorts of discourses, would the raving have remained. Sidney, b. ii.
To RA'VISH. v. a. [ravir, Fr.]
1. To conspire by force.
They ravish'd the women and maids. Lam. v. 11.
They cut thy fillet's tongue, and ravish'd her. Shakep.
2. To take away by violence.
These hairs, which thou dost ravish from my chin,
Will quicken and accuse thee. Shakep. King Lear.
Their vow is made
To ransack Troy, within whose strong immures
The ravish'd Helen sleeps. Shakep. Troilus and Cressida.
I owe myself the care,
My fame and injur'd honour to repair;
From thy own tent, proud man, in thy despite,
This hand shall ravish thy pretended right. Dryden.
3. To delight to rapture; to transport.
Thou hast ravish'd my heart. Cont. iv. ix.
Be thou ravish'd always with her love. Prov. v. 19.
RA'VISH. n. f. [ravisseur, Fr. from ravish.]
1. He that embraces a woman by violence.
They are cruel and bloody, common ravishers of women, and murderers of children. Spenser's State of Ireland.
A ravisher must repair the temporal detriment to the maid, and give her a dowry, or marry her if he desire it. Taylor.
Turn hence those pointed glories of your eyes!
For if more charms beneath those circles rise,
So weak my virtue, they so strong appear,
I shall turn ravisher to keep you here. Dryden.
2. One who takes any thing by violence.
Shall the ravisher display your hair,
While the fops envy, and the ladies stare. Pope.
RA'VISHMENT. n. f. [ravissement, Fr. from ravish.]
1. Violation; forcible conspurcation.
Of his several ravishments, betrayings and stealing away of

RAW

Tell them ancient stories of the ravishment of chaste maidens. Taylor's Rule of Living Holy.
I told them I was one of their knight-errants that delivered them from ravishment. Dryden.
2. Transport; rapture; ecstasy; pleasing violence on the mind.
All things joy, with ravishment
Attracted by thy beauty still to gaze. Milton.
Thee all things gaze on,
With ravishment beheld! Milton's Par. Lost, b. ix.
Can any mortal mixture of earth's mould
Breathe such divine enchanting ravishment. Milton.
What a ravishment was that, when having found out the way to measure Hiero's crown, he leaped out of the bath, and, as if he were suddenly posselt, ran naked up and down. Wilkins's Dædalus.
RAW. adj. [hneap, Saxon; raa, Danish; rawu, Dutch.]
1. Not subdued by the fire.
Full of great lumps of flesh, and gobbets raw. Spenser.
2. Not covered with the skin.
All aloud the wind doth blow,
And coughing drowns the parson's law;
And birds fit brooding in the snow,
And Marian's nose looks red and raw. Shakep.
If there be quick raw flesh in the rifings, it is an old leprosy. Lev. xiii. 10.
3. Sore.
This her knight was feeble and too faint,
And all his sinews waxen weak and raw
Through long imprisonment. Spenser.
4. Immature; unripe.
5. Unseasoned; unripe in skill.
Some people, very raw and ignorant, are very unworthy and unfitly nominated to places, when men of desert are held back and unpreferred. Raleigh's Essays.
People, while young and raw, and soft-natured, are apt to think it an easy thing to gain love, and reckon their own friendship a sure price of another man's; but when experience shall have once opened their eyes, they will find that a friend is the gift of God. South.
Sails were spread to ev'ry wind that blew,
Raw were the sailors, and the depths were new. Dryden.
Well I knew
What perils youthful ardour would pursue,
Young as thou wert in dangers, raw to war. Dryden.
6. New. This seems to be the meaning.
I have in my mind
A thousand raw tricks of these bragging jacks. Shakep.
7. Bleak; chill.
They carried always with them that weed, as their house, their bed and their garment; and coming lastly into Ireland, they found there more special use thereof, by reason of the raw cold climate. Spenser's State of Ireland.
Youthful still in your doublet and hose, this raw rheumatick day. Shakep. Merry Wives of Windsor.
Once upon a raw and gully day,
The troubled Tyber chafing with his shores. Shakep.
God help thee, shallow man; God make Incision in thee, thou art raw. Shakep.
8. Not concocted.
Distilled waters will last longer than raw waters. Bacon.
RA'WBONED. adj. [raw and bone.] Having bones scarcely covered with flesh.
Lean rawbon'd rascals! who would e'er suppose
They had such courage. Shakep. Henry VI. p. i.
The wolf was content to barter away a rawboned carcass for a smooth and fat one. L'Estrange.
RA'WHEAD. n. f. [raw and head.] The name of a spectre, mentioned to fright children.
Hence draw thy theme, and to the stage permit
Rawhead and bloody bones, and hands and feet, Ragouts for Tereus or Thyestes drest. Dryden.
Servants awe children, and keep them in subjection, by telling them of rawhead and bloodybones. Locke.
RA'WLY. adv. [from raw.]
1. In a raw manner.
2. Unskillfully.
3. Newly.
Some crying for a surgeon, some upon the debts they owe, some upon their children rawly left. Shakep. Henry V.
RA'WNESS. n. f. [from raw.]
1. State of being raw.
Chalk helpeth concoction, so it be out of a deep well; for then it cureth the rawness of the water. Bacon.
2. Unskillfulness.
Charles V. considering the rawness of his seamen, established a pilot major for their examination. Hakewill.
3. Hasty manner. This seems to be the meaning in this obscure passage.
Why in that rawness left he wife and children, Without leave taking. Shakep. Macbeth.

REA

RAY. n. f. [raie, rayon, Fr. radius, Lat.]
 1. A beam of light.
 These eyes that roll in vain
 To find thy piercing ray, and find no dawn.
 The least light, or part of light, which may be stop alone, or do or suffer any thing alone, which the rest of the light doth not or suffers not, I call a ray of light.
 2. Any lustre corporeal or intellectual.
 The air sharpen'd his visual ray.
 3. [Raye, Fr. raie, Lat.] A fish.
 4. [Lolium, Lat.] An herb.
 To RAY. v. a. [raye, Fr. from the noun.] To streak; to mark in long lines. An old word.
 Beside a bubbling fountain low the lay,
 Which she increased with her bleeding heart,
 And the clean waves with purple gore did ray. Fa. Qu.
 His horse is rayed with the yellows.
 Was ever man so beaten? was ever men so rayed? was ever man so weary?
RAY, for array.
RAZE. n. f. [rayz, a root, Spanish.] A root of ginger. This is commonly written race, but less properly.
 I have a gammon of bacon and two razes of ginger to be delivered.
 To RAZE. v. a. [razer, Fr. rafus, Lat.] See RASE.
 1. To overthrow; to ruin; to subvert.
 Will you suffer a temple, how poorly built soever, but yet a temple of your deity, to be razed.
 He yokes your rebellious necks,
Razeth your cities, and subverts your towns.
 It grieved the tyrant, that so base a town should so long hold out, so that he would threaten to raze it.
 Shed christian blood, and populous cities raze;
 Because they're taught to use some diff'rent phrase.
 We touch'd with joy
 The royal hand that raz'd unhappy Troy.
 The place would be razed to the ground, and its foundations frown with salt.
 2. To efface.
 Fatal this marriage; cancelling your fame,
Razing the characters of your renown.
 Pluck from the memory a rooted sorrow,
Raze out the written troubles of the brain.
 He in derision sets
 Upon their tongues a various spirit, to raze
 Quite out their native language; and instead,
 To sow a jangling noise of words.
 3. To extirpate.
 I'll find a day to massacre them all,
 And raze their faction and their family.
RAZOR. n. f. [razer, Lat.] A knife with a thick blade and fine edge used in shaving.
 Zeal, except order'd aright, useth the razor with such eagerness, that the life of religion is thereby hazarded.
 These words are razors to my wounded heart.
 Those thy boist'rous locks, not by the sword
 Of noble warrior, so to stain his honour,
 But by the barber's razor best subdu'd.
 All our lords are by his wealth outv'd,
 Whose razor on my callow beard was try'd.
 Razor makers generally clap a small bar of Venice steel between two small bars of Flemish steel, and weld them together, to strengthen the back of the razor.
RAZOURABLE. adj. [from razor.] Fit to be shaved. Not in use.
 New-born chins be rough and razourable.
RAZORFISH. n. f.
 The sheath or razorfish resembleth in length and bigness a man's finger.
RAZURE. n. f. [rasure, Fr. rasura, Latin.] Act of erasing.
 Oh! your desert speaks loud;
 It well deserves with characters of brags
 A fortified residence, 'gainst the tooth of time
 And razure of oblivion.
RE. Is an inseparable particle used by the Latins, and from them borrowed by us to denote iteration or backward action:
 as, return, to come back; to revive, to live again; reper- cussion, the act of driving back.
REACCESS. n. f. [re and access.] Visit renewed.
 Let pass the quailing and withering of all things by the recels, and their reviving by the reaccess of the sun.
 To REACH. v. a. ancient preterite raecht. [racan, Saxon.]
 1. To touch with the hand extended.
 What are riches, empire, pow'r,
 But larger means to gratify the will;
 The steps by which we climb to rise and reach
 Our wish, and that obtained, down with a scaffolding
 Of scepters, crowns and thrones: they've serv'd their end,
 And there like lumber to be left and scorn'd.
 2. To arrive at; to attain any thing distant; to strike from a distance.
 Round the tree
 They longing rood, but could not reach.
 O patron pow'r, thy present aid afford,
 That I may reach the beast.

REA

The coast so long desir'd
 Thy troops shall reach, but having reach'd, repent.
 What remains beyond this, we have no more a positive notion of, than a mariner has of the depth of the sea; where, having let down his sounding-line, he reaches no bottom. Locke.
 It must fall perhaps before this letter reaches your hands.
 3. To fetch from some place distant, and give.
 He reached me a full cup.
 4. To bring forward from a distant place.
 Reach hither thy finger, and behold my hands; and reach hither thy hand, and thrust it into my side.
 5. To hold out; to stretch forth.
 These kinds of goodness are so nearly united to the things which desire them, that we scarcely perceive the appetite to stir in reaching forth her hand towards them.
 When thou fittest among many, reach not thine hand out first.
 6. To attain; to gain; to obtain.
 The best accounts of the appearances of nature, which human penetration can reach, comes short of its reality.
 7. To transfer.
 Through such hands
 The knowledge of the gods is reach'd to man.
 8. To penetrate to.
 Whatever alterations are made in the body, if they reach not the mind, there is no perception.
 9. To be adequate to.
 The law reached the intention of the promoters, and this act fixed the natural price of money.
 If these examples of grown men reach not the case of children, let them examine.
 10. To extend to.
 Thy desire leads to no excess that reaches blame.
 Her imprecations reach not to the tomb,
 They shut not out society in death.
 11. To extend; to spread abroad.
 Trees reach'd too far their pamper'd boughs.
 To REACH. v. n.
 1. To be extended.
 We hold that the power which the church hath lawfully to make laws doth extend unto sundry things of ecclesiastical jurisdiction, and such other matters whereto their opinion is, that the church's authority and power doth not reach.
 The new world reaches quite cross the torrid zone in one tropic to the other.
 When men pursue their thoughts of space, they are apt to stop at the confines of body, as if space were there at an end too, and reached no farther.
 If I do not ask any thing improper, let me be buried by Theodosius; my vow reaches no farther than the grave.
 The influence of the stars reaches to many events, which are not in the power of reason.
 2. To be extended far.
 Great men have reaching hands.
 3. To penetrate.
 He hath delivered them into your hand, and ye have slain them in a rage, that reaches up into heaven.
 We reach forward into futurity, and bring up to our thoughts objects hid in the remotest depths of time.
 4. To make efforts to attain.
 Could a sailor always supply new line, and find the plummet sink without stopping, he would be in the posture of the mind, reaching after a positive idea of infinity.
 5. To take in the hand.
 Left he reach of the tree of life, and eat.
REACH. n. f. [from the verb.]
 1. Act of reaching or bringing by extension of the hand.
 2. Power of reaching or taking in the hand.
 There may be in a man's reach a book containing pictures and discourses, capable to delight and instruct him, which yet he may never have the will to open.
 3. Power of attainment or management.
 In actions, within the reach of power in him, a man seems as free as it is possible for freedom to make him.
 4. Power; limit of faculties.
 Our fight may be considered as a more diffusive kind of touch, that brings into our reach some of the most remote parts of the universe.
 Be sure yourself and your own reach to know,
 How far your genius, taste and learning go.
 5. Contrivance; artful scheme; deep thought.
 Drawn by others, who had deeper reaches than themselves to matters which they least intended.
 Some, under types, have affected obscurity to amuse and make themselves admired for profound reaches.

8. Extent.
 The confines met of empyrean heav'n,
 And of this world: and, on the left hand, hell
 With long reach interpos'd.
 To REACT. v. a. [re and act.] To return the impulse or impression.
 The lungs being the chief instrument of sanguification, and acting strongly upon the chyle to bring it to an animal fluid, must be reacted upon as strongly.
 Cut off your hand, and you may do
 With t'other hand the work of two;
 Because the soul her power contracts,
 And on the brother limb reacts.
REACTION. n. f. [reaction, Fr. from react.] The reciprocation of any impulse or force impressed, made by the body on which such impression is made: action and reaction are equal.
 Do not great bodies conserve their heat the longest, their parts heating one another; and may not great, dense and fixed bodies, when heated beyond a certain degree, emit light so copiously, as, by the emission and reaction of its light, and the reflexions and refractions of its rays within its pores, to grow still hotter till it comes to a certain period of heat, such as is that of the sun?
 Alimentary substances, of a mild nature, act with small force upon the solids, and as the action and reaction are equal, the smallest degree of force in the solids digests them.
READ. v. n. [read, Saxon; raed, Dutch.]
 1. Council.
 The man is blest that hath not lent
 To wicked read his ear.
 2. Saying; saw.

 They remained near a month, that they might be in readi- ness to attend the motion of the army.
 3. Facility; freedom from hindrance or obstruction.
 Nature has provided for the readiness and easiness of speech.
 4. State of being willing or prepared.
 A pious and well-disposed mind, attended with a readiness to obey the known will of God, is the surest means to enlighten the understanding to a belief of christianity.
 Their conviction grew so strong, that they embraced the same truths, and laid down their lives, or were always in a readiness to do it, rather than depart from them.
READMISSION. n. f. [re and admission.] The act of admitting again.
 In an exhausted receiver, animals, that seem as they were dead, revive upon the readmission of fresh air.
 To READMIT. v. a. [re and admit.] To let in again.

 To READORN. v. a. [re and adorn.] To decorate again;
 to deck a new.
 The streams now change their languid blue,
 Regain their glory, and their fame renew,
 With scarlet honours readorn the tide.
READY. adj. [raed, Saxon; raed, Swedish; hpaed, nimble, Saxon.]
 1. Prompt; not delayed.
 These commodities yield the readiest money of any in this kingdom, because they never fail of a price abroad.
 He overlook'd his hind; their pay was just
 And ready: for he scorn'd to go on truft.
 2. Fit for a purpose; not to seek.
 All things are ready, if our minds be so.
 —Perish the man whose mind is backward now!
 Make you ready your stiff bats and clubs;
 Rome and her rats are at the point of battle.
 One hand the sword, and one the pen employs,
 And in my lap the ready paper lies.
 The sacred priests with ready knives bereave
 The beasts of life, and in full bowls receive
 The streaming blood.
 3. Prepared; accommodated to any design, so as that there can be no delay.
 Trouble and anguish shall prevail against him, as a king ready to the battle.
 Death ready stands to interpose his dart.
 The word which I have giv'n, I'll not revoke;
 If he be brave, he's ready for the stroke.
 The imagination is always restless, and the will, reason being laid aside, is ready for every extravagant project.
 4. Willing; eager.
 Men, when their actions succeed not as they would, are always ready to impute the blame thereof unto the heavens, so as to excuse their own follies.

clear old debts. Arbuthnot's History of John Bull.
- REAFFIRMANCE. n. f. [re and affirmation.] Second confirmation.
Causes of deprivation are a conviction before the ordinary of a wilful maintaining any doctrine contrary to the thirty-nine articles, or a persisting therein without revocation of his error, or a reaffirmance after such revocation. Ayliffe.
- REAL. adj. [real, Fr. realis, Latin.]
1. Relating to things not persons; not personal.
Many are perfect in men's humours, that are not greatly capable of the real part of business; which is the constitution of one that hath studied men more than books. Bacon.
2. Not fictitious; not imaginary; true; genuine.
We do but describe an imaginary world, that is but little a-kin to the real one. Glanvill's Scops.
When I place an imaginary name at the head of a character, I examine every letter of it, that it may not bear any resemblance to one that is real. Addison.
3. In law, consisting of things immoveable, as land.
I am hastening to convert my small estate, that is personal, into real. Child's Discourse of Trade.
- REALGAR. n. f. A mineral.
Realgar or sandaracha is red arsenick. Harris.
Put realgar hot into the midst of the quicksilver, whereby it may be condensed as well from within as without. Bacon.
- REALITY. n. f. [realité, Fr. from real.]
1. Truth; verity; what is, not what merely seems.
I would have them well versed in the Greek and Latin poets, without which a man fancies that he understands a critic, when in reality he does not comprehend his meaning.
Addison's Spectator, N° 291.
2. The best accounts of the appearances of nature in any single instance human penetration can reach, comes infinitely short of its reality and internal constitution; for who can search out the Almighty's works to perfection? Cheyne.
3. Something intrinsically important; not merely matter of show.
Of that skill the more thou know'st,
The more she will acknowledge thee her head,
And to realities yield all her shows,
Made so adorn for thy delight the more. Milton.
- TO REALIZE. v. a. [realiser, Fr. from real.]
1. To bring into being or act.
Thus we realize what Archimedes had only in hypothesis, weighing a single grain against the globe of earth. Glanvill.
As a Diocesan, you are like to exemplify and realize every word of this discourse. South.
2. To convert money into land.
REALLY. adv. [from real.]
1. With actual existence.
There cannot be a more important case of conscience for men to be resolved in, than to know certainly how far God accepts the will for the deed, and how far he does not; and to be informed truly when men do really will a thing, and when they have really no power to do, what they have willed. South.
2. In truth; truly; not seemingly.
The understanding represents to the will things really evil, under the notion of good. South.

Of ev'ry realm, that did debate this business. Shakespeare.
A son whose worthy deeds
Raife him to be the second in that realm. Milton.
 2. Kingly government. This sense is not frequent.
Learn each small people's genius, policies,
The ant's republick, and the realm of bees. Pope.
 - REALTY. n. f. [a word peculiar, I believe, to Milton.] Really means not in this place reality in opposition to show, but loyalty; for the Italian Dictionary explains the adjective reale by loyal. Pearce on Milton.
O heaven, that such resemblance of the highest Should yet remain, where faith and reality Remain not. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. vi.
 - REAM. n. f. [rame, Fr. riem, Dutch.] A bundle of paper containing twenty quires.
All vain petitions mounting to the sky,
With reams abundant this abode supply. Pope.
 - TO REANIMATE. v. a. [re and animo, Lat.] To revive; to restore to life.
We are our reanimated ancestors, and antedate their resurrection. Glanvill's Scops.

while that of the doe was reanimated. Speccator, N° 578.
 - TO REANNE'X. v. a. [re and annex.] To annex again.
King Charles was not a little inflamed with an ambition to repurchase and reanne'x that dutchy. Bacon's Henry VII.
 - TO REAP. v. a. [repan, Saxon.]
1. To cut corn at harvest.
From Ireland come I with my strength,
And reap the harvest which that rascal sow'd. Shakespeare.
When ye reap the harvest, thou shalt not wholly reap the corners of thy field. Lev. xix. 9.
The hire of the labourers, which have reaped down your fields, is kept back by fraud. Ja. v. 5.
Is it fitting in this very field,
Where I so oft have reap'd, so oft have till'd,
That I should die for a deserter? Gay.
 2. To gather; to obtain.
They that love the religion which they profess, may have failed in choice, but yet they are sure to reap what benefit the same is able to afford. Hooker.
What furnish anger's this? how have I reap'd it? Shak.
This is a thing,
Which you might from relation likewise reap,
Being much spoke of. Shakespeare. Cymbeline.
Our sins being ripe, there was no preventing of God's justice from reaping that glory in our calamities, which we robbed him of in our prosperity. King Charles.
 - TO REAP. v. n. To harvest.
They that sow in tears, shall reap in joy. Psal. cxxvi. 5.
 - REAPER. n. f. [from reap.] One that cuts corn at harvest.
Your ships are not well mann'd,
Your mariners are multiteers, people
Ingross'd by swift impress. Shakespeare. Ant. and Cleop.
From hungry reapers they their sheaves withhold. Sand.
Here Ceres' gifts in waving prospect stand,
And nodding tempt the joyful reaper's hand. Pope.
A thousand forms he wears,
And first a reaper from the field appears,
Sweating he walks, while loads of golden grain O'ercharge the shoulders of the seeming swain. Pope.
 - REAPINGHOOK. n. f. [reaping and hook.] A hook used to cut corn in harvest.
Some are brib'd to vow it looks
Most plainly done by thieves with reapinghooks. Dryden.
 - REAR. n. f. [arriere, French.]
1. The hinder troop of an army, or the hinder line of a fleet.
The rear admiral, an arch pirate, was afterwards slain with a great shot. Knolles's History of the Turks.
Argive chiefs
Fled from his well-known face, with wonted fear,
As when his thund'ring sword and pointed spear Drove headlong to their ships, and glean'd the rear. Dryd.
Snowy headed winter leads,
Yellow autumn brings the rear. Waller.
 2. The last class.
Coins I place in the rear, because made up of both the other. Peacbam.
 - REAR. adj. [hnepe, Saxon.]
1. Raw; half roasted; half sodden.
2. Early. A provincial word.
O'er yonder hill does scant the dawn appear,
Then why does Cuddy leave his cot to rear? Gay.

REA

- TO REAR. v. a. [arapan, Saxon.]
1. To raise up.
All the people shouted with a loud voice, for the rearing up of the house of the Lord. 1 Esdr. v. 62.
Who now shall rear you to the sun, or rank
Your tribes. Milton.- 2. To lift up from a fall.
Down again the fell unto the ground,
But he her quickly rear'd up again. Fa. Queen, b. i.
In adoration at his feet I fell Submits: he rear'd me. Milton.
- 3. To move upwards.
Up to a hill anon his steps he rear'd,
From whose high top to ken the prospect round. Milton.
- 4. To bring up to maturity.
No creature goeth to generate, whilst the female is busy in fitting or rearing her young. Bacon's Natural History.
They were a very hardy breed, and reared their young ones without any care. Mortimer's Husbandry.
They flourish'd long in tender bliss, and rear'd
A numerous offspring, lovely like themselves. Thomson.
- 5. To educate; to instruct.
He wants a father to protect his youth,
And rear him up to virtue. South.
They have in every town publick nurseries, where all parents, except cottagers and labourers, are obliged to send their infants to be reared and educated. Swift.
- 6. To exalt; to elevate.
Charity decent, modest, easy, kind,
Softens the high, and rears the abject mind. Prior.
- 7. To rouse; to stir up.
Into the naked woods he goes,
And seeks the tusky boar to rear,
With well-mouth'd hounds and pointed spear. Dryden.
- REARWARD. n. f. [from rear.]
1. The last troop.
He from the beginning began to be in the rearward, and before they left fighting, was too far off. Sidney.
The standard of Dan was the rearward of the camp. Num.
- 2. The end; the tail; a train behind.
Why follow'd not, when the said Tybalt's dead,
Thy father or thy mother?
But with a rearward following Tybalt's death, Romeo is banished. Shakespeare. Romeo and Juliet.
- 3. The latter part. In contempt.
He was ever in the rearward of the fashion. Shakespeare.
- REARMOUSE. n. f. [more properly reremouse; hneymur, Sax.]
The leather-winged bat.
Some war with rearmice for their leathern wings
To make my small elves coats. Shakespeare.
Of flying fishes, the wings are not feathers, but a thin kind of skin, like the wings of a bat or rearmouse. Abbott.
- TO REASCEND. v. n. [re and ascend.] To climb again.
When as the day the heaven doth adorn,
I with that night the noyous day would end;
And when as night hath us of light forlorn,
I with that day would shortly reascend. Spenser.
Taught by the heav'nly muse to venture down
The dark descent, and up to reascend.
These puissant legions, whose exile
Hath empty'd heav'n, shall fail to reascend, Self-raisd, and repossess their native seat? Milton.
- TO REASCEND. v. a. To mount again.
When the god his fury had allay'd,
He mounts aloft, and reascends the skies. Addison.
- REASON. n. f. [raison, Fr. ratio, Lat.]
1. The power by which man deduces one proposition from another, or proceeds from premises to consequences; the rational faculty.
Reason is the director of man's will, discovering in action what is good; for the laws of well-doing are the dictates of right reason. Hooker, b. i. f. 7.
Though brutish that contest and foul,
When reason hath to deal with force; yet so
Most reason is that reason overcome. Milton.
Dim, as the borrow'd beams of moon and stars
To lonely, weary, wand'ring travellers,
Is reason to the soul: and as on high,
Those rowling fires discover but the sky,
Not light us here; so reason's glimmering ray
Was lent, not to assure our doubtful way,
But guide us upward to a better day. Dryden.
It would be well, if people would not lay so much weight on their own reason in matters of religion, as to think every thing impossible and absurd, which they cannot conceive:
how often do we contradict the right rules of reason in the whole course of our lives? reason itself is true and just, but the reason of every particular man is weak and wavering, perpetually swayed and turn'd by his interests, his passions and his vices. Swift's Miscellanies.
- 2. Cause; ground or principle.
Virtue and vice are not arbitrary things, but there is a natural and eternal reason for that goodness and virtue, and against vice and wickedness. Tillotson.

REA

3. Cause efficient.
Spain is thin sown of people, partly by reason of the sterility of the soil, and partly their natives are exhausted by so many employments in such vast territories as they possess. Bac.
The reason of the motion of the balance in a wheel watch, is by the motion of the next wheel. Hale.
By reason of the sickness of a reverend prelate, I have been overruled to approach this place. Spens.
I have not observed equality of numbers in my verse;
partly by reason of my haste, but more especially because I would not have my sense a slave to syllables. Dryden.
4. Final cause.
Reason, in the English language, sometimes is taken for true and clear principles; sometimes for clear and fair deductions; sometimes for the cause, particularly the final cause: but here for a faculty in man. Locke.
5. Argument; ground of persuasion; motive.
I mask the business from the common eye
For fondly weighty reasons. Shakespeare. Macbeth.
If it be natural, ought we not rather to conclude, that there is some ground and reason for these fears, and that nature hath not planted them in us to no purpose. Tillotson.
6. Ratiocination; discursive power.
When the rates things, and moves from ground to ground,
The name of reason she obtains by this;
But when by reason she the truth hath found,
And standeth fixt, the understanding is. Davies.
7. Clearness of faculties.
Lovers and madmen have their seething brains,
Such shap'ing fantasies that apprehend
More than cool reason ever comprehends. Shakespeare.
When valour preys on reason,
It eats the sword it fights with. Shakespeare. Ant. and Cleop.
8. Right; justice.
I was promis'd on a time,
To have reason for my rhyme:
From that time unto this season,
I receiv'd nor rhyme nor reason. Spenser.
Are you in earnest?
Ay, and resolv'd withal
To do myself this reason and this right. Shakespeare.
The papists ought in reason to allow them all the excuses they make use of for themselves; such as an invincible ignorance, oral tradition and authority. Stillingfleet.
Let it drink deep in thy most vital part;
Strike home, and do me reason in thy heart. Dryden.
9. Reasonable claim; just practice.
God brings good out of evil; and therefore it were but reason we should trust God to govern his own world, and wait till the change cometh, or the reason be discovered. Taylor.
Conscience, not acting by law, is a boundless presumptuous thing; and, for any one by virtue thereof, to challenge himself a privilege of doing what he will, and of being unaccountable, is in all reason too much, either for man or angel. South.
A severe reflection Montaigne has made on princes, that we ought not in reason to have any expectations of favour from them. Dryden's Dedication to Aurengzebe.
We have as great assurance that there is a God, as the nature of the thing to be proved is capable of, and as we could in reason expect to have. Tillotson's Preface.
When any thing is proved by as good arguments as a thing of that kind is capable of, we ought not in reason to doubt of its existence. Tillotson.
10. Rationale; just account.
To render a reason of an effect or phenomenon, is to deduce it from something else more known than itself. Boyle.
11. Moderation; moderate demands.
The most probable way of bringing France to reason, would be by the making an attempt upon the Spanish West Indies, and by that means to cut off all communication with this great source of riches. Addison.
- TO REASON. v. n. [raisonner, Fr.]
1. To argue rationally; to deduce consequences justly from premises.
No man, in the strength of the first grace, can merit the second; for reason they do not, who think so; unless a beggar, by receiving one alms, can merit another. South.
Ideas, as ranked under names, are those, that for the most part men reason of within themselves, and always those which they commune about with others. Locke.
Every man's reasoning and knowledge is only about the ideas existing in his own mind; and our knowledge and reasoning about other things is only as they correspond with those our particular ideas. Locke.
Love is not to be reason'd down, or lost
In high ambition. Addison.
In the lonely grove,
'Twas there just and good he reason'd strong,
Clear'd some great truth. Tickell.
2. To debate; to discourse; to talk; to take or give an account. Not in use.
Reason with the fellow,
Before you punish him, where he heard this. Shakespeare.

I reason'd with a Frenchman yesterday,
Who told me in the narrow seas,
There miscarried a vessel of our country. Shakefp.
Stand still, that I may reason with you of all the righteous acts of the Lord. Sam. xii. 7.

3. To raise disquisitions; to make enquiries.
Jesús, perceiving their thoughts, said, what reason ye in your hearts? Luke v. 22.

They reason'd high
Of providence, foreknowledge, will and fate. Milton.
Already by thy reasoning this I guess,
Who art to lead thy offspring; and supposest,
That bodies bright and greater should not serve
The less not bright. Milton.
Down reason then, at least vain reasoning down. Milt.

To REA'SON. v. a. To examine rationally. This is a French mode of speech.
When they are clearly discovered, well digested, and well reasoned in every part, there is beauty in such a theory. Burn.

REA'SONABLE. adj. [raison, Fr.]
1. Having the faculty of reason; endued with reason.
She perceived her only son lay hurt, and that his hurt was so deadly, as that already his life had lost use of the reasonable and almost sensible part. Sidney.

2. Acting, speaking or thinking rationally.
The parliament was dissolved, and gentlemen furnished with such forces, as were held sufficient to hold in bridle either the malice or rage of reasonable people. Hayward.

3. Just; rational; agreeable to reason.
A law may be reasonable in itself, although a man does not allow it, or does not know the reason of the lawgivers. Swift.

4. Not immoderate.
Let all things be thought upon,
That may with reasonable swiftness add
More feathers to our wings. Shakefp. Henry V.

5. Tolerable; being in mediocrity.
I could with reasonable good manner receive the salutation of her and of the prince's Pamela, doing them yet no further reverence than one prince's oweth to another. Sidney.
A good way distant from the nigra rupes, there are four feveral lands of reasonable quantity. Abbot's Descrip. of the World.
Notwithstanding these defects, the English colonies maintained themselves in a reasonable good estate, as long as they retained their own ancient laws. Davies on Ireland.

REA'SONABLENESS. n. f. [from reasonable.]
1. The faculty of reason.
2. Agreeableness to reason.
They thought the work would be better done, if those, who had satisfied themselves with the reasonableness of what they wish, would undertake the converting and disposing of other men. Clarendon.

The passive reason, which is more properly reasonableness, is that order and congruity which is impressed upon the thing thus wrought; as in a watch, the whole frame and contexture of it carries a reasonableness in it, the passive impression of the reason or intellectual idea that was in the artist. Hale.

3. Moderation.
REA'SONABLY. adv. [from reasonable.]
1. Agreeably to reason.
Chaucer makes Arcite violent in his love, and unjust in the pursuit of it; yet when he came to die, he made him think more reasonably. Dryden's Preface to Fables.

2. Moderately; in a degree reaching to mediocrity.
Some man reasonably studied in the law, should be persuaded to go thither as chancellor. Bacon's Advice to Villiers.
If we can by industry make our deaf and dumb persons rea- sonably perfect in the language and pronunciation, he may be also capable of the same privilege of understanding by the eye what is spoken. Holder's Elements of Speech.

REA'SONER. n. f. [raisonneur, Fr. from reason.] One who reasons; an arguer.
Due reverence pay
To learn'd Epicurus; see the way
By which this reasoner of so high renown Moves through th' ecliptick road the rolling sun. Blackm.
The terms are loose and undefined; and what less becomes a fair reasoner, he puts wrong and invidious names on every thing to colour a false way of arguing. Addison.
Those reasoners, who employ so much of their zeal for the upholding the balance of power in Christendom, by their practices are endeavouring to destroy it at home. Swift.

REA'SONING. n. f. [from reason.] Argument.
Those who would make use of solid arguments and strong reasonings to a reader of so delicate a turn, would be like that foolish people, who worshipped a fly, and sacrificed an ox to it.
Addison's Freeholder, No 32.

REA'SONLESS. adj. [from reason.] Void of reason.
This proffer is absurd and reasonless. Shakefp. Hen. VI.
Is it
Her true perfection, or my false transgression,
That makes me reasonless to reason thus? Shakefp.
That they wholly direct the reasonless mind, I am resolved;
for all those which were created mortal, as birds and beasts, are left to their natural appetites. Raleigh's Hist. of the World.

REB

These reasons in love's law have past for good,
Though fond and reasonless to some. Milton's Agonistes.

To REASSEMBLE. v. a. [re and assemble.] To collect anew.
There reassembling our afflicted powers,
Consult how to offend our enemy. Milton.

To manly years should reassert the throne. Pope.

To REASSU'ME. v. a. [reassumo, Lat. re and assume.] To resume; to take again.
To him the son return'd
Into his blissful bosom reassum'd,
In glory as of old. Milton.
Nor only on the Trojans fell this doom,
Their hearts at last the vanquish'd reassum'd. Denham.

For this he reassumes the nod,
While Semele commands the god. Prior.

After Henry VIII. had reassumed the supremacy, a statute was made, by which all doctors of the civil law might be made chancellors. Ayliffe's Parergon.

To REASSU'RE. [reassurer, Fr.] To free from fear; to restore from terror.
They rose with fear,
Till dauntless Pallas reassur'd the rest. Dryden.

REATE. n. f. A kind of long small grass that grows in water, and complicates itself together.
Let them lie dry six months to kill the water-weeds; as water-lilies, candoes, reate and bulrushes. Walton.

To REAVE. v. a. pret. reft. [reapian, Saxon; whence to berave.]
1. To take away by stealth or violence. An obsolete word.
Dismounting from his lofty steed,
He to him leapt, in mind to reave his life. Spenser.
Some make his mealish bed, but reave his rest. Carew.
Who can be bound by any solemn vow,
To do a murder's deed, to rob a man,
To force a spotless virgin's chastity,
To reave the orphan of his patrimony,
And have no other reason for his wrong,
But that he was bound by a solemn oath. Shakefp. Hen. VI.

2. It was used as well in a good as bad sense.
They fought my troubled sense how to deceive
With talk, that might unquiet fancies reave. Hubbard.
Each succeeding time addeth or reaveth goods and evils, according to the occasions itself produceth. Carew.

To REBAPTIZE. v. a. [rebaptizer, Fr. re and baptize.] To baptize again.
Understanding that the rites of the church were observed, he approved of their baptism, and would not suffer them to be rebaptized. Ayliffe's Parergon.

REBAPTIZATION. n. f. [rebaptisation, Fr. from rebaptize.]
Renewal of baptism.
In maintenance of rebaptization, their arguments are built upon this, that heretics are not any part of the church of Christ. Hooker, b. iii. f. i.

To REBA'TE. v. n. [rebatte, Fr.] To blunt; to beat to obtuseness; to deprive of keenness.
He doth rebatte and blunt his natural edge
With profits of the mind, study and fast. Shakefp.
The icy goat, the crab which square the scales;
With those of aries trine consent to hate
The scales of libra, and her rays rebatte. Creech.
He modifies his first severe decree;
The keener edge of battle to rebatte,
The troops for honour fighting, not for hate.
My flagging soul flies under her own pitch,
My senses too are dull and stupify'd,
Their edge rebatte. Dryden's Don Sebastian.

Their innocence unfeign'd long joys afford
To the honest nuptial bed, and, in the wane
Of life, rebatte the miseries of age. Philips.

REBECK. n. f. [rebec, Fr. rebecca, Italian.] A three stringed fiddle.
When the merry bells ring round,
And the jocund rebecks sound,
To many a youth and many a maid,
Dancing in the checker'd shade. Milton.

REBEL. n. f. [rebelle, Fr. rebellis, Lat.] One who opposes lawful authority.
The merciless Macdonel Worthy to be a rebel; for to that
The multiplying villainies of nature
Do swarm upon him. Shakefp. Macbeth.

The rebels there are up,
And put the Englishmen unto the sword. Shakefp.
Shall man from nature's sanction stray,
A rebel to her rightful sway. Fenton.

To REBEL. v. n. [rebellis, Lat.] To rise in opposition against lawful authority.
Boys, immature in knowledge,
Pawn their experience to their present pleasure,
And so rebel to judgment. Shakefp. Ant. and Cleopatra.

REB

If they perceive dissention in our looks,
How will their grudging stomachs be provok'd
To wilful disobedience, and rebel? Shakefp. Henry VI.
Such smiling rogues as these foeth every passion,
That in the nature of their lords rebels;
Bring out to fire. Shakefp. King Lear.
There was a time, when all the body's members Rebell'd against the belly. Shakefp. Coriolanus.
Arm'd with thy might, rid heav'n of these rebell'd. Milt.
How cou'd my hand rebel against my heart?
How cou'd your heart rebel against your reason? Dryden.
Part of the angels rebelled against God, and thereby lost their happy state. Locke.

REBELLER. n. f. [from rebel.] One that rebels. Dict.

REBELLION. n. f. [rebellion, Fr. rebellis, Lat. from rebel.]

He was victorious in rebellions and seditions of people. Bac.
Adam's sin, or the curse upon it, did not deprive him of his rule, but left the creatures to the rebellion or sedition.
Bacon's Holy War.

Raz'd by rebellion from the books of life. Milton.

REBELLIOUS. adj. [from rebel.] Opponent to lawful authority.
From the day that thou didst depart out of Egypt, until ye came unto this place, ye have been rebellious against the Lord. Deutr. ix. 7.
This our son is stubborn and rebellious, he will not obey our voice. Deutr. xxi. 20.

REBELLIOUSLY. adv. [from rebellious.] In opposition to lawful authority.
When one shewed him where a nobleman, that had rebel- lously born arms against him, lay very honourably intomb'd, and advised the king to deface the monument; he said, no, no, but I would all the rest of mine enemies were as honourably intomb'd. Camden's Remains.

REBELLIOUSNESS. n. f. [from rebellious.] The quality of being rebellious.
To REBELLOW. v. n. [re and bellow.] To bellow in return;

or a rebounding echo from the hollow mountains. Wisd. xvii.
It with rebounding fuge the bars assail'd. Milton.
Life and death are in the power of the tongue, and that not only directly with regard to the good or ill we may do to others, but reflexively with regard to what may rebound to ourselves. Government of the Tongue.
Bodies which are absolutely hard, or so soft as to be void of elasticity, will not rebound from one another: impenetra-bility makes them only stop. Newton's Opticks.
She bounding from the shelly shore,
Round the descending nymph the waves rebounding roar. Po.

To REBOUND. v. a. To reverbate; to beat back.
All our invectives, at their supposed errors, fall back with a rebounding force upon our own real ones. Decay of Piety.
Silenus sung, the vales his voice rebound,
And carry to the skies the sacred sound. Dryden.
Flow'rs, by the soft South West
Open'd, and gather'd by religious hands, Rebound their sweets from th' odoriferous pavement. Prior.

REBOUND. n. f. [from the verb.] The act of flying back in consequence of motion resisted; restitution.
I do feel,
By the rebound of yours, a grief that shoots
My very heart. Shakefp. Antony and Cleopatra.
If you strike a ball sidelong, not full upon the surface, the rebound will be as much the contrary way; whether there be any such resilience in echoes may be tried. Bacon.
The weapon with unerring fury flew,
At his left shoulder aim'd: nor entrance found;
But back, as from a rock, with swift rebound, Harmless return'd. Dryden.

REBU'FF. n. f. [rebuffade, Fr. rebuffe, Italian.] Repercussion; quick and sudden resistance.
By ill chance
The strong rebuff of some tumultuous cloud,
Infus'd with fire and nitre, hurried him
As many miles aloft. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. ii.

pined against, because they were assigned to the rebuilding and repairing of St. Paul's church. Clarendon.

Fine is the secret, delicate the art,
To raise the shades of heroes to our view;
Rebuild fall'n empires, and old time renew. Tickell.

REBU'KABLE. adj. [from rebuke.] Worthy of reprehension.
Rebukable
And worthy shameful check it were, to stand
On mere mechanick compliment. Shakefp. Ant. and Cleop.

To REBU'KE. v. a. [reboucher, Fr.] To chide; to reprehend;
to repress by oburgation.
I am alham'd; does not the stone rebukey me,
For being more stone than it? Shakefp. Winter's Tale.
He was rebuked for his iniquity; the dumb ass, speaking with man's voice, forbade the madness of the prophet. 2 Pet.
My son, despite not thou the chastening of the Lord, nor faint when thou art rebuked of him. Heb. xii. 15.
The proud he tam'd, the penitent he cheer'd,
Nor to rebukey the rich offender fear'd. Dryden.

REBU'KE. n. f. [from the verb.]
1. Reprehension; chiding expression; oburgation.
Why bear you these rebukes, and answer not? Shakefp.
If he will not yield,
Rebuke and dread correction wait on us,
And they shall do their office. Shakefp. Henry IV.
The channels of waters were seen; at thy rebuke, O Lord, at the blast of the breath of thy nostrils. Psaln xviii. 15.
Thy rebuke hath broken my heart; I am full of heaviness. Psaln lxxix. 21.

REBUS. n. f. [rebus, Latin.] A word represented by a picture.
Some citizens, wanting arms, have coined themselves certain devices alluding to their names, which we call rebuses:
Master Juggle the printer, in many of his books, took, to express his name, a nightingale sitting in a bush with a scrole in her mouth, wherein was written juggle, juggle, juggle. Peac.

To REBU'T. v. n. [rebuter, Fr.] To retire back. Obsolete.
Themselves too rudely rigorous,
Astonied with the stroke of their own hand,
Do back rebut, and each to other yielded land. Fa. Queen.

REBU'TTER. n. f. An answer to a rejoinder.
To RECALL. v. a. [re and call.] To call back; to call again;
to revoke.
They who recall the church unto that which was at the first, must set bounds unto their speeches. Hooker, b. iv. f. 2.
If Henry were recall'd to life again,
These news would cause him once more yield the ghost. Shakefp. Henry VI. p. i.
Neglected long, she let the secret rest,
Till lov'd recall'd it to her lab'ring breast. Dryden.
It is strange the soul should never once recall over any of its pure native ideas, before it borrowed any thing from the body; never any other ideas, but what derive their original from that union. Locke.
To the churches, wherein they were ordained, they might of right be recalled as to their proper church, under pain of excommunication. Ayliffe's Parergon.
It is necessary to recall to the reader's mind, the desire Ulysses has to reach his own country. Brycne's Notes on Odys.
If princes, whose dominions lie contiguous, be forced to draw from those armies which act against France, we must hourly expect having those troops recalled, which they now leave with us in the midst of a siege. Swift's Miscellanies.

RECALL. n. f. [from the verb.] Revocation; act or power of calling back.
Other decrees
Against thee are gone forth, without recall. Milton.

2. The state of being received.
3. Admission of any thing communicated.
Causes, according still
To the reception of their matter, act;
Not to th' extent of their own sphere. Milton's Par. Lost.
In some animals, the avenues, provided by nature for the reception of sensations, are few, and the perception, they are received with, obscure and dull. Locke.

4. Readmission.
All hope is lost. Milton's Par. Lost.
Of my reception into grace.

5. The act of containing.
I cannot survey this world of fluid matter, without thinking on the hand that first poured it out, and made a proper channel for its reception. Addison.

6. Treatment at first coming; welcome; entertainment.
This succession of so many powerful methods being farther prescribed by God, have found to discouraging a reception, that nothing but the violence of storming or battery can pretend to prove successful. Hammond's Fundamentals.
Pretending to consult
About the great reception of their kings, Thither to come. Milton.

7. Opinion generally admitted.
Philosophers, who have quitted the popular doctrines of their countries, have fallen into as extravagant opinions, as even common reception countenanced. Locke.

8. Recovery.
He was right glad of the French king's reception of those towns from Maximilian. Bacon's Henry VII.

RECEP'TIVE. adj. [receptus, Lat.] Having the quality of admitting what is communicated.
The soul being, as it is active, perfected by love of that infinite good, shall, as it is receptive, be also perfected with those supernatural passions of joy, peace and delight. Hooker.
The pretended first matter is capable of all forms, and the imaginary space is receptive of all bodies. Glanvill.

RECEP'TORY. adj. [receptus, Lat.] Generally or popularly admitted.
Although therein be contained many excellent things, and verified upon his own experience, yet are there many also receptory, and will not endure the test. Brown.

RECE'SS. n. f. [recessus, Latin.]
1. Retirement; retreat; withdrawing; secession.

To RECHARGE. v. a. [recharger, Fr. re and charge.]

1. To accuse in return.
The fault, that we find with them; is, that they over-much abridge the church of her power in these things: whereupon they recharge us, as if in these things we gave the church a liberty, which hath no limits or bounds. Hooker.

2. To attack anew.
They charge, recharge, and all along the sea

They drive, and squander the huge Belgian fleet. Dryden.
RECHARGE. n. f. Among hunters, a lesson which the huntman winds on the horn, when the hounds have lost their game, to call them back from pursuing a counterfence. Bail.

That a woman conceived me, I thank her; but that I will have a recheat winded in my forehead, or hang my bugle in an invisible baldrick, all women shall pardon me. Shakespeare.

RECIDIVATION. n. f. [recidivus, Lat.] Backsliding; falling again.

Our renewed obedience is still most indispensably required, though mixed with much of weakness, frailties, recidivations, to make us capable of pardon. Hammond's Pract. Cat.

RECIDIVOUS. adj. [recidivus, Lat.] Subject to fall again.

RECIPE. n. f. [recipe, Lat. the term used by physicians, when they direct ingredients.] A medical prescription.

I should enjoin you travel; for abstinence doth in a kind remove the cause, and answers the physicians first recipe, vomiting and purging; but this would be too harsh. Suckling.

The apothecary train is wholly blind,
From many a random recipe they take,

And files a dozen recipe make. Dryden.

RECIPIENT. n. f. [recipiens, Latin.]

1. The receiver; that to which any thing is communicated.
Though the images, or whatever else is the cause of sense, may be alike as from the object, yet may the representations be varied according to the nature of the recipient. Glanvill.

2. [Recipient, Fr.] The vessel into which spirits are driven by the still.

The form of sound words, dissolved by chymical preparation, ceases to be nutritive; and after all the labours of the alembick, leaves in the recipient a fretting corrosive. D. of Pic.

RECIPROCAL. adj. [reciprocus, Lat. reciproque, Fr.]

1. Acting in vicissitude; alternate.

Corruption is reciprocal to generation; and they two are as nature's two boundaries, and guides to life and death. Bacon.

What if that light,
To the terrestrial moon be as a star,
Enlight'ning her by day, as the by night,
This earth? reciprocal, if land be there,
Fields and inhabitants. Milton.

2. Mutual; done by each to each.

Where there's no hope of a reciprocal aid, there can be no reason for the mutual obligation. L'Estrange.

In reciprocal duties, the failure on one side justifies not a failure on the other. Clarissa.

3. Mutually interchangeable.

These two rules will render a definition reciprocal with the thing defined; which, in the schools, signifies, that the definition may be used in the place of the thing defined. Watts.

4. In geometry, reciprocal proportion is, when, in four numbers, the fourth number is so much lesser than the second, as the third is greater than the first, and vice versa. Harris.

According to the laws of motion, if the bulk and activity of aliment and medicines are in reciprocal proportion, the effect will be the same. Arbutnot on Aliments.

RECIPROCALLY. adv. [from reciprocal.] Mutually; interchangeably.

His mind and place
Infesting one another reciprocally. Shakespeare. Henry VIII.

Make the bodies appear enlightened by the shadows which bound the light, which cause it to repose for some space of time; and reciprocally the shadows may be made sensible by enlightening your ground. Dryden.

If the distance be about the hundredth part of an inch, the water will rise to the height of about an inch; and if the distance be greater or less in any proportion, the height will be reciprocally proportional to the distance very nearly: for the attractive force of the glasses is the same, whether the distance between them be greater or less; and the weight of the water drawn up is the same, if the height of it be reciprocally proportional to the height of the glasses. Newton's Opticks.

Those two particles do reciprocally affect each other with the same force and vigour, as they would do at the same distance in any other situation. Bentley.

RECIPROCALNESS. n. f. [from reciprocal.] Mutual return; alternateness.

The reciprocalness of the injury ought to allay the displeasure at it. Decay of Piety.

To RECIPROCATE. v. n. [reciprocus, Lat. reciproque, Fr.]

That with fond terms and witle's words,
To bleer mine eyes doe'th think. Spenser.

Good or bad,
What do I reck, fith that he dy'd entire. Fairy Queen.

I reck as little what betideth me,
As much I wish all good befortune you. Shakespeare.

Of night or loneliness it recks me not;
I fear the dread events that dog them both,
Left some ill-greeting touch attempt the person
Of our unwon'd sister. Milton.

With that care lost
Went all his fear; of God, or hell or worse
He reck'd not. Milton.

To RECK. v. a. To heed; to care for.

This son of mine, not recking danger, and neglecting the present good way he was in of doing himself good, came hither to do this kind office to my unpeackable grief. Stany.

If I do lose thee, I do lose a thing,
That none but fools would reck. Shakespeare.

Do not you as ungracious parsons do,
Who shew the steep and thorny way to heav'n;
Yet like unthinking reckless libertines,
That in the soft path of dalliance treads,
Recks not his own rede. Shakespeare.

RECKLESS. adj. [from reck; reccleary, Saxon.] Careless; heedless; mindless; untouched. See RECK.

Numb'ring of his virtues praise,
Death lost the reckoning of his days. Crosbaw.

When are questions belonging to all finite existences by us reckoned from some known parts of this sensible world, and from some certain epochs marked out by motions in it. Locke.

The freezing of water, or the blowing of a plant, returning at equidistant periods, would as well serve men to reckon their years by, as the motions of the sun. Locke.

I reckoned above two hundred and fifty on the outside of the church, though I only told three sides of it. Addison.

Would the Dutch be content with the military government and revenues, and reckon it among what shall be thought necessary for their barrier? Swift's Miscellanies.

A multitude of cities are reckoned up by the geographers, particularly by Ptolemy. Arbutnot on Coins.

2. To esteem; to account.

Where we cannot be persuaded that the will of God is, we should far reject the authority of men, as to reckon it nothing. Hooker.

Varro's aviary is still so famous, that it is reckoned for one of those notables, which men of foreign nations record. Watts.

For him I reckon not in high estate;
But thee, whose strength, while virtue was her mate,
Might have subdu'd the earth. Milton's Agonistes.

People, young and raw, and soft-natured, are apt to think it an easy thing to gain love, and reckon their own friendship a sure price of another man's: but when experience shall have shewn them the hardness of most hearts, the hollowiness of others and the baseness of all, they will find that a friend is the gift of God, and that he only, who made hearts, can unite them. South's Sermons.

3. To assign in an account.

To him that worketh is the reward not reckoned of grace, but of debt. Romans iv. 4.

RECOINAGE. n. f. [re and coinage.] The act of coining anew.
The mint gained upon the late statute, by the recoining of groats and half-groats, now twopences and fixpences. Bac.
To RECOLLECT. v. a. [recollektus, Lat.]
1. To recover to memory.
It did relieve my passion much;
More than light airs and recollected terms
Of these most brisk and giddy-paced times. Shakespeare.
Recollet every day the things seen, heard, or read, which made any addition to your understanding. Watts's Logick.
2. To recover reason or resolution.
The Tyrian queen
Admir'd his fortunes, more admir'd the man;
Then recollected food. Dryden's Æneis.
3. To gather what is scattered; to gather again.
Now that God hath made his light radiate in his word, men may recollect those scattered divine beams, and kindling with them the topics proper to warm our affections, enflame holy zeal. Boyle.
RECOLLECTION. n. f. [from recollect.] Recovery of notion; revival in the memory.
Recollection is when an idea is fought after by the mind, and with pain and endeavour found, and brought again in view. Locke.

REC

- Let us take care that we sleep not without such a recollection of the actions of the day as may represent any thing that is remarkable, as matter of sorrow or thanksgiving. Taylor.
The last image of that troubled heap,
When sense subsides, and fancy sports in sleep,
Though past the recollection of the thought,
Becomes the stuff of which our dream is wrought. Pope.
To RECOMFORT. v. a. [re and comfort.]
1. To comfort or console again.
What place is there left, we may hope our woes to recomfort. Sidney, b. i.
Ne'er through an arch so hurried the blown tides,
As the recomforted through th' gates. Shakespeare. Coriolanus.
As one from sad dismay Recomforted, and, after thoughts disturb'd, Submitting to what seem'd remediless. Milton.
2. To give new strength.
In strawberries, it is usual to help the ground with muck; and likewise to recomfort it sometimes with muck put to the roots; but to water with muck water is not practised. Bacon.

This noble passion,
Child of integrity, hath from my soul
Wip'd the black scruples, reconcil'd my thoughts
To thy good truth and honour. Shakespeare.
Submit to Cæsar;
And reconcile thy mighty soul to life. Addison's Cato.
2. To make to be liked again.
Many wise men, who knew the treasurer's talent in removing prejudice, and reconciling himself to wavering affections, believ'd the loss of the duke was unseasonable. Clarendon.
He that has accustomed himself to take up with what easily offers itself, has reason to fear he shall never reconcile himself to the fatigue of turning things in his mind, to discover their more retired secrets. Locke.
2. To make any thing consistent.
The great men among the ancients understood how to reconcile manual labour with affairs of state. Locke.
Questions of right and wrong
Which though our consciences have reconciled,
My learning cannot answer. Southey's Spartan Dame.
Some figures monstrous and misshap'd appear, Consider'd singly, or beheld too near;
Which but proportion'd to their light or place,
Due distance reconciles to form and grace. Pope.
3. To restore to favour.
So thou shalt do for every one that ereth and is simple,
so shall ye reconcile the house. Ezek. xiv. 20.
Let him live before thee reconcil'd. Milton.
RECONCILEABLE. adj. [reconciliable, Fr. from reconcile.]
1. Capable of renewed kindness.
2. Consistent; possible to be made consistent.
What we did was against the dictates of our own conscience; and consequently never makes that act reconcileable with a regenerate estate, which otherwise would not be so. Hammond.
The different accounts of the numbers of ships are reconcileable, by supposing that some spoke of the men of war only, and others added the transports. Arbutnot.
The bones, to be the most convenient, ought to have been as light, as was reconcileable with sufficient strength. Cheyne.
RECONCILEABLENESS. n. f. [from reconcileable.]
1. Consistence; possibility to be reconciled.
The cylinder is an inanimate lifeless trunk, which hath nothing of choice or will in it; and therefore cannot be a fit resemblance to shew the reconcileableness of fate with choice. Hammond.
Discerning how the several parts of scripture are fitted to several times, persons and occurrences, we shall discover not only a reconcileableness, but a friendship and perfect harmony betwixt texts, that here seem most at variance. Boyle.
2. Disposition to renew love.
RECONCILEMENT. n. f. [from reconcile.]
1. Reconciliation; renewal of kindness; favour restored.
No cloud
Of anger shall remain; but peace assur'd
And reconciliation. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. iii.

Here in the court, of all he dies possess'd, Unto his son Lorenzo. Shakespeare.
Those things that are recorded of him and his impiety, are written in the chronicles. 1 Esdr. i. 42.
I call heaven and earth to record this day against you, that I have set before you life and death. Deut. xxx. 20.
They gave complex ideas names; that they might the more easily record and discourse of those things they were daily conversant in. Locke.
2. To celebrate; to cause to be remembered solemnly.
They long'd to see the day, to hear the lark,
Record her hymns, and chant her carols blest. Fairfax.
So ev'n and morn record'd the third day. Milton.
RECORD. n. f. [record, Fr. from the verb.] The accent of the noun is indifferently on either syllable; of the verb always on the last. Register; authentick memorial.
Is it upon record? or else reported Successively, from age to age? Shakespeare. Rich. III.
It cannot be
The Volcians dare break with us.
—We have record that very well it can;
And three examples of the like have been. Shakespeare.
The king made a record of these things, and Mardocheus wrote thereof. Ezra. xii. 4.
An ark, and in the ark his testimony,
The records of his covenant.
Of such a goddess no time leaves record,
Who burn'd the temple where she was ador'd. Dryden.
If he affirms such a monarchy continued to the flood, I would know what records he has it from. Locke.
Though the attested copy of a record be good proof, yet the copy of a copy never so well attested will not be admitted as a proof in judicature. Locke.
Thy elder look, great Janus! cast
Into the long records of ages past;
Review the years in fairest action dress'd. Prior.
RECORDATION. n. f. [recordatio, Lat.] Remembrance. Not in use.
I never shall have length of life enough,
To rain upon remembrance with mine eyes,
That it may grow and spout as high as heav'n
For recordation to my noble husband. Shakespeare. Henry IV.
Make a recordation to my soul
Of every syllable that here was spoke. Shakespeare.
A man of the primitive temper, when the church by lowliness did flourish in high examples, which I have inserted as a due recordation of his virtues, having been much obliged to him for many favours. Wotton.
REORDER. n. f. [from record.]
1. One whose business is to register any events.
I but your recorder am in this,
Or mouth and speaker of the universe,
A ministerial notary; for 'tis
Not I, but you and fate that make the verse. Donne.
2. The

REC

2. The keeper of the rolls in a city.
I ask'd, what meant this wilful silence?
His answer was, the people were not us'd
To be spoke to except by the recorder. Shakefp. Rich. III.
The office of recorder to this city being vacant, five or six persons are soliciting to succeed him. Swift.
3. A kind of flute; a wind instrument.
The shepherds went among them, and sang an eclogue, while the other shepherds, pulling out recorders, which possessed the place of pipes, accorded their music to the others voice. Sidney, b. ii.
In a recorder, the three uppermost holes yield one tone, which is a note lower than the tone of the first three. Bacon.
The figures of recorders, and flutes and pipes are straight;
but the recorder hath a less bore and a greater above and below. Bacon's Natural History.
- TO RECOU'CH. v. n. [re and couch.] To lie down again.
Thou mak'st the night to overvail the day;
Then lions whelps lie roaring for their prey,
And at thy powerful hand demand their food;
Who when at morn they all couch again,
Then toiling man till eve pursues his pain. Wotton.
- TO RECOVER. v. a. [recoverer, Fr. recovers, Lat.]
1. To restore from sickness or disorder.
Every of us, each for his self, laboured how to recover him, while he rather daily sent us companions of town full of ever return'd in any found and faithful manner. Sidney.
Would my Lord were with the prophet; for he would recover him of his leprosy. 2 Kings v. 3.
The clouds dispell'd, the sky resum'd her light,
And nature stood recover'd of her fright. Dryden.
2. To repair.
Should we apply this precept only to those who are concerned to recover time they have lost, it would extend to the whole race of mankind. Rogers.
Even good men have many failings and lapses to lament and recover. Rogers.
3. To regain.
Stay a while; and we'll debate,
By what safe means the crown may be recover'd. Shakefp.
The spirit of the Lord is upon me, to preach the gospel to the poor, and recovering of sight to the blind. Luke iv. 18.
Once in forty years cometh a pope, that calleth his eye upon the kingdom of Naples, to recover it to the church. Bac.
These Italians, in despite of what could be done, recovered Tiliaventum. Knolles's History of the Turks.
I who e'er while the happy garden sung,
By one man's disobedience lost, now sing
Recover'd Paradise to all mankind,
By one man's firm obedience. Milton's Paradise Regain'd.
Any other person may join with him that is injured, and assist him in recovering from the offender so much, as may make satisfaction. Locke.
4. To release.
That they may recover themselves out of the snare of the devil, who are taken captive by him. 2 Tim. ii. 26.
5. To attain; to reach; to come up to.
The forest is not three leagues off;
If we recover that, we're sure enough. Shakefp.
- TO RECOVER. v. n. To grow well from a disease.
Adam, by this from the cold sudden damp Recovering, his scatter'd spirits return'd. Milton.
- RECOVERABLE. adj. [recoverable, Fr. from recover.]
1. Possible to be restored from sickness.
2. Possible to be regained.
A prodigal's course
Is like the sun's, but not like his, recoverable, I fear. Shak.
They promised the good people ease in the matter of protections, by which the debts from parliament men and their followers were not recoverable. Clarendon.
- RECOVERY. n. f. [from recover.]
1. Restoration from sickness.
Your hopes are regular and reasonable, though in temporal affairs; such as are deliverance from enemies, and recovery from sickness. Taylor's Rule of Living Holy.
The sweat sometimes acid, is a sign of recovery after acute distempers. Arbuthnot on Aliments.
2. Power or act of regaining.
What should move me to undertake the recovery of this,
being not ignorant of the impossibility? Shakefp.
These counties were the keys of Normandy:
But wherefore weeps Warwick?
For grief that they are past recovery. Shakefp. Henry VI.
Mario Sanudo lived about the fourteenth age, a man full of zeal for the recovery of the Holy Land. Arbuthnot on Coins.
3. The act of cutting off an entail.
The spirit of wantonness is sure scared out of him; if the devil have him not in fee simple, with fine and recovery. Shak.
- TO RECOUNT. v. a. [recount, Fr.] To relate in detail;
to tell distinctly.
Bid him recount the fore-recited practices. Shakefp.
How I have thought of these times,
I shall recount hereafter. Shakefp. Julius Caesar.

REC

- Plato in Timæo produces an Egyptian priest, who recounted to Solon out of the holy books of Egypt the story of the flood universal, which happened long before the Grecian inundation. Raleigh's History of the World.
The talk of worldly affairs hindreth much, although recounted with a fair intention: we speak willingly, but seldom return to silence. Taylor's Guide to Devotion.
- Say, from these glorious seeds what harvest flows,
Recount our blessings, and compare our woes.
RECOUNTMENT. n. f. [from recount.] Relation; recital.
When from the first to last, betwixt us two,
Tears our recountments had most finely bath'd;
As how I came into that desert place. Shakefp.
- RECOUSE. n. f. [recoisus, Lat. recours, Fr.]
1. Frequent passage. Obsolete.
Not Priamus and Hecuba on knees,
Their eyes o'ergall'd with recourse of tears. Shakefp.- 2. Return; new attack.
Preventive physick, by purging noxious humours and the causes of diseases, preventeth sickness in the healthy, or the recourse thereof in the valetudinary. Brown's Vulg. Errors.
- 3. [Recoisus, Fr.] Application as for help or protection. This is the common use.
Thus died this great peer, in a time of great recourse unto him and dependance upon him, the house and town full of servants and suitors. Wotton's Buckingham.
The council of Trent commends the making recourse, not only to the prayers of the saints, but to their aid and assistance. Stillington's Def. of Dis. on Roman Idol.
Can any man think, that this privilege was at first conferred upon the church of Rome, and that christians in all ages had constant recourse to it for determining their differences; and yet that that very church should now be at a loss where to find it? Tillotson.
All other means have fail'd to wound her heart,
Our last recourse is therefore to our art. Dryden.
- 4. Access.
The doors be lockt,
That no man hath recourse to her by night. Shakefp.
- RECREANT. adj. [recreant, Fr.]
1. Cowardly; mean-spirited; subdued; crying out for mercy;
recanting out of fear.
Let be that lady debonaire,
Thou recreant knight, and soon thyself prepare
To battle. Fairy Queen, b. ii.
Dost
Thou wear a lion's hide? dost it for shame,
And hang a calf's skin on those recreant limbs. Shakefp.
Here handeth Thomas Mowbray, duke of Norfolk,
On pain to be found false and recreant. Shakefp.
Thou
Must, as a foreign recreant, be led With manacles along our street. Shakefp.
The knight, whom fate and happy chance shall grace
From out the bars to force his opposite,
Or kill, or make him recreant on the plain,
The prize of valour and of love shall gain. Dryden.
- 2. Apostate; false.
Who for so many benefits receiv'd,
Turn'd recreant to God, ingrate and false,
And so of all true good himself despoil'd. Milton's Par. Reg.
- TO RECREATE. v. a. [recreo, Lat. recreo, Fr.]
1. To refresh after toil; to amuse or divert in weariness.
He hath left you all his walks,
And to your heirs for ever; common pleasures,
To walk abroad and recreate yourselves. Shakefp.
Necessity and the example of St. John, who recreated himself with sporting with a tame partridge, teach us, that it is lawful to relax our bow, but not suffer it to be unstrung. Taylor.
Painters, when they work on white grounds, place before them colours mixt with blue and green, to recreate their eyes, white wearying and paining the sight more than any. Dryden.
- 2. To delight; to gratify.
These ripe fruits recreate the nostrils with their aromatick scent. More's Divine Dialogues.
- 3. To relieve; to revive.
Take a walk to refresh yourself with the open air, which inspired fresh doth exceedingly recreate the lungs, heart and vital spirits. Harvey on Consumptions.
- RECREATION. n. f. [from recreate.]
1. Relief after toil or pain; amusement in sorrow or distress.
The chief recreation she could find in her anguish, was sometime to visit that place, where first she was so happy as to see the cause of her unhap. Sidney, b. ii.
I'll visit
The chapel where they lie, and tears, shed there, Shall be my recreation. Shakefp. Winter's Tale.
The great men among the antients understood how to reconcile manual labour with affairs of state; and thought it no lessening to their dignity to make the one the recreation to the other. Locke on Education.
- 2. Refreshment;

REC

2. Refreshment; amusement; diversion.
You may have the recreation of surprizing those with admiration, who shall hear the deaf person pronounce whatsoever they shall desire, without your seeming to guide him.
Holder's Elements of Speech.
Nor is that man less deceived, that thinks to maintain a constant tenure of pleasure, by a continual pursuit of sports and recreations: for all these things, as they refresh a man when weary, so they weary him when refreshed. South.
- RECREATIVE. adj. [from recreate.] Refreshing; giving relief after labour or pain; amusing; diverting.
Let the music be recreative, and with some strange changes.
Let not your recreations be lavish spenders of your time;
but chuse such as are healthful, recreative and apt to refresh you: but at no hand dwell upon them. Taylor.
The access these trifles gain to the closets of ladies, seem to promise such easy and recreative experiments, which require but little time or charge. Boyle.
- RECREATIVENESS. n. f. [from recreative.] The quality of being recreative.
- RECREMENT. n. f. [recrementum, Lat.] Drofs; spume; superfluous or useless parts.
The vital fire in the heart requires an ambient body of a yielding nature, to receive the superfluous ferocities and other recrements of the blood. Boyle.
- RECREMENTAL. adj. [from recrement.] Dröffy.
- RECREMINATIONS. n. f. [from recreminare, Fr. re and crimi-nare, Lat.] To return one accusation with another.
It is not my business to recreminate, hoping sufficiently to clear myself in this matter. Stillington.
How shall such hypocrites reform the state,
On whom the brothels can recreminate? Dryden.
- TO RECRIMINATE. v. a. To accuse in return. Unusual.
Did not Joseph lie under black infamy? he scorned so much as to clear himself, or to recreminate the trumpet. South.
- RECRIMINATION. n. f. [recrimination, Fr. from recreminate.]
Return of one accusation with another.
Publick defamation will seem disobliging enough to provoke a return, which again begets a rejoinder, and so the quarrel is carried on with mutual recreminations. Gov. of Tong.
- RECRIMINATOR. n. f. [from recreminate.] He that returns one charge with another.
- RECRUESCENT. adj. [recruescent, Lat.] Growing painful or violent again.
- TO RECRUIT. v. a. [recruter, Fr.]
1. To repair any thing wasted by new supplies.
He was longer in recruiting his flesh than was usual; but by a milk diet he recovered it. Wise man's Surgery.
Increase thy care to save the sinking kind;
With greens and flow'rs recruit their empty hives,
And seek fresh forage to sustain their lives. Dryden.
Her cheeks glow the brighter, recruiting their colour;
As flowers by sprinkling revive with fresh odour. Granville.
This sun is set; but see in bright array
What hosts of heavenly lights recruit the day!
Love in a shining galaxy appears Triumphant still.
Seeing the variety of motion, which we find in the world is always decreasing, there is a necessity of conferring and recruiting it by active principles; such as are the cause of gravity, by which planets and comets keep their motions in their orbs, and bodies acquire great motion in falling. Newt.
2. To supply an army with new men.
He trusted the earl of Holland with the command of that army, with which he was to be recruited and assisted. Clar.
- TO RECRUIT. v. n. To raise new soldiers.
The French have only Switzerland besides their own country to recruit in; and we know the difficulties they meet with in getting thence a single regiment. Addison.
- RECRUIT. n. f. [from the verb.]
1. Supply of any thing wasted.
Whatever nature has in worth deny'd,
She gives in large recruits of needful pride.
The endeavour to raise new men for the recruit of the army found opposition. Clarendon.
2. New soldiers.
The pow'rs of Troy
With fresh recruits their youthful chief sustain:
Not theirs a raw and unexperient'd train,
But a firm body of embattel'd men. Dryden.
- RECTANGLE. n. f. [rectangle, Fr. rectangulus, Lat.] A figure which has one angle or more of ninety degrees.
If all Athens should decree, that in rectangle triangles the square, which is made of the side that subtendeth the right angle, is equal to the squares which are made of the sides containing the right angle, geometers would not receive satisfaction without demonstration. Brown's Vulg. Errors.
The mathematician considers the truth and properties belonging to a rectangle, only as it is in idea in his own mind.
Locke.

REC

- RECTANGULAR. adj. [rectangulaire, Fr. rectus and angulus, Latin.] Right angled; having angles of ninety degrees.
Bricks moulded in their ordinary rectangular form, if they shall be laid one by another in a level row between any supporters sustaining the two ends, then all the pieces will necessarily sink. Watson's Architecture.
- RECTANGULARLY. adv. [from rectangular.] With right angles.
At the equator, the needle will stand rectangularly; but approaching northward toward the tropic, it will regard the stone obliquely. Brown's Vulg. Errors.
- RECTIFIABLE. adj. [from rectify.] Capable to be set right.
The natural heat of the parts being insufficient for a perfect and thorough digestion, the errors of one concoction are not rectifiable by another. Brown's Vulg. Errors.
- RECTIFICATION. n. f. [rectification, Fr. from rectify.]
1. The act of setting right what is wrong.
It behoved the deity to renew that revelation from time to time, and to rectify abuses with such authority for the renewal and rectification, as was sufficient evidence of the truth of what was revealed. Forbes.- 2. In chymistry, rectification is drawing any thing over again by distillation, to make it yet higher or finer. Quincy.
At the first rectification of some spirit of sale in a retort, a single pound afforded no less than six ounces of phlegm. Boyle.
- TO RECTIFY. v. a. [rectifier, Fr. rectus and facio, Lat.]
1. To make right; to reform; to redress.
That wherein unfounder times have done amiss, the better ages ensuing must rectify as they may. Hooker.
It shall be bootless,
That longer you defer the court, as well
For your own quiet, as to rectify
What is unsettled in the king. Shakefp. Henry VIII.
Where a long course of piety has purged the heart, and rectified the will, knowledge will break in upon such a soul, like the sun shining in his full might. South.
The substance of this theory I mainly depend on, being willing to suppose that many particularities may be rectified upon farther thoughts. Burnet.
If those men of parts, who have been employed in vitia-ting the age, had endeavoured to rectify and amend it, they needed not have sacrificed their good sense to their fame. Add.
The false judgment he made of things are owned; and the methods pointed out by which he rectified them. Atterbury.
- 2. To exalt and improve by repeated distillation.
The skin hath been kept white and smooth for above fifteen years, by being included with rectified spirit of wine in a cylindrical glass. Grew's Museum.
- RECTILINEAR. adj. [rectus and linea, Lat.] Consisting of RECTILINEOUS. n. f. right lines.
There are only three rectilinear and ordinate figures, which can serve to this purpose; and inordinate or unlike ones must have been not only less elegant, but unequal. Ray.
This image was oblong and not oval, but terminated with two rectilinear and parallel sides and two semicircular ends.
Newton's Opticks.
The rays of light, whether they be very small bodies projected, or only motion and force propagated, are moved in right lines; and whenever a ray of light is by any obstacle turned out of its rectilinear way, it will never return into the same rectilinear way, unless perhaps by very great accident.
Newton's Opticks.
- RECTITUDE. n. f. [rectitudo, Fr. from rectus, Lat.]
1. Straightness; not curvity.
2. Rightness; uprightness; freedom from moral curvity or ob-liquity.
Faith and repentance, together with the rectitude of their present engagement would fully prepare them for a better life. King Charles.
Calm the disorders of thy mind, by reflecting on the wisdom, equity and absolute rectitude of all his proceedings. At.
- RECTOR. n. f. [recteur, Fr. rector, Latin.]
1. Ruler; lord; governor.
God is the supreme rector of the world, and of all those subordinate parts thereof. Hale's Origin of Mankind.
When a rector of an university of scholars is chosen by the corporation or university, the election ought to be confirmed by the superior of such university. Ayliff's Parergon.
- 2. Parson of an unimpropriated parish.
- RECTORSHIP. n. f. [rectorat, Fr. from rector.] The rank or office of rector.
Had your bodies
No heart among you? or had you tongues to cry Against the rectorship of judgment. Shakefp.
- RECTORY. n. f. [rectorie, Fr. from rector.]
A rectory or parsonage is a spiritual living, composed of land, tithes and other oblations of the people, separate or de-dedicated to God in any congregation for the service of his church there, and for the maintenance of the governor or minister thereof, to whose charge the same is committed.
Spelman.

RECUATION.

REC

RECUBATION. n. f. [recubo, Latin.] The act of lying or leaning.

Whereas our translation renders it sitting, it cannot have that illation, for the French and Italian translations express neither position of fession or recubation. Brown.

RECULE, for RECOIL. [reculer, Fr.] Spenser.

RECUMBENCY. n. f. [from recumbent.]

1. The posture of lying or leaning.
In that memorable shew of Germanicus, twelve elephants danced unto the sound of musick, and after laid them down in tricliniums, or places of festal recumbency. Brown.

2. Rest; repose.
When the mind has been once habituated to this lazy recumbency and satisfaction on the obvious surface of things, it is in danger to rest satisfied there. Locke.

RECUMBENT. adj. [recumbens, Lat.] Lying; leaning.

The Roman recumbent, or more properly accumbent, posture in eating was introduced after the first Punic war. Arb.

TO RECURE. v. n. [recuro, Lat.]

1. To come back to the thought; to revive in the mind.
The idea, I have once had, will be unchangeably the same, as long as it recurs the same in my memory. Locke.

In this life, the thoughts of God and a future state often offer themselves to us; they often spring up in our minds, and when expelled, recur again. Calamy.

A line of the golden verses of the Pythagoreans recurring on the memory, hath often guarded youth from a temptation to vice. Watts.

When any word has been used to signify an idea, that old idea will recur in the mind when the word is heard. Watts.

2. [Recurre, Fr.] To have recourse to; to take refuge in.

If to avoid succession in eternal existence, they recur to the punctum fians of the schools, they will thereby very little help us to a more positive idea of infinite duration. Locke.

The second cause we know, but trouble not ourselves to recur to the first. Wake's Preparation for Death.

TO RECURE. v. a. [re and cure.] To recover from sickness or labour.

Through wise handling and fair governance,
I him recured to a better will,
Purged from drugs of foul intemperance. Fairy Queen.

Phœbus pure
In western waves his weary wagon did recure. Fa. Queen.

With one look she doth my life dismay,
And with another doth it straight recure. Spenser.

The wanton boy was shortly well recured
Of that his malady. Spenser.

Thy death's wound
He who comes thy Saviour shall recure,
Not by destroying Satan, but his works
In thee and in thy seed. Milton's Par. Lost, l. xii.

RECUR. n. f. Recovery; remedy.

Whatever fell into the enemies hands, was lost without recure: the old men were slain, the young men led away into captivity. Kneller's History of the Turks.

RECURRANCE. n. f. [from recurrent.] Return.

RECURRENT. n. f. [from recurrent.] Return.

But his red colour hath forsook his cheeks. Shakespeare.

Bring me the fairest creature northward born,
To prove whose blood is reddest. Shakespeare. Merch. of Ven.

His eyes shall be red with wine, and his teeth white with milk. Gen. xlix. 12.

Th' angelick squadron turn'd fiery red.
If red lead and white paper be placed in the red light of the coloured spectrum, made in a dark chamber by the refraction of a prism, the paper will appear more lucid than the red lead, and therefore reflects the red making rays more copiously than red lead doth. Newton's Opticks.

I he sixth red was at first of a very fair and lively scarlet, and soon after of a brighter colour, being very pure and brisk, and the best of all the reds. Newton's Opticks.

Why heavenly truth,
And moderation fair, were the red marks
Of superstition's scourge. Thomson's Winter.

TO REDARGUE. v. a. [redarguo, Lat.] To refute. Not in use.

The last wittily redargues the pretended finding of coin, graven with the image of Augustus Cæsar, in the American mines. Hakewill on Providence.

RED-BERRIED. adj. [rubra cassia, n. f. A plant. It is male and female in different plants: the male hath flowers consisting of many stamens or threads, without any petals; these are always sterile: the female plants, which have no conspicuous power, produce spherical berries, in which are included nuts of the same form. Miller.

RED-BREAST. n. f. A small bird, so named from the colour of its breast.

No burial this pretty babe

And re-install me in the diadem. Shakespeare. Henry VI.

Th' almighty from the grave
Hath me redeemed; he will the humble save. Sandys.

Redeem Israel, O God, out of all his troubles. Pf. xxv.

Redeem from this reproach my wand'ring ghost. Dryden.

3. To recompense; to compensate; to make amends for.
Waywardly proud; and therefore bold, because extremely faultry; and yet having no good thing to redeem these. Sidney.

This feather stirs, the lives; if it be so,
It is a chance which does redeem all sorrows
That ever I have felt. Shakespeare. King Lear.

Having committed a fault, he became the more obsequious and pliant to redeem it. Watson.

Think it not hard, if at so cheap a rate
You can secure the constancy of fate, Whole kindreds sent what does your malice seem
By lesser ills the greater to redeem. Dryden.

4. To pay an atonement.
Thou hast one daughter,
Who redeems nature from the general curse,
Which twain have brought her to. Shakespeare.

5. To save the world from the curse of sin.
Which of you will be mortal to redeem Man's mortal crime. Milton.

She inflamed him so,
That he would alights with Pyrocles fight,
And his redeemer challeng'd for his foe,
Because he had not well maintain'd his right. Fa. Queen.

2. The Saviour of the world.
I every day expect an embassage
From my redeemer to redeem me hence;
And now in peace my soul shall part to heav'n. Shakespeare.

Man's friend, his mediator, his design'd
Both ransom and redeemer voluntary. Milton's Par. Lost.

When saw we thee any way distressed, and relieved thee?
will be the question of those, to whom heaven itself will be at the last day awarded, as having ministered to their redeemer. Boyle.

TO REDELIVER. v. a. [re and deliver.] To deliver back.

I have remembrances of yours,
That I have longed long to redeliver.
Instruments judiciously exhibited, are not of the acts of courts; and therefore may be redelivered on the demand of the person that exhibited them. Ayliffe's Parergon.

REDELIVERY. n. f. [from redeliver.] The act of delivering back.

TO REDMAND. v. a. [redemand, Fr. re and demand.] To demand back.

Threefold attacked the place where they were kept in

And Hector's redemptory price. Chapman's Iliads.

REDHOT. adj. [red and hot.] Heated to redness.

Iron redhot burneth and consumeth not. Bacon.

Is not fire a body heated so hot as to emit light copiously?
for what else is a redhot iron than fire? and what else is a burning coal than redhot wood? Newton's Opticks.

The redhot metal hiffes in the lake. Pope.

REDINTEGRATE. adj. [redintegratus, Latin.] Restored; renewed; made new.

Charles VIII. received the kingdom of France in flourishing estate, being redintegrate in those principal members, which anciently had been portions of the crown, and were after dismembered: so as they remained only in homage, and not in sovereignty. Bacon's Henry VII.

RED

REDINTEGRATION. n. f. [from redintegrare.]

1. Renovation; restoration.
They kept the feast indeed, but with the leaven of malice, and absurdly commemorated the redintegration of his natural body, by mutilating and dividing his mythical. Dec. of Piety.

2. Redintegration chymists call the restoring any mixed body or matter, whose form has been destroyed, to its former nature and constitution. Quincy.

As my true service shall deserve your love. Shakespeare.

TO REDOUND. v. n. [redundo, Latin.]

1. To be sent back by reaction.
The evil, soon
Driv'n back, redounded, as a flood, on those From whom it sprung. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. vii.

Nor hope to be myself less miserable
By what I seek, but others to make such As I, though thereby worse to me redound. Milton.

2. To conduce in the consequence.
As the care of our national commerce redounds more to the riches and prosperity of the publick, than any other act of government, the state of it should be marked out in every particular reign with greater distinction. Addison.

He had drawn many observations together, which very much redound to the honour of this prince. Addison.

3. To fall in the consequence.
As both these monsters will devour great quantities of paper, there will no small use redound from them to that manufacture. Addison's Guardian, N° 114.

The honour done to our religion ultimately redounds to God the author of it. Rogers's Sermons.

TO REDRESS. v. a. [redresser, Fr.]

- REFLEX. adj. [reflexus, Lat.] Directed backward.
The motions of my mind are as obvious to the reflex act of the soul, or the turning of the intellectual eye inward upon its own actions, as the passions of my sense are obvious to my sense; I see the object, and I perceive that I see it. Hale.
The order and beauty of the inanimate parts of the world, the discernible ends of them do evince by a reflex argument, that it is the workmanship, not of blind mechanism or blinder chance, but of an intelligent and benign agent. Bentley.
- REFLEX. n. s. [reflexus, Lat.] Reflection.
There was no other way for angels to sin, but by reflex of their understandings upon themselves. Hooker.
I'll say you gray is not the morning's eye,
'Tis but the pale reflex of Cynthia's brow. Shakesp.
- REFLEXIBILITY. n. s. [from reflexible.] The quality of being reflexible.
Reflexibility of rays is their disposition to be reflected or turned back into the same medium from any other medium, upon whose surface they fall; and rays are more or less reflexible, which are turned back more or less easily. Newton.
- REFLEXIBLE. adj. [from reflexus, Lat.] Capable to be thrown back.
Sir Isaac Newton has demonstrated, by convincing experiments, that the light of the sun consists of rays differently refrangible and reflexible; and that those rays are differently reflexible, that are differently refrangible. Cheyne.
- REFLEXIVE. adj. [reflexus, Lat.] Having respect to something past.
That assurance reflexive cannot be a divine faith, but at the most an human, yet such as perhaps I may have no doubting mixed with. Hammond's Practical Catechism.
Solomon tells us life and death are in the power of the tongue, and that not only directly in regard of the good or ill we may do to others, but reflexively also, in respect of what may rebound to ourselves. Government of the Tongue.

- REFLUENT. adj. [refluens, Lat.] Running back; flowing back.
The liver receives the refluent blood almost from all the parts of the abdomen. Arbuthnot on Aliments.
Tell, by what paths,
Back to the fountain's head the sea conveys
The refluent rivers, and the land repays. Blackmore.
- REFLUX. n. s. [reflux, Fr. refluxus, Lat.] Backward course of water.
Besides
Mine own that 'bide upon me, all from me
Shall with a fierce reflux on me redound. Milton.
The variety of the flux and reflux of Euripus, or whether the same do ebb and flow seven times a day, is inconceivable. Brown's Vulgar Errors.
- REFRACILLATION. n. s. [refracilla, Lat.] Restoration of strength by refreshment.

REF

- To REFORM. v. a. [reformo, Lat. reformer, Fr.] To change from worse to better.
A sect in England, following the very same rule of policy, seeketh to reform even the French reformation, and purge out from thence also dregs of popery. Hooker, b. iv. s. 8.
Seat worther of Gods, was built
With second thoughts, reforming what was old. Milton.
May no such storm
Fall on our times, where ruin must reform. Denham.
Now low'ring looks preface approaching storms,
And now prevailing love her face reforms. Dryden.
One cannot attempt the perfect reforming the languages of the world, without rendering himself ridiculous. Locke.
The example alone of a vicious prince will corrupt an age; but that of a good one will not reform it. Swift.
- To REFORM. v. n. To make a change from worse to better.
Was his doctrine of the mass struck out in this conflict? or did it give him occasion of reforming in this point? Atterbury.
- REFORM. n. s. [French.] Reformation.
- REFORMATION. n. s. [reformation, Fr. from reform.]
1. Change from worse to better.
Never came reformation in a flood
With such a heady current, scow'ring faults;
Nor ever Hydra-headed wilfulness
So soon did lose its seat, as in this king. Shakesp. Henry V.
Satire lashes vice into reformation. Dryden.
The pagan converts mention this great reformation of those who had been the greatest sinners, with that sudden and surprising change, which the christian religion made in the lives of the most profligate. Addison.
 2. The change of religion from the corruptions of popery to its primitive state.
The burden of the reformation lay on Luther's shoulders. Atterbury.
- REFORMER. n. s. [from reform.]
1. One who makes a change for the better; an amender.
Publick reformers had need first practise that on their own hearts, which they purpose to try on others. King Charles.
The complaint is more general, than the endeavours to redress it: Abroad every man would be a reformer, how very few at home. Sprat's Sermons.
It was honour enough, to behold the English churches reformed; that is, delivered from the reformers. South.
 2. Those who changed religion from popish corruptions and innovations.
Our first reformers were famous confessors and martyrs all over the world. Bacon.
- To REFRACT. v. a. [refractus, Lat.] To break the natural course of rays.
If its angle of incidence be large, and the refractive power of the medium not very strong to throw it far from the perpendicular, it will be refracted. Cheyne's Phil. Princ.
Rays of light are urged by the refracting media. Cheyne.
Refracted from yon eastern cloud,
The grand ethereal bow shoots up. Thomson.
- REFRACTION. n. s. [refraction, Fr.]
Refraction, in general, is the incurvation or change of determination in the body moved, which happens to it whilst it enters or penetrates any medium: in dioptricks, it is the variation of a ray of light from that right line, which it would have passed on in, had not the density of the medium turned it aside. Harris.
Refraction, out of the rarer medium into the denser, is made towards the perpendicular. Newton's Opticks.
- REFRACTIVE. adj. [from refract.] Having the power of refraction.
Those superficies of transparent bodies reflect the greatest quantity of light, which have the greatest refracting power; that is, which intercede mediums that differ most in their refractive densities. Newton's Opticks.
- REFRACTORINESS. n. s. [from refractory.] Sullen obstinacy.
I did never allow any man's refractoriness against the privileges and orders of the houses. King Charles.
Great complaint was made by the presbyterian gang, of my refractoriness to obey the parliament's order. Saunderson.
- REFRACTORY. adj. [refractorius, Fr. refractorius, Lat. and so should be written refractory. It is now accented on the first syllable, but by Shakespeare on the second.] Obdurate; perverse; contumacious.
There is a law in each well-order'd nation,
To curb those raging appetites that are Most disobedient and refractory. Shakesp.
A rough hewn seaman, being brought before a wife justice for some misdemeanor, was by him ordered to be sent away to prison, and was refractory after he heard his doom, inasmuch as he would not stir a foot from the place where he stood; saying, it was better to stand where he was, than go to a worse place. Bacon's Apophthegms.
Vulgar compliance with any illegal and extravagant ways, like violent motions in nature, soon grows weary of itself, and ends in a refractory fullness. King Charles.

A delicate wine, and a durable refrigeratory. Mortimer.

REFRIGERIUM. n. f. [Latin.] Cool refreshment; refrigeration.

It must be acknowledged, the ancients have talked much of annual refrigeriums, respites or intervals of punishment to the damned; as particularly on the festivals. South.

REF. part. pret. of reave.

1. Deprived; taken away.

Thus we well left, he better rest,
In heaven to take his place,
That by like life and death, at last,
We may obtain like grace. Ascham's Schoolmaster.

I, in a desperate bay of death,
Like a poor bark, of sails and tackling rest,
Rush all to pieces on thy rocky bosom. Shaksp.

Another ship had seiz'd on us,
And would have rest the fishers of their prey. Shaksp.

Our dying hero, from the continent
Ravish'd whole towns, and forts from Spaniards rest. Waller.

As his last legacy to Britain left.

2. Preterite of reave. Took away.

So 'twixt them both, they not a lamkin left,
And when lambs fail'd, the old sheeps lives they rest. Spens.

About his shoulders broad he threw An hairy hide of some wild beast, whom he
In savage forest by adventure slew,
And rest the spoil his ornament to be. Spenser.

REFUG. n. f. [refuge, Fr. refugium, Lat.]

1. Shelter from any danger or distress; protection.

Rocks, dens and caves! but I in none of these Find place or refuge. Milton's Par. Lost, b. ix.

The young ones, suppos'd to break through the belly of the dam, will, upon any fright, for protection run into it; for then the old one receives them in at her mouth, which way, the fright being past, they will return again; which is a peculiar way of refuge. Brown's Vulg. Errours.

Those, who take refuge in a multitude, have an Arian council to answer for. Atterbury.

2. That which gives shelter or protection.

The Lord will be a refuge for the oppressed; in times of trouble.

They shall be your refuge from the avenger of blood. Jf. i. 9.

Fair majesty, the refuge and redress
Of those whom fate pursues. Dryden.

3. Expedient in distress.

This last old man,
Whom with a crack'd heart I have sent to Rome,
Lov'd me above the measure of a father:
Their latest refuge was to send him. Shaksp. Coriolanus.

4. Expedient in general.

Light must be supplied among graceful refuges, by terracing any story in danger of darkness. Watson.

TO REFUGE. v. a. [refugere, Fr. from the noun.] To shelter; to protect.

Silly beggars,
Who sitting in the stocks, refuse their shame,
That many have, and others must, fit there. Shaksp.

 Princes are ſhy of their ſucceſſors, and there may be reaſonably ſuppoſed in queens regnant a little proportion of tenderneſs that way, more than in kings. Wotton.
 The law was regnant, and conſin'd his thought,
 Hell was not conquer'd, when the poet wrote. Waller.
 His guilt is clear, his proofs are pregnant,
 A traitor to the vices regnant. Swift's Miſcellanies.
TO REGORGE. v. a. [re and gorge.]
 1. To vomit up; to throw back.
 It was ſcoffingly ſaid, he had eaten the king's gooſe, and did then regorge the feathers. Hayward.
 2. To ſwallow eagerly.
 Drunk with wine,
 And fat regorg'd of bulls and goats. Milton's Agoniſtes.
 3. [Regorgo, Fr.] To ſwallow back.
 As tides at highſt mark regorge the flood,
 So fate, that could no more improve their joy,
 Took a malicious pleaſure to deſtroy. Dryden.
TO REGRAFT. v. a. [regreſſer, Fr. re and graft.] To graft again.
 Oit regrafting the ſame cions, may make fruit greater. Bac.

 To deſire there were no God, were plainly to unwiſh their own being, which muſt needs be annihilated in the ſubſtance of that eſſence, which ſubſtantially ſupporteth them, and reſtrains from regreſſion into nothing. Brown.

REGRET. n. ſ. [regret, Fr. regretto, Italian.] Prior has uſed it in the plural; but, I believe, without authority.
 1. Vexation at ſomething paſt; bitterneſs of reflection.
 I never bare any touch of conſcience with greater regret. King Charles.
 A paſſionate regret at ſin, a grief and ſadneſs at its memory, enters us into God's roll of mourners. Decay of Piety.
 Though ſin offers itſelf in never ſo pleaſing a dreſs, yet the remorse and inward regrets of the ſoul, upon the commiſſion of it, infinitely overbalance thoſe faint gratifications it affords the ſenſes. South's Sermons.
 2. Grief; ſorrow.
 Never any prince expreſſed a more lively regret for the loſs of a ſervant, than his majeſty did for this great man; in all offices of grace towards his ſervants, and in a wonderful ſollicitous care for the payment of his debts. Clarendon.
 That freedom, which all forrows claim,
 She does for thy content reſign;
 Her piety itſelf would blame,
 If her regrets ſhould waken thine. Prior.
 3. Diſlike; averſion. Not proper.
 Is it a virtue to have ſome ineffectual regrets to damnation, and ſuch a virtue too, as ſhall ſerve to balance all our vices. Decay of Piety.
TO REGRET. v. a. [regreſſer, Fr. from the noun.]
 1. To repent; to grieve at.
 I ſhall not regret the trouble my experiments coſt me, if they be found ſerviceable to the purpoſes of reſpiration. Boyle.
 Calmly he look'd on either life, and here
 Saw nothing to regret, or there to fear;
 From nature's tempeſtate ſeaſt roſe ſatiſfy'd,
 Thank'd heav'n that he had liv'd, and that he dy'd. Pope.
 2. To be uneaſy at. Not proper.
 Thoſe, the impiety of whoſe lives makes them regret a deity, and ſecretly wiſh there were none, will greedily liſten to atheiſtical notions. Glauville's Scenſ.
REGUERDON. n. ſ. [re and guerdon.] Reward; recompence.
 Stoop, and ſet your knee againſt my foot;
 And in reguerdon of that duty done,
 I gi'd thee with the valiant ſword of York. Shakeſp.
TO REGUERDON. v. a. [from the noun.] To reward. The verb and noun are both obſolete.
 Long ſince we were reſolv'd of your truth,
 Your faithful ſervice and your toil in war;
 Yet never have you taſted your reward,
 Or been reguerdon'd with ſo much as thanks. Shakeſp.
REGULAR. adj. [regulier, Fr. regularis, Lat.]
 1. Agreeable to rule; conſiſtent with the mode preſcribed.
 The common cant of critics is, that though the lines are good, it is not a regular piece.
 The ways of heav'n are dark and intricate,
 Puzzled in mazes, and perplex'd with errors;
 Our underſtanding traces them in vain,
 Loſt and bewilder'd in the fruitleſs ſearch;
 Nor ſees with how much art the windings run,
 Nor where the regular conſuſion ends. Addiſon.
 So when we view ſome well-proportion'd dome,
 No monſtrous height or breadth or length appear;
 The whole at once is bold and regular. Pope.
 2. Governed by ſtrict regulations.
 So juſt thy ſkill, ſo regular my rage. Pope.
 3. In geometry, regular body is a ſolid, whoſe ſurface is compoſed of regular and equal figures, and whoſe ſolid angles are all equal, and of which there are five ſorts, viz. 1. A pyramid comprehended under four equal and equilateral triangles. 2. A cube, whoſe ſurface is compoſed of ſix equal ſquares. 3. That which is bounded by eight equal and equilateral triangles. 4. That which is contained under twelve equal and equilateral pentagons. 5. A body conſiſting of twenty equal and equilateral triangles; and mathematicians demonſtrate, that there can be no more regular bodies than theſe five. Muschenbr.
 There is no univerſal reaſon, not confined to human fancy, that a figure, called regular, which hath equal ſides and angles, is more beautiful than any irregular one. Bentley.
 4. Inſtituted or initiated according to eſtabliſhed forms or diſcipline: as, a regular doctor; regular troops.
REGULAR. n. ſ. [regulier, Fr.]
 In the Romiſh church, all perſons are ſaid to be regular, that do profeſs and follow a certain rule of life, in Latin ſtil'd regular; and do likewiſe obſerve the three approved vows of poverty, chaſtity and obedience. Ayliffe's Parergon.
REGULARITY. n. ſ. [regularité, Fr. from regular.]
 1. Agreeableneſs to rule.
 2. Method; certain order.
Regularity is certain, where it is not ſo apparent, as in all fluids; for regularity is a ſimilitude continued. Grew.
 He was a mighty lover of regularity and order; and managed all his affairs with the utmoſt exactneſs. Atterbury.

REJ

REGULARLY. adv. [from regular.] In a manner concordant to rule.
If those painters, who have left us such fair platforms, had rigorously observed it in their figures, they had indeed made things more regularly true, but withal very unpleasing. Dryd.
With one judicious stroke,
On the plain ground Apelles drew
A circle regularly true. Prior.
Strains that neither ebb nor flow,
Correctly cold and regularly low. Pope.
TO REGULATE. v. a. [from regula, Lat.]
1. To adjust by rule or method.
Nature, in the production of things, always designs them to partake of certain, regulated, established essences, which are to be the models of all things to be produced: this, in that crude sense, would need some better explication. Locke.
2. To direct.
Regulate the patient in his manner of living. Wifeman.
Ev'n goddesses are women; and no wife
Has power to regulate her husband's life. Dryden.
REGULATION. n. f. [from regulate.]

Regulus is the finer and most weighty part of metals, which settles at the bottom upon melting. Quincy.
TO REGURGITATE. v. n. [re and gurgit, Lat. regorgit, Fr.]
To throw back; to pour back.
The inhabitants of the city remove themselves into the country so long, until, for want of receipt and encouragement, it regurgitates and sends them back. Graunt.
Arguments of divine wisdom, in the frame of animate bodies, are the artificial position of many valves, all so situate, as to give a free passage to the blood in their due channels, but not permit them to regurgitate and disturb the great circulation. Bentley.
TO REGURGITATE. v. n. To be poured back.
Nature was wont to evacuate its vicious blood out of these veins, which passage being stop'd, it regurgitates upwards to the lungs. Harvey on Consumptions.
REGURGITATION. n. f. [from regurgitate.] Reforption; the act of swallowing back.
Regurgitation of matter is the constant symptom. Sharp.
TO REHEAR. v. a. [re and hear.] To hear again.
My design is to give all persons a rehearsing, who have suffered under any unjust sentence. Addison's Examiner.
REHEARSAL. n. f. [from rehearse.]
1. Repetition; recital.
Twice we appoint, that the words which the minister pronounceth, the whole congregation shall repeat after him; as first in the public confession of sins, and again in rehearsal of our Lord's prayer after the blessed sacrament. Hooker.
What dream'd my lord? tell me, and I'll requite it With sweet rehearsal of my morning's dream. Shaksp.
What respected their actions as a rule or admonition, applied to yours, is only a rehearsal, whose zeal in asserting the ministerial cause is so generally known. South.
2. The recital of any thing previous to public exhibition.
The chief of Rome,
With gaping mouths to chide rehearsal come. Dryden.
TO REHEARSE. v. a. [from rehearsal.] Skinner.

He was not well cured, and would have relapsed. Wifem.
RELAPSE. n. f. [from the verb.]
1. Fall into vice or error once forsaken.
This would but lead me to a worse relapse
And heavier fall.
We see in too frequent instances the relapses of those, who, under the present smart, or the near apprehension of the divine pleasure, have resolved on a religious reformation. Rog.
2. Regression from a state of recovery to sickness.
It was even as two physicians should take one sick body in hand; of which, the former would purge and keep under the body, the other pamper and strengthen it suddenly; whereof what is to be looked for, but a most dangerous relapse. Speke.
3. Return to any state. The sense here is somewhat obscure.
Mark a bounding valour in our English;
That being dead like to the bullet's grazing,
Breaks out into a second course of mischief,
Killing in relapse of mortality. Shaksp. Henry V.
TO RELATE. v. a. [from relatus, Lat.]
1. To tell; to recite.
Your wife and babes
Savagely slaughter'd; to relate the manner,
Were to add the death of you. Shaksp. Macbeth.
Here I could frequent
With worship place by place, where he vouchsaf'd Prefence divine; and to my sons relate.
The drama represents to view, what the poem only does relate. Dryden.
A man were better relate himself to a statue, than suffer his thoughts to pass in smother. Bacon.
2. To ally by kindred.
Avails thee not,
To whom related, or by whom begot;
A heap of dust alone remains. Pope.
3. To bring back; to restore. A Latinism. Spenser.
TO RELATE. v. n. To have reference; to have respect.
All negative or privative words relate to positive ideas, and signify their absence. Locke.
As other courts demanded the execution of persons dead in law, this gave the last orders relating to those dead in reason. Tatler, N° 110.
RELATER. n. f. [from relate.] Teller; narrator.
We shall rather perform good offices unto truth, than any disservice unto their relaters. Brown's Vulg. Errors.
Her husband the relater she prefer'd
Before the angel.
The best English historian, when his style grows antiquated, will be only considered as a tedious relater of facts. Swift.
RELATION. n. f. [from relation, Fr. from relate.]
1. Manner of belonging to any person or thing.
Under this stone lies virtue, youth,
Unblemish'd probity and truth;
Just unto all relations known,
A worthy patriot, pious son. Waller.
S.

REL

So far as service imports duty and subjection, all created beings bear the necessary relation of servants to God. South.
 Our necessary relations to a family, oblige all to use their reasoning powers upon a thousand occasions. Watts.
 2. Respect; reference; regard.
 I have been importuned to make some observations on this art, in relation to its agreement with poetry. Dryden.
Relation consists in the consideration and comparing one idea with another. Locke.
 3. Connexion between one thing and another.
 Augurs, that understand relations, have
 By magpies, choughs and rooks brought forth
 The secret man of blood. Shakefp. Macbeth.
 4. Kindred; alliance of kin.
Relations dear, and all the charities
 Of fathers, son and brother first were known. Milton.
 Be kindred and relation laid aside,
 And honour's cause by laws of honour try'd. Dryden.
 Are we not to pity and supply the poor, though they have no relation to us? no relation? that cannot be: the gospel files them all our brethren; nay, they have a nearer relation to us, our fellow-members; and both these from their relation to our Saviour himself, who calls them his brethren. Sprat.
 5. Person related by birth or marriage; kinsman; kinswoman.
 A the-cousin, of a good family and small fortune, passed months among all her relations. Swift.
 Dependants, friends, relations,
 Saving'd by woe, forget the tender tie. Thomson.
 6. Narrative; tale; account; narration; recital of facts.
 In an historical relation, we use terms that are most proper. Burnet's Theory of the Earth.
 The author of a just fable, must please more than the writer of an historical relation. Dennis's Letters.
RELATIVE, adj. [relativus, Lat. relativus, Fr.]
 1. Having relation; respecting.
 Not only simple ideas and substances, but modes are positive beings; though the parts of which they consist, are very often relative one to another. Locke.
 2. Considered not absolutely, but as belonging to, or respecting something else.
 The ecclesiastical, as well as the civil governour, has cause to pursue the same methods of confirming himself; the grounds of government being founded upon the same bottom of nature in both, though the circumstances and relative considerations of the persons may differ. South.
 Every thing sustains both an absolute and a relative capacity: an absolute, as it is such a thing, endued with such a nature; and a relative, as it is a part of the universe, and so stands in such relation to the whole. South.
 Whole and whole are relative, not real qualities. Arbutnot on Aliments.
 3. Particular; positive; close in connection. Not in use.
 I'll have grounds
 More relative than this. Shakefp. Macbeth.

 A valour fatal to the enemy. Dryden.
 Why should a reasonable man put it into the power of fortune to make him miserable, when his ancestors have taken care to release him from her? Dryden.
 2. To set free from pain.
 3. To free from obligation.
 Too secure, because from death releas'd some days. Mil.
 4. To quit; to let go.
 He had been base, had he releas'd his right,
 For such an empire none but kings should fight. Dryden.
 5. To relax; to slacken. Not in use.
 It may not seem hard, if in cases of necessity certain profitable ordinances sometimes be releas'd, rather than all men always strictly bound to the general rigor thereof. Hocher.
RELEASE, n. f. [relascho, Fr. from the verb.]
 1. Dimission from confinement, servitude or pain.
 O fatal search! in which the lab'ring mind,
 Still press'd with weight of woe, still hopes to find
 A shadow of delight, a dream of peace,
 From years of pain, one moment of release. Prior.
 2. Relaxation of a penalty.
 3. Remission of a claim.
 The king made a great feast, and made a release to the provinces, and gave gifts. Ezra. ii. 18.
 The king would not have one penny abated, of what had been granted by parliament; because it might encourage other countries to pray the like release or mitigation. Bacon.
 4. Acquittance from a debt signed by the creditor.
 To RELEGATE, v. a. [relegare, Fr. relego, Lat.] To banish; to exile.

 To RELENT, v. n. [valentis, Fr.]
 1. To soften; to grow less rigid or hard; to give.
 In some houses, sweetmeats will relent more than in others. Bacon.
 In that soft season, when descending show'rs
 Call forth the greens, and wake the rising flow'rs;
 When opening buds salute the welcome day,
 And earth relenting feels the genial ray. Pope.
 2. To melt; to grow moist.
 Crows seem to call upon rain, which is but the comfort they seem to receive in the relenting of the air. Bacon.
 Salt of tartar, brought to fusion, and placed in a cellar, will, in a few minutes, begin to relent, and have its surface softened by the imbibed moisture of the air, wherein if it be left long, it will totally be dissolved. Boyle.
 All nature mourns, the skies relent in show'rs, Hush'd are the birds, and clos'd the drooping flow'rs;
 If Delia smile, the flow'rs begin to spring,
 The skies to brighten, and the birds to sing. Pope.
 3. To grow less intense.
 I have marked in you a relenting truly, and a slackening of the main career, you had so notably begun, and almost performed. Sidney.
 The workmen let glass cool by degrees in such relentings of fire, as they call their nealing heats, lest it should shiver in pieces by a violent succeeding of air. Digby on Bodies.

REL

* To soften in temper; to grow tender; to feel compassion.
 Can you behold
 My tears, and not once relent? Shakefp. Henry VI.
 I'll not be made a soft and dull-eyed fool.
 To shake the head, relent, and sigh, and yield
 To christian intercessors. Shakefp. Merch. of Venice.
 Undoubtedly he will relent, and turn
 From his displeasure. Milton.
 He sung, and hell consented
 To hear the poet's pray'r;
 Stern Prosperine relenting,
 And gave him back the fair.
 To RELINT, v. a.
 1. To slacken; to remit. Obsolete.
 Apace he shot, and yet he fled apace,
 And oftentimes he would relent his pace,
 That him his foe more fiercely should pursue. Fa. Queen.

 Air hated earth, and water hated fire,
 Till love relenting their rebellious ire. Spenser.
RELENTLESS, adj. [from relent.]
 1. Unpitiful; unmoved by kindness or tenderness.
 For this th' avenging pow'r employs his darts;
 Thus will he persecute, relentless in his ire,
 Till the fair slave be render'd to her fire. Dryden.
 Why should the weeping hero now Relentless to their wiles prove. Prior.
 2. In Milton, it perhaps signifies unremitted; intensely fixed upon disquieting objects.
 Only in destroying, I find ease
 To my relentless thoughts. Milton's Par. Lost.
RELEVANT, adj. [French.] Relieving. Dist.
RELEVANCE, n. f. [relevatio, Lat.] A raising or lifting up.
RELIEF, n. f. [from relev.] Trust; dependance; confidence; repose of mind. With an before the object of trust.
 His days and times are past,
 And my reliance on his fracted dates
 Has smit my credit. Shakefp. Timon of Athens.
 That pellucid gelatinous substance, which he pitches upon with so great reliance and positiveness, is chiefly of animal constitution.
 He secured and encreased his prosperity, by an humble behaviour towards God, and a dutiful reliance on his providence. Atterbury's Sermons.
 They afforded a sufficient conviction of this truth, and a firm reliance on the promises contained in it. Rogers.
 Resignation in death, and reliance on the divine mercies, give comfort to the friends of the dying. Clarissa.
 Misfortunes often reduce us to a better reliance, than that we have been accustomed to fix upon. Clarissa.
RELICK, n. f. [reliquie, Lat. reliquus, Fr.]
 1. That which remains; that which is left after the loss or decay of the rest. It is generally used in the plural.
 Up dreary dame of darkness queen,
 Go gather up the reliques of thy race,
 Or else go them avenge. Fairy Queen, b. i.
 Shall we go see the reliques of this town. Shakefp.
 The fragments, scraps, the bits and greasy reliques
 Of her o'ercreaten faith are bound to Diomedes. Shakefp.
 Nor death itself can wholly wash their stains,
 But long contracted filth ev'n in the soul remains;
 The reliques of inveterate vice they wear,
 And spots of sin. Dryden's Ensis.
 2. It is often taken for the body deserted by the soul.
 What needs my Shakespeare for his honour'd bones,
 The labour of an age in piled stones;
 Or that his hallow'd reliques should be hid
 Under a star-pointed pyramid. Milton.
 In peace, ye shades of our great grandfathers, rest;
 Eternal springs, and rising flow'rs adorn
 The reliques of each venerable urn. Dryden.
 Shall our reliques second birth receive?
 Sleep we to wake, and only die to live?
 Thy reliques, Rowe, to this fair shrine we trust,
 And sacred place by Dryden's awful dust;
 Beneath a rude and nameless stone he lies,
 To which thy tomb shall guide enquiring eyes. Pope.
 3. That which is kept in memory of another, with a kind of religious veneration.
 Cows flutter'd into rags, then reliques leaves
 The sport of winds. Milton.
 This church is very rich in reliques; among the rest, they show a fragment of Thomas à Becket, as indeed there are very few treasures of reliques in Italy, that have not a tooth or a bone of this saint. Addison's Remarks on Italy.
RELICKLY, adv. [from relick.] In the manner of reliques.
 Thrifty wench scrapes kitchen stuff,
 And barreling the droppings and the snuff
 Of wasting candles, which in thirty year
 Relickly kept, perhaps buys wedding cheer. Donne.
RELICT, n. f. [relictus, old Fr. relictus, Lat.] A widow; a wife desolate by the death of her husband.

REL

If the fathers and husbands were of the household of faith, then certainly their reliques and children cannot be strangers in this household. Sprat's Sermons.
 Chaste relief!
 Honour'd on earth, and worthy of the love
 Of such a spouse, as now resides above. Garth.
RELIEF, n. f. [relief, Fr.]
 1. The prominence of a figure in stone or metal; the seeming prominence of a picture.
 The figures of many ancient coins rise up in a much more beautiful relief than those on the modern; the face sinking by degrees in the several declensions of the empire, till about Constantine's time, it lies almost even with the surface of the medal. Addison on Ancient Medals.
 Not with such majesty, such bold relief,
 The forms august of kings, or conqu'ring chief,
 E'er swell'd on marble, as in verse have thin'd,
 In polish'd verse, the manners and the mind. Pope.
 2. The recommendation of any thing, by the interposition of something different.
 3. Alleviation of calamity; mitigation of pain or sorrow.
 Thoughts in my unquiet breast are risen,
 Tending to some relief of our extremes. Milton.
 4. That which frees from pain or sorrow.
 So should we make our death a glad relief
 From future shame. Dryden's Knight's Tale.
 Nor dar'd I to presume, that press'd with grief,
 My flight should urge you to this dire relief;
 Stay, stay your steps. Dryden's Ensis.
 5. Dimission of a sentinel from his post.
 For this relief, much thanks; 'tis bitter cold,
 And I am sick at heart. Shakefp. Hamlet.
 6. [Relictum, law Lat.] Legal remedy of wrongs.
RELIEVABLE, adj. [from relieve.] Capable of relief.
 Neither can they, as to reparation, hold plea of things, wherein the party is relievable by common law. Hale.
 To RELIEVE, [relievo, Lat. relever, Fr.]
 1. To recommend by the interposition of something dissimilar.
 As the great lamp of day,
 Through diff'rent regions, does his course pursue,
 And leaves one world but to revive a new;
 While, by a pleasing change, the queen of night
 Relieves his lustre with a milder light. Stepney.
 Since the inculcating precept upon precept will prove tiresome, the poet must not encumber his poem with too much business; but sometimes relieve the subject with a moral reflection. Addison's Essay on the Georgicks.
 2. To support; to assist.
 Parallels, or like relations, alternately relieve each other; when neither will pass afunder, yet are they plausible together. Brown's Vulgar Errors.
 3. To ease pain or sorrow.
 4. To succour by assistance.
 From thy growing store,
 Now lend assistance, and relieve the poor;
 A pittance of thy land will set him free. Dryden.
 5. To set a sentinel at rest, by placing another on his post.
 Honest soldier, who hath relieved you?
 —Bernado has my place, give you good night. Shakefp.
 Relieve the centries that have watch'd all night. Dryden.

 He is the protector of his weakness, and the reliever of his wants. Rogers's Sermons.
RELIEVO, n. f. [Italian.] The prominence of a figure or picture.
 A convex mirror makes the objects in the middle come out from the superficies: the painter must do so in respect of the lights and shadows of his figures, to give them more relief and more strength. Dryden's Dunciad.
 To RELIGHT, v. a. [re and light.] To light anew.
 His pow'r can heal me, and relight my eye. Pope.
RELIGION, n. f. [religion, Fr. religio, Lat.]
 1. Virtue, as founded upon reverence of God, and expectation of future rewards and punishments.
 He that is void of fear, may soon be just,
 And no religion binds men to be traitors. Benj. Johnson.
 One spoke much of right and wrong,
 Of justice, of religion, truth and peace
 And judgment from above. Milton.
 If we consider it as directed against God, it is a breach of religion; if as to men, it is an offence against morality. South.
 By her inform'd, we best religion learn,
 Its glorious object by her aid discern. Blackmore.
 Religion or virtue, in a large sense, includes duty to God and our neighbour; but in a proper sense, virtue signifies duty towards men, and religion duty to God. Watts.
 2. A system of divine faith and worship as opposite to others.
 The image of a brute, adorn'd
 With gay religions, full of pomp and gold. Milton.
 The christian religion, rightly understood, is the deepest and choicest piece of philosophy that is. More.

REL

The doctrine of the gospel proposes to men such glorious rewards and such terrible punishments as no religion ever did, and gives us far greater assurance of their reality and certainty than ever the world had.

RELIGIONIST. n. f. [from religion.] A bigot to any religious persuasion.

The lawfulness of taking oaths may be revealed to the quakers, who then will stand upon as good a foot for preferment as any other subject; under such a motley administration, what pullings and hawlings, what a zeal and bias there will be in each religionist to advance his own tribe, and depress the others.

RELIGIOUS. adj. [from religiosus, Fr. religiosus, Lat.]

1. Pious; disposed to the duties of religion.

It is a matter of sound consequence, that all duties are by so much the better performed, by how much the men are more religious, from whose habits the same proceed.

When holy and devout religious christians are at their beads, 'tis hard to draw them from thence; so sweet is zealous contemplation!

Their lives Religious titled them the sons of God.

2. Teaching religion.

He God doth late and early pray,
More of his grace than gifts to lend;
And entertains the harmless day
With a religious book or friend.

3. Among the Romanists, bound by the vows of poverty, chastity and obedience.

Certain friars and religious men were moved with some zeal, to draw the people to the christian faith.

France has vast numbers of ecclesiasticks, secular and religious.

What the protestants would call a fanatic, is in the Roman church a religious of such an order; as an English merchant in Lisbon, after some great disappointments in the world, resolved to turn capuchin.

4. Exact; strict.

RELIGIOUSLY. adv. [from religiosus.]

1. Piously; with obedience to the dictates of religion.

2. According to the rites of religion.

Alive and dead, and for their brethren slain
Religiously they ask a sacrifice.

3. Reverently; with veneration.

Dost thou in all thy addresses to him, come into his presence with reverence, kneeling and religiously bowing thyself before him.

4. Exactly; with strict observance.

The privileges, justly due to the members of the two houses and their attendants, are religiously to be maintained.

RELIGIOUSNESS. n. f. [from religiosus.] The quality or state of being religious.

TO RELINQUISH. v. a. [from relinquo, Lat.]

1. To forsake; to abandon; to leave; to desert.

The habitation there was utterly relinquished.

2. To quit; to release; to give up.

The ground of God's sole property in any thing is, the return of it made by man to God; by which act he relinquishes and delivers back to God all his right to the use of that thing, which before had been freely granted him by God.

3. To forbear; to depart from.

In case it may be proved, that amongst the number of rites and orders common unto both, there are particulars, the use whereof is utterly unlawful, in regard of some special bad and noisom quality; there is no doubt but we ought to relinquish such rites and orders, what freedom forever we have to retain the other still.

RELINQUISHMENT. n. f. [from relinquish.] The act of forsaking.

Government or ceremonies, or whatsoever it be, which is popish, away with it: this is the thing they require in us, the utter relinquishment of all things popish.

That natural tenderness of conscience, which must first create in the soul a sense of sin, and from thence produce a sorrow for it, and at length cause a relinquishment of it, is took away by a customary repeated course of sinning.

RELISH. n. f. [from relecher, Fr. to lick again. Minibrew, Skinner.]

1. Taste; the effect of any thing on the palate; it is commonly used of a pleasing taste.

Under sharp, sweet and sour, are abundance of immediate peculiar relishes or tastes, which experienced palates can easily discern.

These two bodies, whose vapours are so pungent, spring from saltpetre, which betrays upon the tongue no heat nor corrosiveness, but coldness mixed with a somewhat languid relish retaining to bitterness.

REL

Much pleasure we have lost, while we abstain'd
From this delightful fruit, nor known till now
True relish, tasting.

Could we suppose their relishes as different there, as here, yet the manna in heaven suits every palate.

Sweet, bitter, four, harsh and salt are all the epithets we have to denominate that numberless variety of relishes to be found distinct in the different parts of the same plant.

2. Taste; small quantity just perceptible.

The king becoming graces;
As justice, verity, temperance, staidness,
Devotion, patience, courage, fortitude;
I have no relish of them.

3. Liking; delight in any thing.

We have such a relish for faction, as to have lost that of wit.

Good men after death are distributed among these several islands with pleasures of different kinds, suitable to the relishes and perfections of those settled in them.

4. Sense; power of perceiving excellence; taste.

A man, who has any relish for fine writing, discovers new beauties, or receives stronger impressions from the masterly strokes of a great author every time he peruses him.

Some hidden seeds of goodness and knowledge give him a relish of such reflections, as improve the mind, and make the heart better.

The pleasure of the proprietor, to whom things become familiar, depends, in a great measure, upon the relish of the spectator.

5. Delight given by any thing; the power by which pleasure is given.

Expectation whirls me round;
Th' imaginary relish is so sweet,
That it enchants my sense.

6. Cast; manner.

It preserves some relish of old writing.

TO RELISH. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To give a taste to any thing.

On smoking lard they dine;
A sav'ry bit that serv'd to relish wine.

2. To taste; to have a liking.

I love the people;
Though it do well, I do not relish well
Their loud applause.

How will dissenting brethren relish it?
What will malignants say?

Men of nice palates would not relish Aristotle, as dress'd up by the schoolmen.

He knows how to prize his advantages, and relish the honours which he enjoys.

TO RELISH. v. n.

1. To have a pleasing taste.

The ivory feet of tables were carved into the shape of lions, without which, their greatest dainties would not relish to their palates.

2. To give pleasure.

Had I been the finder-out of this secret, it would not have relished among my other discoveries.

3. To have a flavour.

A theory, which how much soever it may relish of wit and invention, hath no foundation in nature.

RELISHABLE. adj. [from relish.] Gustable; having a taste.

TO RELIVE. v. n. [from live.] To revive; to live anew.

The thing on earth, which is of most avail,
Any virtue's branch and beauty's bud,
Relives not for any good.

TO RELOVE. v. a. [from love.] To love in return.

To own for him so familiar and levelling an affection as love, much more to expect to be reloted by him, were not the least saucy presumption man could be guilty of, did not his own commandments make it a duty.

RELUCENT. adj. [from relucens, Lat.] Shining; transparent; pellucid.

In brighter mazes, the relucens stream Plays o'er the mead.

TO RELUCT. v. n. [from reluctor, Lat.] To struggle again.

We, with studied mixtures, force our relucens appetites, and with all the spells of epicurism, conjure them up, that we may lay them again.

RELUCTANCE. n. f. [from reluctor, Lat.] Unwillingness; reluctance; struggle in opposition.

A little more weight, added to the lower of the marbles, is able to surmount their reluctance to separation, notwithstanding the supposed danger of thereby introducing a vacuum.

It favours
Reluctance against God, and his just yoke Laid on our necks.

Bear witness, heav'n, with what reluctance
Her hapless innocence I doom to die.

REM

Aeneas, when forced in his own defence to kill Lausus, the poet shows compassionate, and tempering the severity of his looks with a reluctance to the action; he has pity on his beauty and his youth; and is loth to destroy such a masterpiece of nature.

How few would be at the pains of acquiring such an habit, and of conquering all the reluctances and difficulties that lay in the way towards virtue.

Many hard stages of discipline must he pass through, before he can subdue the reluctances of his corruption.

With great reluctance man is persuaded to acknowledge this necessity.

RELUCTANT. adj. [from reluctans, Lat.] Unwilling; acting with repugnance.

Reluctant; but in vain! a greater pow'r
Now rul'd him.

Some refuge in the muse's art I found;
Reluctant now I touch'd the trembling string Berest of him, who taught me how to sing.

TO RELUCTATE. v. n. [from reluctor, Lat.] To resist; to struggle against.

In violation of God's patrimony, the first sacrilege is looked on with some horror, and men devise colours to delude their reluctances; but when they have once made the breach, their scrupulosity soon retires.

RELUCTATION. n. f. [from reluctor, Lat.] Repugnance; reluctance.

The king prevailed with the prince, though not without some reluctation.

Adam's sin, or the curse upon it, did not deprive him of his rule, but left the creatures to a rebellion or reluctation.

TO RELUME. v. a. To light anew; to rekindle.

Relume her ancient light, nor kindle new.

TO RELUMINE. v. a. To light anew.

Once put out thy light;
I know not where is that Promethean heat,
That can thy light relumine.

TO RELY. v. n. [from rely, Fr.] To lean upon with confidence; to put trust in; to rest upon; to depend upon.

Go in thy native innocence! rely
On what thou hast of virtue; summon all!
For God tow'rd thee hath done his part, do thine.

Egypt does not on the clouds rely,
But to the Nile owes more than to the sky.

Thus Solon to Pisistratus reply'd, Demanded, on what succour he rely'd,
When with so few he boldly did engage;
He said, he took his courage from his age.

Though reason is not to be relied upon, as universally sufficient to direct us what to do; yet it is generally to be relied upon and obeyed, where it tells us what we are not to do.

Fear relies upon a natural love of ourselves, and is complicated with a necessary desire of our own preservation.

Such variety of arguments only distract the understanding that relies on them.

The pope was become a party in the cause, and could not be relied upon for a decision.

We find so much religion in the ages, as to rely on the general practice for the measures of our duty.

No prince can ever rely on the fidelity of that man, who is a rebel to his Creator.

TO REMAIN. v. n. [from remans, Lat.]

1. To be left out of a greater quantity or number.

That that remains, shall be buried in death.

2. To continue; to endure; to be left.

He for the time remain'd stupidly good.

4. Not to be lost.

Now somewhat sing, whose endless founatenance
Among the shepherds may for aye remain.

5. To be left as not comprised.

That a father may have some power over his children, is easily granted; but that an elder brother has so over his brethren, remains to be proved.

TO REMAIN. v. a. To await; to be left to.

Such end had the kid; for he would weaned be
Of craft, coloured with simplicity;
And such end, pardie, does all them remain
That of such falser friendship shall be fain.

With oaken staff
I'll raise such outcries on thy clatter'd iron,
Which long shall not withhold me from thy head,
That in a little time, while breath remains thee,

REM

Thou oft shalt with thyself at Gath, to boast;
But never shalt see Gath.

If thence he 'scape, what remains him less Than unknown dangers.

The ether conquest now
Remains thee, aided by this host of friends, Back on thy foes more glorious to return.

REMAIN. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. Relic; that which is left.

I grieve with the old, for so many additional inconveniences, more than their small remain of life seemed destined to undergo.

2. The body left by the soul.

But fowls obscene dismember'd his remains,
And dogs had torn him.

Oh would'st thou sing what heroes Windsor bore,
Or raise old warriors, whose ador'd remains,
In weeping vaults, her hallow'd earth contains.

3. Abode; habitation.

A most miraculous work in this good king,
Which, often since my here remain in England,
I've seen him do.

REMAINDER. adj. [from remain.] Remaining; refuse; left.

Is as dry as the remainder biscuit
After a voyage.

We turn not back the silks upon the merchant,
When we have spoil'd them; nor the remainder viands
We do not throw in unrespective place,
Because we now are full.

REMAINDER. n. f.

1. What is left.

The gods protect you,
And bless the good remainders of the court!

A fine is levied to grant a reversion or remainder, expectant upon a lease that yieldeth no rent.

Mahomet's crescent by our feuds encreas'd,
Blasted the learn'd remainders of the East.

Could bare ingratitude have made any one so diabolical, had not cruelty came in as a second to its assistance, and cleared the villain's breast of all remainders of humanity?

There are two restraints which God hath put upon human nature, shame and fear; shame is the weaker, and hath place only in those in whom there are some remainders of virtue.

What madness moves you, matrons, to destroy
The last remainders of unhappy Troy?

If he, to whom ten talents were committed, has squandered away five, he is concerned to make a double improvement of the remainder.

If these decoctions be repeated till the water comes off clear, the remainder yields no salt.

Of six millions raised every year for the service of the publick, one third is intercepted through the several subordinations of artful men in office, before the remainder is applied to the proper use.

TO REMARK. v. a. [from remarque, Fr.]

1. To note; to observe.

It is easy to observe what has been remarked, that the names of simple ideas are the least liable to mistakes.

2. To distinguish; to point out; to mark.

REMARKABLE. adj. [from remarque, Fr.] Observable; worthy of note.

So did Orpheus plainly teach, that the world had beginning in time, from the will of the most high God, whose remarkable words are thus converted.

REM

'Tis remarkable, that they Talk most, who have the least to say.
What we obtain by conversation soon vanishes, unless we note down what remarkable we have found.
REMARKABLENESS. n. f. [from remarkable.] Observable-ness; worthiness of observation.
They signify the remarkableness of this punishment of the Jews, as signal revenge from the crucified Christ. Hammond.
REMARKABLY. adv. [from remarkable.] Observably; in a manner worthy of observation.
Chiefly assur'd,
Remarkably so late, of thy too true,
So faithful love.
Such parts of these writings, as may be remarkably stupid, should become subjects of an occasional criticism. Watts.
REMARKER. n. f. [from remarque, Fr.] Observer; one that remarks.
If the remarker would but once try to outline the author by writing a better book on the same subject, he would soon be convinced of his own insufficiency. Watts.
REMEDIAL. adj. [from remedy.] Capable of remedy.
REMEDIALTE. adj. [from remedy.] Medicinal; affording a remedy. Not in use.
All you, unpublish'd virtues of the earth,

In the good man's distress. Shakespeare, King Lear.
REMEDIBLE. adj. [from remedy.] Not admitting remedy;
irreparable; incurable.
Sad Æsculapius
Imprison'd was in chains remediables. Fairy Queen.
The war, grounded upon this general remediables necessity, may be termed the general, the remediables, or the necessary war. Raleigh's Essays.
We, by rightful doom remediables,
Were lost in death, till he that dwelt above
High-thron'd in secret bliss, for us frail dust Emptied his glory.
Flatter him it may, as those are good at flattering, who are good for nothing else; but in the mean time, the poor man is left under a remediables delusion. South.
REMEDIBLENESS. n. f. [from remediables.] Incurableness.
REMEDY. n. f. [from remedium, Lat. remede, Fr.]
1. A medicine by which any illness is cured.
The difference between poisons and remedies is easily known by their effects; and common reason soon distinguishes between virtue and vice. Swift.
2. Cure of any uneasiness.
Here hope began to dawn; resolv'd to try,
She fix'd on this her utmost remedy. Dryden.
O how short my interval of woe!
Our griefs how swift, our remedies how slow. Prior.
3. That which counteracts any evil.
What may be remedy or cure
To evils, which our own misdeeds have wrought. Milton.
Civil government is the proper remedy for the inconveniences of the state of nature. Locke.
Attempts have been made for some remedy against this evil. Swift.
4. Reparation; means of repairing any hurt.
Things, without all remedy,
Should be without regard. Shakespeare, Macbeth.
In the death of a man there is no remedy. Wyd. ii. 1.
To REMEDY. v. a. [from remedier, Fr.]
1. To cure; to heal.
Sorry we are, that any good and godly mind should be grieved with that which is done; but to remedy their grief, lieth not so much in us as in themselves. Hooker.
2. To repair or remove mischief.
To REMEMBER. v. a. [from remembrer, old Fr. remembrare, Ital.]

2. To recollect; to call to mind.
He having once seen and remembered me, even from the beginning began to be in the rierward. Sidney.
We are said to remember any thing, when the idea of it arises in the mind with a consciousness that we have had this idea before. Watts's Improvement of the Mind.
3. To keep in mind; to have present to the attention.
Remember what I warn thee, shun to taste;
And shun the bitter consequence. Milton.
This is to be remembered, that it is not possible now to keep a young gentleman from vice by a total ignorance of it; unless you will all his life mew him up. Locke.
4. To bear in mind, with intent of reward or punishment.
Cry unto God; for you shall be remembered of him. Bar.
He brings them back,
Rememb'ring mercy and his covenant sworn. Milton.
5. To mention; not to omit.
A citation ought to be certain, in respect of the person cited; for, if such certainty be therein omitted, such citation is invalid, as in many cases hereafter to be remembered. Ayliffe.
6. To put in mind; to force to recollect; to remind.
His hand and leg commanding without threatening, and rather remembering than chaffing. Sidney.

REM

Joy, being altogether wanting, to remember me the more of sorrow.
These petitions, and the answer of the common council of London, were ample materials for a conference with the lords, who might be thereby remembered of their duty. Clarendon.
REMEMBERER. n. f. [from remember.] One who remembers.
A brave master to servants, and a rememberer of the least good office; for his flock he transplanted most of them into plentiful soils. Wotton.
REMEMBRANCE. n. f. [from remembrance, Fr.]
1. Retention in memory.
Though Cloten then but young, time has not wore him
The sad remembrance what he was before. Shakespeare, Cymbeline.
There I have heard relating what was done,
Ere my remembrance. Milton.
Had memory been lost with innocence,
We had not known the sentence nor th' offence;
'Twas his chief punishment to keep in store
The sad remembrance what he was before.
Sharp remembrance on the English part,
And shame of being match'd by such a foe,
Rou'd conscious virtue up in every heart. Dryden.
This ever grateful in remembrance bear
To me thou ow'st, to me the vital air. Pope's Ode.
2. Recollection; revival of any idea.
I hate thy beams,
That bring to my remembrance from what state
I fell; how glorious once above thy sphere. Milton.
Remembrance is when the same idea recurs, without the operation of the like object on the external sensory. Locke.
3. Honourable memory. Out of use.
Rosemary and rue keep Seeming and favour all the winter long,
Grace and remembrance be unto you both. Shakespeare.
4. Transmision of a fact from one to another.
Titan,
Among the heavens, th' immortal fact display'd,
Left the remembrance of his grief should fail,
And in the constellations wrote his tale. Addison.
5. Account preserved.
Those proceedings and remembrances are in the Tower, beginning with the twentieth year of Edward I. Hale.
6. Memorial.
But in remembrance of so brave a deed,
A tomb and funeral honours I decreed. Dryden.
7. A token by which any one is kept in the memory.

She him remembered, as the patron of her life. Spenser.
To REMEMBRATE. v. n. [from remigro, Lat.] To remove back again.
Some other ways he proposes to divert some bodies of their borrowed shapes, and make them remigrate to their first simplicity. Boyle.
REMIGRATION. n. f. [from remigrate.] Removal back again.
The Scots, transplanted hither, became acquainted with our customs, which, by occasional remigrations, became diffused in Scotland. Hale.
To REMINDE. v. a. [re and mind.] To put in mind; to force to remember.
When age itself, which will not be defied, shall begin to arrest, seize and remind us of our mortality by pains and dulness of senses; yet then the pleasure of the mind shall be in its full vigour. South's Sermons.
The brazen figure of the consul, with the ring on his finger, reminded me of Juvenal's majoris pondera gongæ.
Addison's Remarks on Italy.
REMINISCENCE. n. f. [from reminiscens, Latin.] Recollection; recovery of ideas.
I cast about for all circumstances that may revive my memory or reminiscence. Hale's Origin of Mankind.
For

REM

For the other part of memory, called reminiscence, which is the retrieving of a thing at present forgot, or but confusedly remembered, by setting the mind to ransack every little cell of the brain; while it is thus busied, how accidentally does the thing fought for offer itself to the mind? South.
REMINISCENTIAL. adj. [from reminiscence.] Relating to reminiscence.
Would truth dispense, we could be content with Plato, that knowledge were but reminiscence, that intellectual acquisition were but reminiscential evocation. Brown.
REMISS. adj. [from remis, Fr. remissus, Lat.]
1. Not vigorous; slack.
The water deferts the said corpufcles, unless it flow forth with a precipitate motion; for then it hurries them out along with it, till its motion becomes more languid and remiss.
Woodward's Natural History.
2. Not careful; slothful.
Mad ire and wrathful fury makes me weep,
That thus we die, while remiss traitors sleep. Shakespeare.
If when by God's grace we have conquered the first difficulties of religion, we grow careless and remiss, and neglect our guard, God's spirit will not always strive with us. Tillot.
Your candour, in pardoning my errors, may make me more remiss in correcting them. Dryden.
3. Not intense.
These nervous, bold, those languid and remiss;
Here cold salutes, but there a lover's kiss. Recommon.
REMISSIBLE. adj. [from remis.] Admitting forgiveness.
REMISSION. n. f. [from remission, Fr. remissio, Lat.]

My penance is to call Lucetta back,
And ask remission for my folly past. Shakespeare.
That plea
With God or man will gain thee no remission. Milton.
Many believe the article of remission of sins, but they believe it without the condition of repentance or the fruits of holy life. Taylor's Rule of Living Holy.
REMISSLY. adv. [from remiss.]
1. Carelessly; negligently; without close attention.
How should it then be in our power to do it coldly or remissly?
so that our desire being natural, is also in that degree of earnestness whereunto nothing can be added. Hooker.
2. Not vigorously; not with ardour or eagerness; slackly.
There was not an equal concurrence in the prosecution of this matter among the bishops; some of them proceeding more remissly in it. Clarendon.
REMISSNESS. n. f. [from remiss.] Carelessness; negligence;
coldness; want of ardour; inattention.
Future evils,
Or new, or by remissness new conceiv'd,
Are now to have no successive degrees. Shakespeare.
No great offenders 'scape their dooms;
Small praise from lenity and remissness comes. Denham.
Jack, through the remissness of constables, has always found means to escape. Arbutnot's History of John Bull.
The great concern of God for our salvation, is so far from an argument of remissness in us, that it ought to excite our utmost care. Rogers's Sermons.
To REMIT. v. a. [from remitto, Lat.]
1. To relax; to make less intense.
So willingly doth God remit his ire.
Our supreme foe may much remit
His anger; and perhaps thus far remov'd,
Not mind us not offending, satisfy'd
With what is punish'd. Milton.
2. To forgive a punishment.
With suppliant pray'rs their pow'rs appease;
The soft Napæan race will soon repent
Their anger, and remit the punishment. Dryden.
The magistrate can often, where the publick good demands not the execution of the law, remit the punishment of criminal offences by his own authority, but yet cannot remit the satisfaction due to any private man. Locke.
3. [From remette, Fr.] To pardon a fault.
At my lovely Tamora's intreats,
I do remit these young men's heinous faults. Shakespeare.

is seized of them by his latter title, unto his title that is more ancient, in case where the latter is defective. Crovel.
You said, if I return'd next size in Lent,
I should be in remitter of your grace;
In th' interim my letters should take place
Of affidavits. Donne.
REMNANT. n. f. [corrupted from remenant.] Residue; that which is left; that which remains.
Poor key-cold figure of a holy king!
Thou bloodless remnant of that royal blood,
Be't lawful that I invoke thy ghost? Shakespeare, Rich. III.
Bear me hence
From forth the noise and rumour of the field,
Where I may think the remnant of my thoughts. Shakespeare.
About his shelves
Remnants of packthread and old cakes of roses
Were thinly scatter'd. Shakespeare, Romeo and Juliet.
I was entreated to get them some respite and breathing by a cessation, without which they saw no probability to preserve the remnant that had yet escaped. King Charles.
Their Andes are far higher than those with us; whereby it seems that the remnants of the generation of men were in such a deluge saved. Bacon.
The remnant of my tale is of a length
To tire your patience. Dryden's Knight's Tale.
A feeble army and an empty senate,
Remnants of mighty battles fought in vain. Addison.

pery, which never admitted scripture in the vulgar tongue. Swift.
REMNANT. adj. [corruptly formed from remenant.] Remaining; yet left.
It bid her feel
No future pain for me; but instant wed
A lover more proportion'd to her bed;
And quiet dedicate her remnant life
To the just duties of an humble wife. Prior.
REMOLTEN. part. [from remelt.] Melted again.
It were good to try in glass works, whether the crude materials, mingled with glass already made and remolten, do not facilitate the making of glass with less heat. Bacon.

REM

REMONSTRANCE, n. f. [remonstrance, Fr. from remonstrare.]
1. Show; discovery. Not in use.
You may marvel, why I would not rather Make rath remonstrance of my hidden power,
Than let him be so lost. Shakefp. Meas. for Meas.
2. Strong representation.
The same God, which revealeth it to them, would also give them power of confirming it unto others, either with miraculous operation, or with strong and invincible remonstrance of sound reason. Hooker, b. v. f. 10.
A large family of daughters have drawn up a remonstrance, in which they set forth, that their father, having refused to take in the Spectator, they offered to 'bate him the article of bread and butter in the tea-table. Addison's Spectator.
Importunate passions surround the man, and will not suffer him to attend to the remonstrances of justice. Rogers.
To REMONSTRATE, v. n. [remonstrare, Lat. remonstrare, Fr.] To make a strong representation; to show reasons on any side in strong terms.
REMORA, n. f. [Latin.]
1. A let or obstacle.
2. A fish or a kind of worm that sticks to ships, and retards their passage through the water.
Of fishes you shall find in arms the whale, herring, roach and remora. Peacham on Blazoning.
The remora is about three quarters of a yard long; his body before three inches and a half over, thence tapering to the tail end; his mouth two inches and a half over; his chops ending angularly; the nether a little broader; and produced forward near an inch; his lips rough with a great number of little prickles. Grew.

impious act by any remorse of conscience, or that they had not wickedness enough to design and execute it. Clarendon.
2. Tenderness; pity; sympathetic sorrow.
Many little esteem of their own lives, yet, for remorse of their wives and children, would be withheld. Spenser.
Shylock, thou lead'st this fashion of thy malice
To the last hour of act; and then 'tis thought,
Thou'lt shew thy mercy and remorse more strange;
Than is thy strange apparent cruelty. Shakefp. Mer. of Ven.
The rogues slighted me into the river, with as little remorse as they would have drowned a bitch's blind puppies. Shakefp.
Curse on th' unpard'ning prince, whom tears can draw
To no remorse; who rules by lion's law. Dryden.
REMORSEFUL, adj. [remorsus and full.] Tender; compassionate.
O Eglamour, think not I flatter, Valiant and wife, remorseful well accomplish'd, Shakefp.
Love, that comes too late,
Like a remorseful pardon slowly carried,
To the great tender turns a froward offence. Shakefp.
The gaudy, blabbing, and remorseful day
Is crept into the bosom of the sea. Shakefp. Henry VI.
REMORSELESS, adj. [from remorse.] Unpitiful; cruel; savage.
Where were the nymphs, when the remorseless deep Clos'd o'er the head of your lov'd Lycidas. Milton.
O the inexpressible horror that will seize upon a finner, when he stands arraigned at the bar of divine justice! when he shall see his accuser, his judge, the witness, all his remorseless adversaries. South's Sermons.
REMOTE, adj. [remotus, Lat.]
1. Distant; not immediate.
In this narrow scantling of capacity, it is not all remote and even apparent good that affects us. Locke.
2. Distant; not at hand.
3. Removed far off; placed not near.
Wherever the mind places itself by any thought, either amongst, or remote from all bodies, it can, in this uniform idea of space, no where find any bounds. Locke.
In quiet shades, content with rural sports,
Give me a life, remote from guilty courts. Granville.
4. Foreign.
5. Distant; not closely connected.
An unadvised transiency from the effect to the remotest cause. Glarvill.
Syllogism serves not to furnish the mind with intermediate ideas, that shew the connection of remote ones. Locke.
6. Alien; not agreeing.
All those propositions, how remote soever from reason, are so faced, that men will sooner part with their lives, than suffer themselves to doubt of them. Locke.
7. Abstracted.
REMOTELY, adv. [from remote.] Not nearly; at a distance.
It is commonly opinioned, that the earth was thinly inhabited, at least not remotely planted before the flood. Brown.
Two lines in Mezentius and Lausus are indeed remotely allied to Virgil's sense, but too like the tenderness of Ovid, Dry-

In the first front amidst a slaughter'd pile, Smith.
REMOVEDNESS, n. f. [from remote.] State of being remote;
distance; not nearness.
The joys of heaven are like the stars, which by reason of our remoteness appear extremely little. Boyle.
Titian employed brown and earthly colours upon the forepart, and has reserved his greater light for remotenesses and the back part of his landscapes. Dryden.
If the greatest part of bodies escape our notice by their remoteness, others are no less concealed by their minuteness. Locke.
His obscurities generally arise from the remoteness of the customs, persons and things he alludes to. Addison.
REMOVAL, n. f. [from removere, Lat.] The act of removing; the state of being removed to distance.
All this safety were remotion, and thy defence absence. Sha.
This act persuades me,
'Tis the remotion of the duke and her. Shakefp.
The consequent strictly taken, may be a fallacious illusion, in reference to antecedency or consequence; as to conclude from the position of the antecedent unto the position of the consequent, or from the remotion of the consequent to the remotion of the antecedent. Brown's Vulgar Errors.
REMOVABLE, adj. [from remove.] Such as may be removed.
The Irish bishops have their clergy in such subjection, that they dare not complain of them; for knowing their own incapacity, and that they are therefore removable at their bishop's will, yield what pleaseth him. Spenser.
In such a chapel, such curate is removable at the pleasure of the rector of the mother church. Ayliffe's Paragon.
REMOVAL, n. f. [from remove.]
1. The act of putting out of any place.
By which removal of one extremity with another, the world, seeking to procure a remedy, hath purchased a mere exchange of the evil before felt. Hooker.
2. The act of putting away.
The removal of such a disease is not to be attempted by active remedies, no more than a thorn in the flesh is to be taken away by violence. Arbutnot.
3. Diminution from a post.
If the removal of these persons from their posts has produced such popular commotions, the continuance of them might have produced something more fatal. Addison.
Whether his removal was caused by his own fears or other men's artifices, supposing the throne to be vacant, the body of the people was left at liberty to chuse what form of government they pleased. Swift.
4. The state of being removed.
The sitting still of a paralytick, whilst he prefers it to a removal, is voluntary. Locke.
To REMOVE, v. a. [removere, Lat. removere, Fr.]
1. To put from its place; to take or put away.
Good God remove
The means that makes us strangers! Shakefp. Macbeth.

away the understanding of the aged. Job xii. 20.
Remove thy stroke away from me; I am consumed by the blow. Psaln xxxix. 13.
So would he have removed thee out of the straight into a broad place. Job xxxvi. 16.
He longer in this paradise to dwell
Permits not; to remove thee I am come,
And send thee from the garden forth to till
The ground. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. xi.
Whether he will remove his contemplation from one idea to another, is many times in his choice. Locke.
You, who fill the blissful seats above
Let kings no more with gentle mercy sway,
But every monarch be the scourge of God;
If from your thoughts Ulysses you remove,
Who rul'd his subjects with a father's love. Pope's Odyssey.
2. To place at a distance.
They are farther removed from a title to be innate, and the doubt of their being native impressions on the mind, is stronger against these moral principles than the other. Locke.
To REMOVE, v. n.
1. To change place.
2. To go from one place to another.
A short exile must for show precede;
The term expir'd, from Candia they remove,
And happy each at home enjoys his love. Dryden.
How oft from pomp and state did I remove To feed despair. Prior.
REMOVE, n. f. [from the verb.]
1. Change of place.
2. Susceptibility of being removed. Not in use.
What is early received in any considerable strength of impression, grows into our tender natures; and therefore is of difficult remove. Locke.
3. Translation

REMI

3. Translation of one to the place of another.
Rosaline, this favour thou shalt wear; Shakefp.

So shall Biron take me for Rosaline.
And change your favours too; so shall your loves Woo contrary deceiv'd by these removers. Shakefp.
4. State of being removed.
This place should be both school and university, not needing a remove to any other house of scholarship. Milton.
He that considers how little our constitution can bear a remove into parts of this air, not much higher than that we breathe in, will be satisfied, that the allwise architect has suited our organs, and the bodies that are to effect them, one to another. Locke.
5. Act of moving a cheffman or draught.
6. Departure; act of going away.
So look'd Astrea, her remove design'd,
On those distressed friends she left behind. Waller.
7. The act of changing place.
Let him, upon his removes from one place to another, procure recommendation to some person of quality residing in the place whither he removeth. Bacon's Essays.
8. A stop in the scale of gradation.
In all the visible corporeal world, quite down from us, the descent is by easy steps, and a continued series of things, that in each remove differ very little one from the other. Locke.
A freholder is but one remove from a legislator, and ought to stand up in the defence of those laws. Addison.
9. A small distance.
The fiercest contentions of men are between creatures equal in nature, and capable, by the greatest distinction of circumstances, of but a very small remove one from another. Rogers.
10. Act of putting a horse's shoes upon different feet.
His horse wanted two removes, your horse wanted nails. Sw.
REMOVED, particp. adj. [from remove.] Remote; separate from others.
Your accent is something finer, than you could purchase in so removed a dwelling. Shakefp. As You Like it.
REMOVEDNESS, n. f. [from removed.] The state of being removed; remoteness.
I have eyes under my service, which look upon his removedness. Shakefp.
REMOVED, n. f. [from remove.] One that removes.
The mislayer of a merestone is to blame; but the unjust judge is the capital remover of landmarks, when he defineth amiss. Bacon.
Hasty fortune maketh an enterpriser and remover, but the exercised fortune maketh the able man. Bacon.
To REMOUNT, v. n. [remounter, Fr.] To mount again.
Stout Cymon soon remounts, and cleft in two
His rival's head. Dryden.
The rest remounts with the ascending vapours, or is washed down into rivers, and transmitted into the sea. Woodward.
REMUNERABLE, adj. [from remunerare.] Rewardable.
To REMUNERATE, v. a. [remunerare, Lat. remunerare, Fr.]
To reward; to repay; to requite; to recompense.
Is he not then beholden to the man,
That brought her for this high good turn so far?
Yes; and will nobly remunerate. Shakefp. Titus Andronicus.
Money the king thought not fit to demand, because he had received satisfaction in matters of so great importance; and because he could not remunerate them with any general pa-don, being prevented therein by the coronation pardon. Bacon.
In another parable, he represents the great beneficence of wherewith the Lord shall remunerate the faithful servant. Boyle.
REMUNERATION, n. f. [remuneratio, Fr. remuneratio, Lat.]
Reward; requital; recompense; repayment.
Bear this significant to the country maid, Jaquenetta; there is remuneration, for the best ward of mine honour is rewarding my dependants. Shakefp. Love's Labour Lost.
He begets a security of himself, and a careless eye on the last remuneration. Brown's Vulgar Errors.
A collation is a donation of some vacant benefice in the church, especially when such donation is freely bestowed without any prospect of an evil remuneration. Ayliffe.
REMUNERATIVE, adj. [from remunerare.] Exercised in giving rewards.
The knowledge of particular actions seems requisite to the attainment of that great end of God, in the manifestation of his punitive and remunerative justice. Boyle.
To REMURMUR, v. a. [re and murmur.] To utter back in murmurs; to repeat in low hoarse sounds.
Her fate is whisper'd by the gentle breeze,
And told in sighs to all the trembling trees;
The trembling trees, in ev'ry plain and wood,
Her fate remurmur to the silver flood. Pope.
To REMURMUR, v. n. [remurmure, Lat.] To murmur back;
to echo a low hoarse sound.
Her fellow nymphs the mountains tear
With loud laments, and break the yielding air;
The realms of Mars remurmur'd all around,
And echoes to th' Athenian shores rebound. Dryden.

REN

His untimely fate, th' Angitian woods
In sighs remurmur'd to the Fucine floods. Dryden.
RENARD, n. f. [renard, a fox, Fr.] The name of a fox in fable.

again.
To RENAVIGATE, [re and navigare.] To sail again.
RENCOUNTER, n. f. [rencontre, Fr.]
1. Clash; collision.
You may as well expect two bowls should grow sensible by rubbing, as that the rencounter of any bodies should awaken them into perception. Collier.
2. Personal opposition.
Virgil's friends thought fit to alter a line in Venus's speech, that has a relation to the rencounter. Addison.
So when the trumpet founding gives the sign,
The juffling chiefs in rude rencounter join:
So meet, and so renew the dextrous fight;
Their clattering arms with the fierce shock rebound. Gran.
3. Loose or casual engagement.
The confederates should turn to their advantage their apparent odds in men and horse; and by that means out-number the enemy in all rencounters and engagements. Addison.
4. Sudden combat without premeditation.
To RENCOUNTER, v. n. [rencontrer, Fr.]
1. To clash; to collide.
2. To meet an enemy unexpectedly.
3. To skirmish with another.
4. To fight hand to hand.
To REND, v. a. [pret. and pret. pass. rent.] [rentan, Saxon.]
To tear with violence; to lacerate.
Will you hence
Before the tag return, whose rage doth rend
Like interrupted waters, and o'erbear
What they are used to bear. Shakefp. Coriolanus.
He rent a lion as he would have rent a kid, and he had nothing in his hand. Jud. xiv. 4.
I will not rend away all the kingdom, but give one tribe to thy son. 1 Kings xi. 13.
By the thund'rer's stroke it from th' root is rent,
So sure the blows, which from high heaven are sent. Cowley.
What you command me to relate,
Renews the sad remembrance of our fate,
An empire from its old foundations rent. Dryden.
Look round to see
The lurking gold upon the fatal tree;
Then rend it off. Dryden's Zenis.
Is it not as much reason to say, when any monarchy was shattered to pieces, and divided amongst revolted subjects, that God was careful to preserve monarchical power, by rending a settled empire into a multitude of little governments. Locke.
When its way th' impetuous passion found,
I rend my tresses, and my breast I wound. Pope.
From cloud to cloud the rending lightnings rage. Thomf.
RENDER, n. f. [from rend.] One that rends; a tearer.
To RENDER, v. a. [rendre, Fr.]
1. To return; to pay back.
What shall I render unto the Lord for all his benefits. Pf.
They that render evil for good are adversaries. Pf. xxxviii.
Will ye render me a recompense? Job iii. 4.
Let him look into the future state of bliss or misery, and see there God, the righteous judge, ready to render every man according to his deeds. Locke.
2. To restore; to give back.
Hither the seas at stated times resort,
And shove the loaden vessels into port;
Then with a gentle ebb retire again,
And render back their cargo to the main. Addison.
3. To give upon demand.
The sluggard is wiser in his own conceit, than seven men that can render a reason. Proverbs xxvi. 16.
4. To invest with qualities; to make.
Because the nature of man carries him out to action, it is no wonder if the same nature renders him solicitous about the issue. South's Sermons.
Love
Can answer love, and render bliss secure, Thomson.
5. To represent; to exhibit.
I heard him speak of that same brother,
And he did render him the most unnatural
That liv'd amongst men. Shakefp.
6. To translate.
Render it in the English a circle; but 'tis more truly rendered a sphere. Burnet's Theory of the Earth.
He has a clearer idea of strigil and fistrum, a curry-comb and cymbal, which are the English names dictionaries render them by. Locke.
He

REN

- He uses only a prudent dissimulation; the word we may almost literally render master of a great presence of mind. Broom's Notes on the Odyssey.
7. To surrender; to yield; to give up.
I will call him to so strict account,
That he shall render every glory up,
Or I will tear the reck'ning from his heart. Shaksp.
My rend'ring my person to them, may engage their affections to me. King Charles.
Once, with whom he used to advise, proposed to him to render himself upon conditions to the earl of Essex. Clarendon.
Would he render up Hermione,
And keep Aftyanax, I should be blest! A. Philips.
8. To offer; to give to be used.
Logick renders its daily service to wisdom and virtue. Watts.
- RENDER, n. f. [from the verb.] Surrender.
Newells
Of Cloten's death, we being not known, nor muster'd
Among the bands, may drive us to a render. Shaksp.
- RENDEZVOUS, n. f. [rendez vous, Fr.]
1. Assembly; meeting appointed.
A commander of many ships should rather keep his fleet together, than have it severed far asunder; for the attendance of meeting them again at the next rendezvous would consume time and victual. Raleigh's Apology.
2. A sign that draws men together.
The philosophers-stone and a holy war are but the rendezvous of cracked brains, that wear their feather in their head instead of their hat. Bacon.
3. Place appointed for assembly.
The king appointed his whole army to be drawn together to a rendezvous at Marlborough. Clarendon.
This was the general rendezvous which they all got to, and mingling more and more with that oily liquor, they sucked it all up. Burnet's Theory of the Earth.
- TO RENDEZVOUS, v. n. [from the noun.] To meet at a place appointed.
- RENDITION, n. f. [from render.] Surrendering; the act of yielding.
- RENEGADE, n. f. [renegado, Spanish; renegat, Fr.]
1. One that apostatizes from the faith; an apostate.
There lived a French renegade in the same place, where the Castilian and his wife were kept prisoners. Addison.
2. One who deserts to the enemy; a revolter.
Some fraggling soldiers might prove renegadoes, but they would not revolt in troops.
If the Roman government subsisted now, they would have had renegade seamen and shipwrights enough. Arbutnot.
- TO RENEGE, v. a. [renego, Lat. renit, Fr.] To disown.
His captain's heart,
Which, in the scuffles of great fights, hath burst
The buckles on his breast, reneges all temper. Shaksp.
Such smiling rogues as these loath every passion,
Renegs, affirm, and turn their halcyon beaks
With every gale and vary of their masters. Shaksp.
The design of this war is to make me renege my conscience and thy truth. King Charles.
- TO RENEW, v. a. [re and new; renova, Lat.]
1. To renovate; to restore the former state.
In such a night
Medea gather'd the enchanted herbs,
That did renew old Æson. Shaksp. Merch. of Venice.
It is impossible for those that were once enlightened—if they shall fall away to renew them again unto repentance. Hebrews vi. 6.
Let us go to Gilgal, and renew the kingdom there. 1 Sam.
Renew'd to life, that the night daily die,
I daily doom'd to follow. Dryden's Theat. and Honor.
2. To repeat; to put again in act.
Thy famous grandfather
Doth live again in thee; long may'st thou live,
To bear his image, and renew his glories! Shaksp.
The body percuss'd hath, by reason of the percussive, a trepidation wrought in the minute parts, and so reneweth the percussive of the air. Bacon's Natural History.
The bearded corn ensu'd
From earth unask'd, nor was that earth renew'd. Dryden.
3. To begin again.
The last great age, foretold by sacred rhymes,
Renews its finish'd course, Saturnian times Rowl round again. Dryden's Virgil's Pastorals.
4. In theology, to make anew; to transform to new life.
Be ye transformed by the renewing of your mind, that ye may prove what is that perfect will of God. Rom. xii. 2.
- RENEWABLE, adj. [from renew.] Capable to be renewed.
The old custom upon many estates is to let for leases of lives, renewable at pleasure. Swift's Miscellanies.
- RENEWAL, n. f. [from renew.] The act of renewing; renovation.
It behoved the deity, persisting in the purpose of mercy to mankind, to renew that revelation from time to time, and to rectify abuses, with such authority from the renewal and recti-

REN

- fication, as was sufficient evidence of the truth of what was revealed. Forbes.
- RENITENCY, n. f. [from renitens.] That resistance in solid bodies, when they press upon, or are impelled one against another, or the resistance that a body makes on account of weight. Quincy.
- RENITENT, adj. [renitens, Lat.] Acting against any impulse by elastic power.
By an inflation of the muscles, they become soft; and yet renitent, like to many pillows, dissipating the force of the pressure, and so taking away the sense of pain. Roy.
- RENNET, n. f. See RUNNET.
- A putridous ferment coagulates all humours, as milk with rennet is turned. Floyer on the Humours.
- RENNET, n. f. [properly reinette, a little queen.] A kind RENNETING, s. of apple.
A golden rennet is a very pleasant and fair fruit, of a yellow flush, and the best of bearers for all sorts of soil; of which there are two sorts, the large sort and the small. Mort.
Ripe pulpy apples, as pippins and rennetings, are of a syrupy tenacious nature. Mortimer's Husbandry.
- TO RENOVATE, v. a. [renovo, Lat.] To renew; to restore to the first state.
All nature feels the renovating force
Of winter, only to the thoughtless eye
In ruin seen. Thomson's Winter.
- RENOVATION, n. f. [renovation, Fr. renovatio, Lat.] Renewal; the act of renewing; the state of being renewed.
Sound continueth some small time, which is a renovation, and not a continuance; for the body percuss'd hath a trepidation wrought in the minute parts, and so reneweth the percussive of the air. Bacon's Natural History.
The kings entered into speech of renewing the treaty; the king saying, that though king Philip's person were the same, yet his fortunes were raited; in which case a renovation of treaty was used. Bacon's Henry VII.
- To second life,
Wak'd in the renovation of the just,
Reigns him up, with heav'n and earth renew'd. Milton.
- TO RENOUNCE, v. a. [renuncio, Fr. renuncio, Lat.]
1. To disown; to abnegate.
From Thebes my birth I own; and no disgrace
Can force me to renounce the honour of my race. Dryden.
2. To quit upon oath.
This world I do renounce; and in your fights Shake patiently my great affliction off. Shaksp. K. Lear.
- TO RENOUNCE, v. n. To declare renunciation. The following passage is a mere Gallicism: renoncez a man sang.
On this firm principle I ever stood;
He of my sons, who fails to make it good,
By one rebellious act renounces to my blood. Dryden.
- RENOU'NCEMENT, n. f. [from renounce.] Act of renouncing; renunciation.
I hold you as a thing enskied and sainted;
By your renouncement, an immortal spirit. Shaksp.
- RENOWN, n. f. [renommée, Fr.] Fame; celebrity; praise widely spread.
She
Is daughter to this famous duke of Milan,
Of whom so often I have heard renown. Shaksp.
'Tis of more renown
To make a river, than to build a town. Waller.
Nor envy we Thy great renown, nor grudge thy victory. Dryden.
- TO RENOWN, v. a. [renommer, Fr. from the noun.] To make famous.
Let us satisfy our eyes
With the memorials and the things of fame,
That do renown this city. Shaksp. Twelfth Night.
Soft elocution does thy style renown,
Gentle or sharp according to thy choice,
To laugh at follies, or to lash at vice. Dryden.
In solemn silence stand
Stern tyrants, whom their cruelties renown,
And emperors in Parian marble frown. Addison.
A bard, whom pilfer'd pastorals renown,
Just writes to make his barrenness appear. Pope.
- RENOWNED, particp. adj. [from renown.] Famous; celebrated; eminent; famed.
These were the renowned of the congregation, princes of the tribes, heads of thousands. Numb. i. 16.
That thrice renowned and learned French king, finding Petrarch's tomb without any inscription, wrote one himself; saying, shame it was, that he who sung his mistress's praise seven years before her death, should twelve years want an epitaph. Peacham on Poetry.
- The rest were long to tell, though far renown'd. Milton.
Of all the cities in Roman lands,
The chief and most renown'd Ravenna stands,
Adorn'd in ancient times with arms and arts. Dryden.
Ilva,
An isle renown'd for steel and unexhausted mines. Dryden.

REP

- RENT, n. f. [from rend.] A break; a laceration.
Thou viper
Hast cancell'd kindred, made a rent in nature,
And through her holy bowels gnaw'd thy way, Dryden.
Through thy own blood to empire.
He who sees this vast rent in so high a rock, how the convex parts of one side exactly tally with the concave of the other, must be satisfied, that it was the effect of an earthquake. Addison's Remarks on Italy.
- TO RENT, v. a. [rather to rend.] To tear; to lacerate.
A time to rent, and a time to sew. Ecclesi. iii. 7.
- TO RENT, v. n. [now written rant.] To roar; to bluster; we still say, a tearing fellow, for a noisy bully.
He ventur'd to diminish his fear,
That partings went to rent and tear,
And give the desperate attack
To danger still behind its back. Hadibras, p. iii.
- RENT, n. f. [rente, Fr.]
1. Revenue; annual payment.
Idol ceremony,
What are thy rents? what are thy comings in?
O ceremony thou me but thy worth! Shaksp. Hen. V.
I bought an annual rent of two,
And live just as you see I do. Pope's Epist. of Horace.
2. Money paid for any thing held of another.
Such is the thing that the blest tenant feeds
On precious fruits, and pays his rent in weeds. Waller.
Folks in mudwall tenements,
Present a peppercorn for rent. Prior.
- TO RENT, v. a. [renter, Fr.]
1. To hold by paying rent.
When a servant is called before his master, it is often to know, whether he passed by such a ground, if the old man, who rents it, is in good health. Addison's Spectator.
2. To let to a tenant.
- RENTABLE, adj. [from rent.] That may be rented.
- RENTAL, n. f. [from rent.] Schedule or account of rents.

Heav'n soon repair'd her mural breach.
2. To amend any injury by an equivalent.
He justly hath driv'n out his rebel foes
To deepest hell; and to repair their loss Created this new happy race of men. Milton's Par. Lost.
3. To fill up anew, by something put in the place of what is lost.
To be reveng'd,
And to repair his numbers thus impair'd. Milton.
- REPAIR, n. f. [from the verb.] Reparation; supply of loss; restoration after dilapidation.
Before the curing of a strong disease,
Ev'n in the instant of repair and health,
The fit is strongest. Shaksp. King Lear.
Temperance, in all methods of curing the gout, is a regular and simple diet, proportioning the daily repairs to the daily decays of our waiting bodies. Temple's Miscellanies.
All automata need a frequent repair of new strength, the causes whence their motion does proceed, being subject to fail. Wilkins's Mathematical Magick.
- TO REPAIR, v. n. [reparer, Fr.] To go to; to betake himself.
May all to Athens back again repair. Shaksp.
Depart from hence in peace,
Search the wide world, and where you please repair. Dryden.
'Tis fix'd; th' irrevocable doom of Jove:
Haste then, Cyllenius, through the liquid air,
Go mount the winds, and to the shades repair. Pope.
- REPAIR, n. f. [repare, Fr. from the verb.]
1. Refort; abode.

REP

- So 'scapes th' insulting fire his narrow jail, Dryden.
And makes small outlets into open air;
There the fierce winds his tender force assail,
And beat him downward to his first repair. Dryden.
2. Act of betaking himself any whither.
The king sent a proclamation for their repair to their houses, and for a preservation of the peace. Clarendon.
- REPAIRER, n. f. [from repair.] Amender; restorer.
He that governs well, leads the blind, but he that teaches, gives him eyes; and it is a glorious thing to have been the repairer of a decayed intellect. South's Sermons.
O sacred rest!
O peace of mind! repairer of decay,
Whose balms renew the limbs to labours of the day. Dryd.
- REPA'NDUS, adj. [repandus, Lat.] Bent upwards.
Though they be drawn repandous or convexly crooked in one piece, yet the dolphin that carrieth Arion is concavously inverted, and hath its spine depressed in another. Brown.
- REPARABLE, adj. [reparable, Fr. reparabilis, Lat.] Capable of being amended, retrieved, or supplied by something equivalent.
The parts in man's body easily reparable, as spirits, blood and flesh, die in the embracement of the parts hardly reparable, as bones, nerves and membranes. Bacon.
When its spirit is drawn from wine, it will not, by the re-union of its constituent liquors, be reduced to its pristine nature; because the workmanship of nature, in the disposition of the parts, was too elaborate to be imitable, or reparable by the bare apposition of those divided parts to each other. Boyle.
An adulterous person is tied to restitution of the injury, so far as it is reparable, and can be made to the wronged person; to make provision for the children begotten in unlawful embraces. Taylor's Rule of Living Holy.
- REPARABLY, adv. [from reparable.] In a manner capable of remedy by restitution, amendment or supply.
- REPARATION, n. f. [reparation, Fr. reparatio, from reparo, Lat.]
1. The act of repairing.
Antonius Philopoli took care of the reparation of the highways. Arbutnot on Coins.
2. Supply of what is wasted.
When the organs of sense want their due repose and necessary reparations, the soul exerts herself in her several faculties. Addison.
In this moveable body, the fluid and solid parts must be consumed; and both demand a constant reparation. Arbutnot.
3. Recompense for any injury; amends.
The king should be able, when he had cleared himself, to make him reparation. Bacon.
I am sensible of the scandal I have given by my loose writings, and make what reparation I am able. Dryden.
- REPARATIVE, n. f. [from repair.] Whatever makes amends for loss or injury.
New preparatives were in hand, and partly reparatives of the former beaten at sea. Watson's Buckingham.
- REPARTEE, n. f. [repartie, Fr.] Smart reply.
The fools overflowed with smart repartees, and were only distinguished from the intended wits, by being called coxcombs. Dryden's Duressney.
- Sullen was Jupiter just now:
And Cupid was as bad as he;
Hear but the younger's repartee. Prior.
- TO REPARTEE, v. n. To make smart replies.
High flights she had, and wit at will,
And to her tongue lay seldom still;
For in all visits who but she,
To argue, or to repartee? Prior.
- TO REPASS, v. a. [repasser, Fr.] To pass again; to pass back.
Well we have pass'd, and now repass'd the seas,
And brought desir'd help. Shaksp. Henry VI.
We shall find small reason to think, that Abraham pass'd and repass'd those ways more often than he was enforced to do, if we consider that he had no other comforter in this wearisome journey, than the strength of his faith in God. Ral.
If his soul hath wing'd the destin'd flight,
Homeward with pious speed repass the main,
To the pale shade funeral rites ordain. Pope's Odyssey.
- TO REPASS, v. n. To go back in a road.
Five girdles bind the skies, the torrid zone
Glow with the passing and repassing sun. Dryden.
- REPA'ST, n. f. [repar, Fr. re and passus, Lat.]
1. A meal; act of taking food.
From dance to sweet repast they turn Delirious; all in circles as they stood,
Tables are set. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. v.
What neat repast shall feast us, light and choice,
Of Attick taste, with wine. Milton.
Sleep, that is thy best repast,
Yet of death it bears a taste,
And both are the same thing at last. Denham.
The day
Had summon'd him to due repast at noon. Dryden.
Keep

REP

Keep regular hours for repast and sleep. Arbutnot.

representments. Brown's Vulgar Errors.
TO REPRESS. v. a. [repressus, Lat. reprimere, Fr.]
1. To crush; to put down; to subdue.
Discontents and ill blood having used always to repress and appease in person, he was loth they should find him beyond sea. Bacon's Henry VII.
Some, taking dangers to be the only remedy against dangers, endeavour'd to set up the sedition again, but they were speedily repressed, and thereby the sedition suppressed wholly. Hayward.
Such kings
Favour the innocent, repress the bold,
And, while they flourish, make an age of gold. Waller.
How can I
Repress the horror of my thoughts, which fly
The sad remembrance. Denham.
Thus long succeeding critics justly reign'd,
Licence repress'd, and useful laws ordain'd:
Learning and Rome alike in empire grew.
Armies stretch, repressing here
The frantick Alexander of the North. Pope.
2. To compress. Not proper.
REPRESS. n. f. [from the verb.] Repression; act of crushing.

choly, yet cannot secure him from his conscience. South.
Having been condemned for his part in the late rebellion, his majesty had been pleas'd to reprove him, with several of his friends, in order to give them their lives. Addison.

REP

He reproveth the sinner from time to time, and continues and heaps on him the favours of his providence, in hopes that, by an act of clemency so undeserved, he may prevail on his gratitude and repentance. Rogers's Sermons.
REPRIVE. n. f. [from the verb.] Respite after sentence of death.
In his reprove he may be so fitted,
That his soul sicken not. Shaksp. Measure for Measure.
I hope it is some pardon or reprove
For Claudio. Shaksp. Measure for Measure.
He cannot thrive,
Unless her prayers, whom heav'n delights to hear,
And loves to grant, reprove from the wrath
Of greatest justice. Shaksp. All's well that ends well.
The morning Sir John Hotham was to die, a reprove was sent to suspend the execution for three days. Clarendon.
All that I ask, is but a short reprove,
Till I forget to love, and learn to grieve. Denham.
TO REPRIMAND. v. a. [reprimander, Fr. reprimere, Lat.] To chide; to check; to reprehend; to reprove.
Germanicus was severely reprimanded by Tiberius, for travelling into Egypt without his permission. Arbutnot.
REPRIMAND. n. f. [reprimande, Fr. from the verb.]
Reproof; reprehension.
He inquires how such an one's wife or son do, whom he does not see at church; which is understood as a secret reprimand to the person absent. Addison's Spectator, N^o 112.
TO REPRINT. v. a. [re and print.]
1. To renew the impression of any thing.
The business of redemption is to rub over the defaced copy of creation, to reprint God's image upon the soul, and to set forth nature in a second and a fairer edition. South.
2. To print a new edition.
My bookseller is reprinting the essay on criticism. Pope.
REPRISAL. n. f. [reprisalia, low Lat. reprisaille, Fr.] Something seized by way of retaliation for robbery or injury.
The English had great advantage in value of reprisals, as being more strong and active at sea. Hayward.
Sense must sure thy safest plunder be,
Since no reprisals can be made on thee. Pope.
REPRISE. n. f. [repris, Fr.] The act of taking something in retaliation of injury.
Your care about your banks infers a fear
Of threatening floods and inundations near;
If so, a just reprise would only be
Of what the land usurp'd upon the sea. Dryden.
TO REPROACH. v. a. [reprocho, Fr.]
1. To censure in opprobrious terms, as a crime.
Mezentius, with his ardour warm'd
His fainting friends, reproach'd their shameful flight, Repell'd the victors. Dryden's Aeneis.
The French writers do not burden themselves too much with plot, which has been reproach'd to them as a fault. Dry.
2. To charge with a fault in severe language.
If ye be reproach'd for the name of Christ, happy are ye. 1 Peter iv. 14.
That shame
There sit not, and reproach us as unclean. Milton.
2. To upbraid in general.
These things are grievous; the upbraiding of house-room, and reproaching of the lender. Ecclesi. xxix. 28.
The very regret of being surpassed in any valuable quality, by a person of the same abilities with ourselves, will reproach our own laziness, and even shame us into imitation. Rogers.
REPROACH. n. f. [reproche, Fr. from the verb.] Censure; infamy; shame.
With his reproach and odious menace,
The knight embolling in his haughty heart,
Knit all his forces. Fairy Queen.
If black scandal or foul-fac'd reproach
Attend the sequel of your imposition,
Your mere enforcement shall acquittance me. Shaksp.
Thou, for the testimony of truth, hast borne Universal reproach. Milton.
REPROACHABLE. adj. [reproachable, Fr.] Worthy of reproach.
REPROACHFUL. adj. [from reproach.]
1. Scurrilous; opprobrious.
O monstrous! what reproachful words are these. Shaksp.
I have theath'd
My rapier in his bosom, and withal Thrust these reproachful speeches down his throat. Shaksp.
An advocate may be punished for reproachful language, in respect of the parties in suit. Ayliffe's Parergon.
2. Shameful; infamous; vile.
To make religion a stratagem to undermine government is contrary to this superstructure, most scandalous and re-proachful to christianity. Hammond's Fundamentals.
Thy punishment
He shall endure, by coming in the flesh
To a reproachful life and cur'd death. Milton's Par. Lost.
21 Q
REPROACHFULLY.

REP

REPROACHFULLY, adv. [from reproach.]
 1. Opprobriously; ignominiously; scurrilously.
 Shall I then be us'd reproachfully? Shakefp. Hen. VI.
 I will that the younger women marry, and give none occasion to the adversary to speak reproachfully. 1 Tim. v. 14.
 2. Shamefully; infamously.
REPROBATE, adj. [reprobatus, Lat.] Lost to virtue; lost to grace; abandoned.
 They profess to know God, but in works deny him, being abominable, and to every good work reprobate. Tit. i. 16.
 Strength and art are easily outdone.
 By spirits reprobate. Milton.
 God forbid, that every single commission of a sin, though great for its kind, and withal acted against conscience, for its aggravation, should so far deprave the soul, and bring it to such a reprobate condition, as to take pleasure in other men's sins. South's Sermons.
REPROBATE, n. f. A man lost to virtue; a wretch abandoned to wickedness.
 What if we omit
 This reprobate, till he were well inclin'd. Shakefp.
 I acknowledge myself for a reprobate, a villain, a traitor to the king, and the most unworthy man that ever lived. Ral.
 All the saints have profited by tribulations; and they that could not bear temptations, became reprobates. Taylor.
TO REPROBATE, v. a. [reprobo, Lat.]
 1. To disallow; to reject.
 Such an answer as this is reprobated and disallowed of in law; I do not believe it, unless the deed appears. Ayliffe.
 2. To abandon to wickedness and eternal destruction.
 What should make it necessary for him to repent and amend, who either without respect to any degree of amendment is supposed to be elected to eternal bliss, or without respect to sin, to be irreversibly reprobated. Hammond.
 A reprobated hardness of heart does them the office of philosophy towards a contempt of death. L'Estrange.
 3. To abandon to his sentence, without hope of pardon.
 Drive him out
 To reprobated exile round the world,
 A captive, vagabond, abhor'd, accus'd. Southern.
REPROBATENESS, n. f. [from reprobate.] The state of being reprobate.
REPROBATION, n. f. [reprobation, Fr. from reprobate.]
 1. The act of abandoning or state of being abandoned to eternal destruction.
 This sight would make him do a desperate turn;
 Yea curse his better angel from his side,
 And fall to reprobation. Shakefp. Othello.
 Though some words may be accommodated to God's predestination, yet it is the scope of that text to treat of the reprobation of any man to hell-fire. Bramhall against Hobbs.
 God, upon a true repentance, is not so fatally tied to the spindle of absolute reprobation, as not to keep his promise, and seal merciful pardons. Maine.
 2. A condemnatory sentence.
 You are empower'd to give the final decision of wit, to put your stamp on all that ought to pass for current, and set a brand of reprobation on clipt poetry and false coin. Dryden.
TO REPRODUCE, v. a. [re and produce; reproduire, Fr.]
 To produce again; to produce anew.
 If horse dung reproduces oats, it will not be easily determined where the power of generation ceaseth. Brown.
 Those colours are unchangeable, and whenever all those rays with those their colours are mixed again, they reproduce the same white light as before. Newton's Opticks.
REPRODUCTION, n. f. [from reproduce.] The act of producing anew.
 I am about to attempt a reproduction in vitriol, in which it seems not unlikely to be performable. Boyle.
REPROOF, n. f. [from reprove.]
 1. Blame to the face; reprehension.
 Good Sir John, as you have one eye upon my follies, turn another into the register of your own, that I may pass with a reproof the easier. Shakefp. Merry Wives of Windsor.
 Fear not the anger of the wife to rail;
 Those best can bear reproof, who merit praise. Pope.
 2. Censure; slander. Out of use.
 Why, for thy sake, have I suffer'd reproof? shame hath covered my face.
REPROVABLE, adj. [from reprove.] Culpable; blamable; worthy of reprehension.
 If thou dost find thy faith as dead after the reception of the sacrament as before, it may be thy faith was not only little, but reproveable. Taylor's Worthy Communicant.
TO REPROVE, v. a. [reprover, Fr.]
 1. To blame; to censure.
 I will not reprove thee for thy sacrifices. Psalms l. 8.
 2. To charge to the face with a fault; to check; to chide; to reprehend.
 What if they can better be content with one that can wink at their faults, than with him that will reprove them. Whitg.
 There is no slander in an allow'd fool, though he do nothing but rail; nor no railing in a known discreet man, though he do nothing but reprove. Shakefp. Twelfth Night.

REP

What if thy son
 Prove disobedient and reprov'd, retort,
 Wherefore didst thou beget me? Milton.
 If a great personage undertakes an action passionately, let it be acted with all the malice and impotency in the world, he shall have enough to flatter him, but not enough to reprove him. Taylor's Rule of Living Holy.
 3. To refuse; to disprove.
 My lords,
 Reprove my allegation if you can. Shakefp. Henry VI.
 4. To blame for. With of.
 To reprove one of laziness, they will say, dost thou make idle a coat? that is a coat for idleness. Carew.
REPROVER, n. f. [from reprove.] A reprehender; one that reproves.
 Let the most potent sinner speak out, and tell us, whether he can command down the clamours and revilings of a guilty conscience, and impose silence upon that bold reprover. South.
 This shall have from every one, even the reprovers of vice, the title of living well. Locke on Education.
TO REPRUNE, v. a. [re and prune.] To prune a second time.
 Reprune apricots and peaches, faving as many of the young likeliest shoots as are well placed. Evelyn's Kalendar.
REPTILE, adj. [reptile, Lat.] Creeping upon many feet. In the following lines reptile is confounded with serpent.
 Cleanse baits from filth, to give a tempting gloss, Cherish the fully'd reptile race with moils. Gay.
REPTILE, n. f. An animal that creeps upon many feet.
 Terrestrial animals may be divided into quadrupeds or reptiles, which have many feet, and serpents which have no feet. Locke's Elements of Natural Philosophy.
 Holy retreat! silence no female hither,
 Conscious of social love and nature's rites,
 Must dare approach, from the inferior reptile,
 To woman, form divine. Prior.
REPUBLICAN, adj. [from republick.] Placing the government in the people.
REPUBLICAN, n. f. [from republick.] One who thinks a commonwealth without monarchy the best government.
 These people are more happy in imagination than the rest of their neighbours, because they think themselves so; though such a chimerical happiness is not peculiar to republicans. Ad.
REPUBLICK, n. f. [republica, Lat. republicque, Fr.] Commonwealth; state in which the power is lodged in more than one.
 Those that by their deeds will make it known,
 Whose dignity they do sustain;
 And life, state, glory, all they gain,
 Count the republick's, not their own. Benj. J. Anon.
 They are indebted many millions more than their whole republick is worth. Addison's State of the War.
REPUABLE, adj. [from repudiate.] Fit to be rejected.
TO REPUDIATE, v. a. [repudio, Lat. repudier, Fr.] To divorce; to reject; to put away.
 Here is a notorious instance of the folly of the atheists, that while they repudiate all title to the kingdom of heaven, merely for the present pleasure of body, and their boasted tranquillity of mind, besides the extreme madness in running such a desperate hazard after death, they unwittingly deprive themselves here of that very pleasure and tranquillity they seek for.
 Let not those, that have repudiated the more inviting sins, show themselves philtred and bewitched by this. G. of Tongue.
REPUDIATION, n. f. [repudiation, Fr. from repudiate.] Divorce; rejection.
 It was allowed by the Athenians, only in case of repudiation of a wife. Arbutnot in Cato.
REPUGNANCE, n. f. [repugnance, Fr. from repugnant.]
REPUGNANCY, n. f. [repugnancy, Fr. from repugnant.]
 1. Inconsistency; contrariety.
 But where difference is without repugnancy, that which hath been can be no prejudice to that which is. Hooker.
 It is no affront to omnipotence, if, by reason of the formal incapacity and repugnancy of the thing, we aver that the world could not have been made from all eternity. Bentley.
 2. Reluctance; unwillingness; struggle of opposite passion.
 Why do fond men expose themselves to battle,
 And let the foes quietly cut their throats, Without repugnancy? Shakefp. Timon of Athens.
 Thus did the passions act without any of their present jars, combats or repugnances, all moving with the beauty of uniformity and the fitness of composure. South's Sermons.
 That which causes us to lose most of our time, is the repugnance which we naturally have to labour. Dryden.
REPUGNANT, adj. [repugnant, Fr. repugnans, Lat.]
 1. Disobedient; not obsequious.
 His antique sword,
 Rebellious to his arm, lies where it falls, Repugnant to command. Shakefp. Hamlet.
 2. Contrary; opposite.
 Why I reject the other conjectures is; because they have not due warrant from observation, but are clearly repugnant thereto. Woodward's Natural History.
REPUGNANTLY, adv.

REQ

REPUGNANTLY, adv. [from repugnant.] Contradictorily.
 They speak not repugnantly thereto. Brown's Vulg. Err.
TO REPULULATE, v. n. [re and pullula, Lat. repulluler, Fr.] To bud again.
 Though tares repullulate, there is wheat still left in the field. Howel's Vocal Forest.
REPULSE, n. f. [repulse, Fr. repulsa, Latin.] The condition of being driven off or put aside from any attempt.
 My repulse at Hull seemed an act of so rude disloyalty, that my enemies had scarce confidence enough to abet it. K. Cha.
 Nor much expect
 A foe so proud will first the weaker seek;
 So bent, the more shall flame him his repulse. Milton.
 By fate repell'd, and with repulse tir'd. Denham.
TO REPULSE, v. a. [repulsi, Lat.] To beat back; to drive off.
 The christian defendants still repulsed them with greater courage than they were able to assail them. Kneller.
 This fleet, attempting St. Minoes, were repulsed, and without glory or gain, returned into England. Hayward.
 Man complete to have discover'd and repuls'd
 Whatever wiles of foe or seeming friend. Milton.
REPULSION, n. f. [repulsus, Lat.] The act or power of driving off from itself.
 Air has some degree of tenacity, whereby the parts attract one another; at the same time, by their elasticity, the particles of air have a power of repulsion or flying off from one another. Arbutnot.
REPULSIVE, adj. [from repulse.] Driving off; having the power to beat back or drive off.
 The parts of the salt or vitriol recede from one another, and endeavour to expand themselves, and get as far asunder as the quantity of water, in which they float, will allow; and does not this endeavour imply, that they have a repulsive force by which they fly from one another, or that they attract the water more strongly than one another? Newton's Opticks.
TO REPURCHASE, v. a. [re and purchase.] To buy again.
 Once more we sit on England's royal throne,
 Repurchase'd with the blood of enemies;
 What valiant foe-men, like to autumn's corn,
 Have we mow'd down in top of all their pride? Shakefp.
 If the son alien those lands, and repurchase them again in fee, the rules of descent are to be observed, as if he were the original purchaser. Hale's Law of England.
REPUTABLE, adj. [from repute.] Honourable; not infamous.
 If ever any vice shall become reputable, and be gloried in as a mark of greatness, what can we then expect from the man of honour, but to signalize himself. Regiers's Sermons.
 In the article of danger, it is as reputable to elude an enemy as defeat one. Broom.
REPUTABLY, adv. [from reputable.] Without discredit.
 To many such worthy magistrates, who have thus reputably filled the chief seats of power in this great city, I am now addressing my discourse. Atterbury's Sermons.
REPUTATION, n. f. [reputation, Fr. from repute.] Credit; honour; character of good.
 Reputation is an idle and most false imposition; oft got without merit, and lost without deserving; you have lost no reputation at all, unless you repute yourself such a loser. Shak.
 Verily, upon the lake of Geneva, has the reputation of being extremely poor and beggarly. Addison.
 A third interprets motions, looks and eyes;
 At every word a reputation dies. Pope's Rape of the Lock.
TO REPUTE, v. a. [repute, Lat. reputer, Fr.] To hold; to account; to think.
 The king was reputed a prince most prudent. Shakefp.
 I do repute her grace
 The rightful heir to England's royal seat. Shakefp.
 I do know of those,
 That therefore only are reputed wife,
 For saying nothing. Shakefp. Merchant of Venice.
 Men, such as chuse
 Law practice for mere gain, boldly repute
 Worse than embrothel'd trumpets prostitute. Donne.
 If the grand vizier be so great, as he is reputed, in politicks he will never consent to an invasion of Hungary. Temple.
REPUTE, n. f. [from the verb.]
 1. Character; reputation.
 2. Established opinion.
 He who reigns
 Monarch in heav'n, till then as one secure,
 Sat on his throne, upheld by old repute. Milton.
REPUTELESS, adj. [from repute.] Disreputable; disgraceful.
 A word not indecent, but out of use.
 Opinion, that did help me to the crown,
 Had left me in reputeless banishment,
 A fellow of no mark nor livelihood. Shakefp. Hen. V.
REQUEST, n. f. [requeste, Fr.]
 1. Petition; entreaty.
 But ask what you would have reform'd,
 I will both hear and grant you your requests. Shakefp.
 Haman stood up to make request for his life to Esther. Esth.

REQ

All thy request for man, accepted son!
 Obtain; all thy request was my decree. Milton's Par. Lost.
 Ask him to lend
 To this, the last request that I shall send,
 A gentle ear. Denham.
 2. Demand; repute; credit; state of being desired.
 Tullus Aufidius will appear well in these wars, his great opposer Coriolanus being now in no request of his country. Shakefp. Coriolanus.
 Whilst this vanity of thinking, that men are obliged to write either systems or nothing, is in request, many excellent notions are suppressed. Boyle.
 Knowledge and fame were in as great request as wealth among us now. Temple.
TO REQUEST, v. a. [requester, Fr.] To ask; to solicit; to entreat.
 To-night we hold a solemn supper, Sir,
 And I'll request your presence. Shakefp. Macbeth.
 It was to be requested of Almighty God by prayer, that those kings would seriously fulfil all that hope of peace. Kneller.
 The virgin quire for her request,
 The god that sits at marriage feast;
 He at their invoking came,
 But with a scarce well-lighted flame. Milton.
 In things not unlawful, great persons cannot be properly said to request, because all things considered, they must not be denied. South's Sermons.
REQUESTER, n. f. [from request.] Petitioner; solicitor.
TO REQUICKEN, v. a. [re and quicken.] To reanimate.
 By and by the din of war 'gan pierce
 His ready sense, when straight his doubled spirit
 Requick'd what in flesh was fatigate,
 And to the battle came he. Shakefp. Coriolanus.
REQUIEM, n. f. [Latin.]
 1. A hymn in which they implore for the dead requiem or rest.
 We should profane the service of the dead,
 To sing a requiem and such peace to her;
 As to peace-parted souls. Shakefp.
 2. Rest; quiet; peace. Not in use.
 The midwife kneel'd at my mother's throes,
 With pain produc'd, and nurs'd for future woes;
 Else had I an eternal requiem kept,
 And in the arms of peace for ever slept. Sandys.
REQUIRABLE, adj. [from require.] Fit to be required.
 It contains the certain periods of times, and all circumstances requirable in a history to inform. Hale.
TO REQUIRE, v. a. [require, Lat. requerir, Fr.]
 1. To demand; to ask a thing as of right, Ye me require
 A thing without the compals of my wit;
 For both the lineage and the certain fire,
 From which I sprung, are from me hidden yet. Spenser.
 We do require them of you, so to use them,
 As we shall find their merits. Shakefp. King Lear.
 This, the very law of nature teacheth us to do; and this the law of God requirerth also at our hands. Spelman.
 This imply'd
 Subjection, but requir'd with gentle sway.
 Ours alliance other lands desir'd,
 And what we seek of you, of us requir'd. Dryden.
 God, when he gave the world in common to all mankind, commanded men also to labour, and the penalty of his condition required it. Locke.
 2. To make necessary; to need.
 The king's business required haste. 1 Sam. xxi. 8.
 High from the ground the branches would require Thy utmost reach. Milton.
 But why, alas! do mortal men complain;
 God gives us what he knows our wants require,
 And better things than those which we desire. Dryden.
REQUISITE, adj. [requisitus, Lat.] Necessary; needful; required by the nature of things.
 When God new modelled the world by the introduction of a new religion, and that in the room of one set up by himself, it was requisite, that he should recommend it to the reasons of men with the same authority and evidence that enforced the former. South's Sermons.
 Cold calleth the spirits to succour, and therefore they cannot so well close and go together in the head, which is ever requisite to sleep. Bacon's Natural History.
 Prepare your soul with all those necessary graces, that are more immediately requisite to this performance. Wake.
REQUISITE, n. f. Any thing necessary.
 Res non parva labores, sed reliqua, was thought by a poet to be one of the requisites to a happy life. Dryden.
 For want of these requisites, most of our ingenious young men take up some cried up English poet, adore him, and imitate him, without knowing wherein he is defective. Dryden.
 This God on his part has declared for the requisites on ours, what we must do to obtain these blessings, is the great business of us all to know. Wake.
REQUISITELY, adv.

RES

REQUISITELY. adv. [from requisite.] Necessarily; in a requisite manner.

We discern how requisitely the several parts of scripture are fitted to several times, persons, and occurrences. Boyle.

REQUISITENESS. n. f. [from requisite.] Necessity; the state of being requisite.

Discerning how exquisitely the several parts of scripture are fitted to the several times, persons and occurrences intended, we shall discover not only the sense of the obscurer passages, but the requisiteness of their having been written so obscurely. Boyle.

REQUITAL. n. f. [from requite.]

1. Return for any good or bad office; retaliation.
Should we take the quarrel of sermons in hand, and revenge their cause by requital, thrusting prayer in a manner out of doors under colour of long preaching? Hooker.

Since you
Wear your gentle limbs in my affairs,
Be bold, you do so grow in my requital,
As nothing can unroot you. Shak. All's well that ends well.

We hear
Such goodness of your justice, that our soul
Cannot but yield you forth to public thanks, Forerunning your requital. Shaksp. Meas. for Meas.
I see you are obsequious in your love, and I profess requi-
tal. Shaksp. Henry VI.

No merit their averfion can remove,
Nor ill requital can efface their love. Waller.

2. Reward; recompense.
He ask'd me for a song,
And in requital op'd his leathern scrip,
And shew'd me fimples of a thousand names,
Telling their strange and vigorous faculties. Milton.

I have ta'en a cordial,
Sent by the king or Haly, in requital
Of all my miseries, to make me happy. Denham.

In all the light that the heavens bestow upon this lower world, though the lower world cannot equal their benefac-tion, yet with a kind of grateful return it reflects those rays, that it cannot recompense; so that there is some return however, though there can be no requital. South's Sermons.

TO REQUITE. v. a. [requiter, Fr.] To repay; to retaliate good or ill; to recompense.

If he love me to madness, I shall never requite him. Shak.
He hath requited me evil for good. 1 Sam. xxv. 21.
Open not thine heart to every man, lest he requite thee with a shrewd turn. Ecclef. viii. 19.

When Joseph's brethren saw that their father was dead, they said, Joseph will requite us all the evil we did. Genesis l.
An avenger against his enemies, and one that shall requite kindness to his friends. Ecclef. xxx. 6.

Him within protect from harms;
He can requite thee, for he knows the charms
That call fame on such gentle acts as these. Milton.

Great idol of mankind, we neither claim
The praise of merit, nor aspire to fame!
'Tis all we beg thee to conceal from fight
Those acts of goodness which themselves requite;
O let us still the secret joy partake,
To follow virtue ev'n for virtue's sake. Pope.

Unhappy Wallace,
Great patriot hero! ill requited chief!
Thomson.

REMOUSE. n. f. [hryemur, Saxon.] A bat.
REWARD. n. f. The rear or last troop.

RESALE. n. f. [re and sale.] Sale at second hand.
Monopolies and coemption of wares for resale, where they are not restrained, are great means to enrich. Bacon.

TO RESALUTE. v. a. [resaluto, Lat. resaluto, Fr.] To salute or greet anew.

We drew her up to land,
And trod ourselves the resaluted sand.
To resalute the world with sacred light,
Leucothea wak'd. Milton.

TO RESAIL. v. a. [re and sail.] To sail back.
From Pyle resailing, and the Spartan court,
Horrid to speak! in ambush is decreed. Pope's Odyssey.

TO RESCIND. v. a. [rescindere, Lat. rescinder, Fr.] To cut off;
to abrogate a law.

It is the imposing a sacramental obligation upon him, which being the condition, upon the performance whereof all the promises of endless bliss are made over, it is not possible to rescind or disclaim the standing obliged by it. Hammond.

I spake against the test, but was not heard;
These to rescind, and peccage to restore. Dryden.

RESCISSIION. n. f. [rescission, Fr. rescissus, Lat.] The act of cutting off; abrogation.

If any infer rescission of their estate to have been for idolatry, that the governments of all idolatrous nations should be also dissolved, it followeth not. Bacon.

RESCISSORY. adj. [rescissivus, Fr. rescissus, Lat.] Having the power to cut off.

TO RESCRIBE. v. a. [rescribo, Lat. rescribere, Fr.]
To write back.

RES

1. Whenever a prince on his being consulted rescribes or writes back Toleramus, he dispenses with that act otherwise unlawful. Ayliffe's Pavegen.

2. To write over again.
Calling for more paper to rescribe them, he shewed him the difference betwixt the ink-box and the sand-box. Howd.

RESCRIPT. n. f. [rescript, Fr. rescriptum, Lat.] Edict of an emperor.

One finding a great mass of money digged under ground, and being somewhat doubtful, signified it to the emperor, who made a rescript thus; Use it. Bacon's Apophthegms.

The popes, in such cases, where canons were silent, did, after the manner of the Roman emperors, write back their determinations, which were filed rescripts or decretal epistles, having the force of laws. Ayliffe's Pavegen.

TO RESCUE. v. a. [rescorre, old Fr.] To set free from any violence, confinement, or danger.

Sir Scudamore, after long sorrow, in the end met with Britomartis, who succoured him and rescued his love. Spens.
My uncles both are slain in rescuing me. Shaksp.

We're beset with thieves;
Rescue thy mistress, if thou be a man. Shaksp.
Dr. Bancroft understood the church excellently, and had almost rescued it out of the hands of the Calvinian party. Clar.

He that is so sure of his particular election, as to resolve he can never fall, if he commit those acts, against which scripture is plain, that they that do them shall not inherit eternal life, must necessarily resolve, that nothing but the removing his fundamental error can rescue him from the superstructure. Hammond's Fundamentals.

Who was that just man, whom had not heav'n Rescued, had in his righteousness been lost? Milton.

Riches cannot rescue from the grave,
Which claims alike the monarch and the slave. Dryden.

RESCUE. n. f. [rescousse, rescousse, old Fr. rescussus, low Lat.]
Deliverance from violence, danger, or confinement.

How comes it, you
Have help to make this rescue. Shaksp. Coriolanus.

RESCUER. n. f. [from rescue.] One that rescues.
RESEARCH. n. f. [researche, Fr.] Enquiry; search.

By a skillful application of those notices, may be gained in such researches the accelerating and bettering of fruits, emptying mines and draining fens. Glauvill's Scip.

I submit those mistakes, into which I may have fallen, to the better consideration of others, who shall have made re- search into this business with more felicity. Holder.

A felicity adapted to every rank, such as the researches of human wisdom fought for, but could not discover. Regin.

TO RESEARCH. v. a. [researcher, Fr.] To examine; to enquire.

It is not easy to research with due distinction, in the actions of eminent personages, both how much may have been blemished by the envy of others, and what was corrupted by their own felicity. Wotton's Buckingham.

TO RESEAT. v. a. [re and seat.] To seat again.
When he's produc'd, will you reseat him
Upon his father's throne? Dryden's Spanish Fryar.

RESEIZER. n. f. One that seizes again.
RESEIZURE. n. f. [re and seizure.] Repeated seizure; seizure a second time.

Here we have the charter of foundation; it is now the more easy to judge of the forfeiture or reseizure: deface the image, and you divest the right. Bacon.

RESEMBLANCE. n. f. [resemblance, Fr.] Likeness; similitude; representation.

These sensible things, which religion hath allowed, are resemblances formed according to things spiritual, whereunto they serve as a hand to lead, and a way to direct. Hooker.

Fairest resemblance of thy maker fair,
Thee all things living gaze on. Milton.

One main end of poetry and painting is to please; they bear a great resemblance to each other. Dryden's Duffrynon.

The quality produced hath commonly no resemblance with the thing producing it; wherefore, we look on it as a bare effect of power. Locke.

They are but weak resemblances of our intentions, faint and imperfect copies that may acquaint us with the general design, but can never express the life of the original. Addison.

So chymists boast they have a pow'r,
From the dead ashes of a flow'r,
Some faint resemblance to produce,
But not the virtue. Swift's Miscellanist.

I cannot help remarking the resemblance betwixt him and our author in qualities, fame, and fortune. Pope.

TO RESEMBLE. v. a. [resembler, Fr.]
1. To compare; to represent as like something else.
Most fairly may we resemble ourselves to God, in respect of that pure faculty, which is never separate from the love of God. Raleigh's History of the World.

The torrid parts of Africa are resembled to a libbard's skin, the distance of whose spots represent the disperseness of habitations. Brewster on Languages.

RES

2. To be like; to have likeness to.
If we see a man of virtues, mixed with infirmities, fall into misfortune, we are afraid that the like misfortunes may happen to ourselves, who resemble the character. Addison.

TO RESEND. v. a. [re and send.] To send back; to send again. Not in use.

I sent to her, by this same coxcomb,
Tokens and letters, which she did resend. Shaksp.

TO RESENT. v. a. [ressentir, Fr.]
1. To take well or ill.

A serious consideration of the mineral treasures of his territories, and the practical discoveries of them by way of my philosophical theory, he then so well resented, that afterwards, upon a mature digestion of my whole design, he commanded me to let your lordships understand, how great an inclination he hath to further so hopeful a work. Bacon.

2. To take ill; to consider as an injury or affront. This is now the most usual sense.

Thou with scorn
And anger would'st resent the offer'd wrong. Milton.

RESENT. n. f. [from resent.] One who feels injuries deeply.
The earl was the worst philosopher, being a great resentor, and a weak discernment of the least disgrace. Wotton.

RESENTFUL. adj. [resent and full.] Malignant; easily provoked to anger, and long retaining it.

RESENTINGLY. adv. [from resenting.] With deep sense;
with strong perception; with anger.

Hylobares judiciously and resentingly recapitulates your main reasonings. More's Divine Dialogues.

RESENTMENT. n. f. [resentment, Fr.]
1. Strong perception of good or ill.

He retains vivid resentments of the more solid morality.
More's Divine Dialogues.

Some faces we admire and dote on; others, in our impartial apprehensions, no less deserving, we can behold without resentment; yea, with an invincible disregard. Glauvill.

What he hath of sensible evidence, the very grand work of his demonstration, is but the knowledge of his own re- sentment; but how the same things appear to others, they only know that are conscious to them; and how they are in themselves, only he that made them. Glauvill's Scip.

2. Deep sense of injury.
Can heav'nly minds such high resentment show,
Or exercise their spirit in human woe? Dryden.

I cannot, without some envy, and a just resentment against the opposite conduct of others, reflect upon that generosity, wherewith the heads of a struggling faction treat those who will undertake to hold a pen in their defence. Swift.

RESERVATION. n. f. [reservation, Fr.]
1. Reserve; concealment of something in the mind.

Nor had I any reservations in my own soul, when I pass'd that bill, nor repentings after. King Charles.

We swear with jejunctious equivocations and mental re- servations. Sanderfon against the Covenant.

2. Something kept back; something not given up.
Ourself by monthly course,
With reservation of an hundred knights,
By you to be sustain'd, shall our abode
Make with you by due turns. Shaksp. King Lear.

This is academical reservation in matters of easy truth, or rather sceptical infidelity against the evidence of reason. Bacon.

These opinions Steele and his faction are endeavouring to propagate among the people concerning the present ministry; with what reservation to the honour of the queen, I cannot determine. Swift's Miscellanist.

3. Custody; state of being treasured up.
He will'd me,
In heedfullest reservation, to bestow them
As notes, whose faculties inclusive were,
More than they of note. Shaksp.

RESERVATORY. n. f. [reservoir, Fr.] Place in which any thing is reserved or kept.

How I got such notice of that subterranean reservoirary as to make a computation of the water now concealed therein, peruse the propositions concerning earthquakes. Woodward.

TO RESERVE. v. a. [reserve, Fr. reserve, Lat.]
1. To keep in store; to save to some other purpose.

I could add many probabilities of the names of places;
but they should be too long for this, and I reserve them for another. Spenser's State of Ireland.

Hast thou seen the treasures of the hail, which I have re-reserved against the day of trouble? Joh xxxviii. 23.

David houghed all the chariot horses, but reserved of them for an hundred chariots. 2 Sam. viii. 4.

Flowers
Reserved from night, and kept for thee in store. Milton.

2. To retain; to keep; to hold.
Reserve thy state, with better judgment check
This hideous rashness. Shaksp.
Will he reserve his anger for ever? will he keep it to the end? Jer. iii. 5.

3. To lay up to a future time.
The Lord knoweth how to deliver the godly out of temptation, and to reserve the unjust unto the day of judgment to be punished. 2 Peter ii. 9.

RES

tations, and to reserve the unjust unto the day of judgment to be punished.

The breach seems like the fissures of an earthquake, and threatens to swallow all that attempt to close it, and reserves its cure only for omnipotence. Decay of Piety.

Conceal your esteem and love in your own breast, and re- serve your kind looks and language for private hours. Swift.

RESERVE. n. f. [from the verb.]
1. Store kept untouched.

The assent may be withheld upon this suggestion, that I know not yet all that may be said: and therefore, though I be beaten, it is not necessary I should yield, not knowing what forces there are in reserve behind. Locke.

2. Something kept for exigence.
The virgins, besides the oil in their lamps, carried likewise a reserve in some other vessel for a continual supply. Tillotson.

3. Something concealed in the mind.
However any one may concur in the general scheme, it is still with certain reserves and deviations, and with a salvo to his own private judgement. Addison's Freeholder.

4. Exception; prohibition.
Is knowledge so despis'd?

Or envy, or what reserve forbids to taste? Milton.

5. Exception in favour.
Each has some darling lust, which pleads for a reserve, and which they would fain reconcile to the expectations of religion. Rogers's Sermons.

6. Modesty; caution in personal behaviour.
Ere guardian thought could bring its scatter'd aid,
My soul surpris'd, and from herself disjoin'd,
Left all reserve, and all the sex behind. Prior.

RESERVED. adj. [from reserve.]
1. Modest; not loosely free.

To all obliging, yet reserved to all,
None could himself the favour'd lover call. Walsh.

2. Sullen; not open; not frank.
Nothing reserved or sullen was to see,
But sweet regards. Dryden.

RESERVEDLY. adv. [from reserved.]
1. Not with frankness; not with openness; with reserve.

I must give only short hints, and write but obscurely and reservedly, until I have opportunity to express my sentiments with greater copiousness and perspicuity. Woodward.

2. Scrupulously; coldly.
He speaks reservedly, but he speaks with force;
Nor can a word be chang'd but for a worse. Pope.

RESERVEDNESS. n. f. [from reserved.] Closeness; want of frankness; want of openness.

Observe their gravity
And their reservedness, their many cautions Fitting their persons. Benj. Johnson's Cataline.

By formality, I mean something more than ceremony and complement, even a solemn reservedness, which may well conflict with honesty. Wotton.

There was great wariness and reservedness, and so great a jealousy of each other, that they had no mind to give or receive visits. Clarendon, b. viii.

Disimulation can but just guard a man within the compass of his own personal concerns, which yet may be more effectually done by that silence and reservedness, that every man may innocently practise. South's Sermons.

RESERVER. n. f. [from reserve.] One that reserves.
RESERVOIR. n. f. [reservoir, Fr.] Place where any thing is kept in store.

There is not a spring or fountain, but are well provided with huge cisterns and reservoirs of rain and snow-water. Add.

Who sees pale Mammon pine amidst his store,
Sees but a backward steward for the poor;
This year a reservoir, to keep and spare;
The next, a fountain spouting through his heir. Pope.

TO RESEATTLE. v. a. [re and settle.] To settle again.
Will the house of Austria yield the least article, even of usurped prerogative, to resettle the minds of those princes in the alliance, who are alarmed at the consequences of the emperor's death. Swift.

RESETTLEMENT. n. f. [from resettle.]
1. The act of settling again.

To the quieting of my passions, and the resettlement of my discomposed soul, I consider that grief is the most absurd of all the passions. Norris's Miscellanist.

2. The state of settling again.
Some roll their cask to mix it with the lees, and, after a resettlement, they rack it. Mortimer's Husbandry.

RESIANCE. n. f. [from resistant.] Residence; abode; dwelling. Resistance and resistant are now only used in law.

The king forthwith banished all Flemings out of his kingdom, commanding his merchant adventurers, which had a resiance in Antwerp, to return. Bacon's Henry VII.

RESPIANT. adj. [respiant, Fr.] Resident; present in a place.
Solyman was come as far as Sophia, where the Turks great lieutenant in Europe is always respiant, before that the Hungarians were aware. Knoles's History of the Turks.

The Allobroges here respiant in Rome. Benj. Johnson.

RES

To RESIDE, v. n. [resideo, Lat. resider, Fr.]
 1. To have abode; to live; to dwell; to be present.
 How can God with such reside? Milton.
 In no fix'd place the happy souls reside;
 In groves we live, and lie on mossy beds. Dryden's Æneis.
 2. [Reside, Lat.] To sink; to subside; to fall to the bottom.
 Oil of vitriol and petroleum, a drachm of each, turn into a mouldy substance; there residing in the bottom a fair cloud and a thick oil on the top. Boyle.
 RESIDENCE, n. f. [residence, Fr.]
 1. Act of dwelling in a place.
 Something holy lodges in that breast,
 And with these raptures moves the vocal air,
 To testify his hidden residence. Milton.
 There was a great familiarity between the confessor and duke William; for the confessor had often made considerable residences in Normandy. Hale's Law of England.
 2. Place of abode; dwelling.
 Within the infant rind of this small flower,
 Poison hath residence and medicine power. Shakespeare.
 Understand the same
 Of fish within their wat'ry residence. Milton's Par. Lost.
 Caprea had been the retirement of Augustus for some time, and the residence of Tiberius for several years. Addison.
 3. [From reside, Lat.] That which settles at the bottom of liquors.
 Separation is wrought by weight, as in the ordinary residence or settlement of liquors. Bacon.
 Our clearest waters, and such as seem simple unto sense, are much compounded unto reason, as may be observed in the evaporation of water, wherein, besides a terrene residence, some salt is also found. Brown's Vulgar Errors.
 RESIDENT, adj. [residents, Lat. resident, Fr.] Dwelling or having abode in any place.
 I am not concerned in this objection; not thinking it necessary, that Christ should be personally present or resident on earth in the millennium. Burnet's Theory of the Earth.
 He is not said to be resident in a place, who comes thither with a purpose of retiring immediately; so also he is said to be absent, who is absent with his family. Ayliffe's Parergon.
 RESIDENT, n. f. [from the adj.] An agent, minister, or officer residing in any distant place with the dignity of an ambassador.
 The pope fears the English will suffer nothing like a resident or consul in his kingdoms. Addison.
 RESIDENTIARY, adj. [from resident.] Holding residence.
 Christ was the conductor of the Israelites into the land of Canaan, and their residential guardian. More.
 RESIDUAL, adj. [from residuum, Lat.] Relating to the RESIDUARY, s. residue; relating to the part remaining.
 'Tis enough to lose the legacy, or the residuary advantage of the estate left him by the deceased. Ayliffe.
 RESIDUE, n. f. [residu, Fr. residuum, Lat.] The remaining part; that which is left.
 The causes are all such as expel the most volatile parts of the blood, and fix the residue. Arbutnot on Aliments.
 To RESIST, v. a. [re and sisto, Fr.] To beat again. Obsolete.
 In wretched prison long he did remain,
 Till they outran his utmost date,
 And then therein resisted was again,
 And ruled long with honourable state. Fairy Queen, b. ii.
 To RESIGN, v. a. [resigner, Fr. resigno, Lat.]
 1. To give up a claim or possession.
 Resign
 Your crown and kingdom, indirectly held. Shakespeare.
 I'll to the king, and signify to him,
 That thus I have resign'd to you my charge. Shakespeare.
 To her thou didst resign thy place. Milton.
 Phœbus resigns his darts, and Jove
 His thunder, to the god of love. Denham.
 Ev'ry Iliana would resign her breast;
 And ev'ry dear Hippolytus be blest. Prior.
 2. To yield up.
 Whoever shall resign their reasons, either from the root of deceit in themselves, or inability to resist such trivial ingana-tions from others, although their condition may place them above the multitude, yet are they still within the line of vulgarity. Brown's Vulgar Errors.
 Desirous to resign and render back
 All I receiv'd. Milton.
 Those, who always resign their judgment to the last man they heard or read, truth never sinks into those men's minds; but, camelion-like, they take the colour of what is laid before them, and as soon lose and resign it to the next that comes in their way. Locke.
 3. To give up in confidence. With up emphatical.
 What more reasonable, than that we should in all things resign up ourselves to the will of God. Tillotson.
 4. To submit; particularly to submit to providence.
 Happy the man, who studies nature's laws,
 His mind possessing in a quiet state,
 Fearless of fortune, and resign'd to fate. Dryden.
 A firm, yet cautious, mind,
 Sincere, though prudent; constant, yet resign'd. Pope.

RES

5. To submit without resistance or murmur.
 What thou art, resign to death. Shakespeare, Henry VI.
 RESIGNATION, n. f. [resignation, Fr.]
 1. The act of resigning or giving up a claim or possession.
 Do that office of thine own good will;
 The resignation of thy state and crown. Shakespeare, Rich. II.
 He intended to procure a resignation of the rights of the king's majesty's sisters and others, entitled to the possession of the crown. Hayward.
 2. Submission; unresisting acquiescence.
 We cannot expect, that any one should readily quit his own opinion, and embrace ours, with a blind resignation to an authority, which the understanding acknowledges not. Locke.
 There is a kind of sluggish resignation, as well as poorness and degeneracy of spirit, in a state of slavery, that very few will recover themselves out of it. Addison.
 3. Submission without murmur to the will of God.
 RESIGNER, n. f. [from resign.] One that resigns.
 RESIGNMENT, n. f. [from resign.] Act of resigning.
 RESIGNMENT, n. f. [from resign, Lat.] The act of starting RESIGNMENT, s. or leaping back.
 If you strike a ball fiddling, the rebound will be as much the contrary way; whether there be any such resignment in echoes, that is, whether a man shall hear better if he stand aside the body repercussing, than if he stand where he speaketh, may be tried. Bacon's Natural History.
 RESILIENT, adj. [resiliens, Lat.] Starting or springing back.
 RESILITION, n. f. [resilio, Lat.] The act of springing back;
 resilience.
 RESIN, n. f. [resine, Fr. resina, Lat.] The fat sulphurous parts of some vegetable, which is natural or procured by art, and will incorporate with oil or spirit, not an aqueous menstrum. Quincy.
 RESINOUS, adj. [from resin; resineux, Fr.] Containing resin; consisting of resin.
 Resinous gums, dissolved in spirit of wine, are let fall again,
 if the spirit be copiously diluted. Boyle on Colours.
 RESINOUSNESS, n. f. [from resinous.] The quality of being resinous.
 RESPIRANCE, n. f. [respirance, Fr. respirantia, low Lat.]
 Wisdom after the fact; repentance.
 To RESIST, v. a. [resisto, Lat. resister, Fr.]
 1. To oppose; to act against.
 All the regions
 Do seemingly revolt; and, who resist,
 Are mock'd for valiant ignorance,
 And perish constant fools. Shakespeare, Coriolanus.
 Submit to God; resist the devil, and he will flee. Ja. iv.
 2. To not admit impression or force.
 Not keen nor solid could resist that edge. Milton.
 RESISTANCE, [resistance, Fr. This word, like many others, RESISTENCE, is differently written, as it is supposed to have come from the Latin or the French.]
 1. The act of resisting; opposition.
 Demetrius, seeing that the land was quiet, and that no resistance was made against him, sent away all his forces. 1 Mac.
 2. The quality of not yielding to force or external impression.
 The resistance of bone to cold is greater than of flesh; for that the flesh shrinketh, but the bone resisteth, whereby the cold becometh more eager. Bacon.
 Mufick so softens and disarms the mind,
 That not an arrow does resistance find. Waller.
 The idea of solidity we receive by our touch, and it arises from the resistance which we find in body to the entrance of any other body into the place it possesses. Locke.
 But that part of the resistance, which arises from the vis inertia, is proportional to the density of the matter, and cannot be diminished by dividing the matter into smaller parts, nor by any other means, than by decreasing the density of the medium. Newton's Opticks.
 RESISTIBILITY, n. f. [from resistible.] Quality of resisting.
 Whether the resistibility of Adam's reason did not equivalence the facility of Eve's seduction, we refer unto school-men. Brown's Vulgar Errors.
 The name body, being the complex idea of extension and resistibility, together, in the same subject, these two ideas are not exactly one and the same. Locke.
 RESISTIBLE, adj. [from resist.] That may be resisted.
 That is irresistible; this, though potent, yet is in its own nature resistible by the will of man; though it many times prevails by its efficacy. Hale's Origin of Mankind.
 RESISTLESS, adj. [from resist.] Irresistible; that cannot be opposed.
 Our own eyes do every where behold the sudden and resistless assaults of death. Raleigh's History of the World.
 All at once to force resistless way. Milton.
 Since you can love, and yet your error see,
 The same resistless power may plead for me. Dryden.
 She chang'd her fate;
 Resistless in her love, as in her hate. Dryden.
 Though thine eyes resistless glance dart,
 A stronger charm is thine, a generous heart. Logie.
 RESOLVABLE.

RES

RESOLVABLE, adj. [from resolvere.]
 1. That may be analysed or separated.
 Pride is of such intimate connection with ingratitude, that the actions of ingratitude seem directly resolvable into pride, as the principal reason of them. South.
 As the serum of the blood is resolvable by a small heat, a greater heat coagulates, so as to turn it horny like parchment. Arbutnot on Aliments.
 2. Capable of solution or of being made less obscure.
 The effect is wonderful in all, and the causes best resolvable from observations made in the countries themselves, the parts through which they pass. Brown's Vulgar Errors.
 RESOLUBLE, adj. [resoluble, Fr. re and solubilis, Lat.] That may be melted or dissolved.
 Three is not precisely the number of the distinct elements, whereinto mixt bodies are resolvable by fire. Boyle.
 To RESOLVE, v. a. [resolv, Lat. resolvere, Fr.]
 1. To inform; to free from a doubt or difficulty.
 In all things then are our confusions best resolved, and in most agreeable fort unto God and nature resolved, when they are so far persuaded, as those grounds of persuasion will bear. Hooker, b. ii. f. 7.
 Give me some breath,
 Before I positively speak in this;
 I will resolve your grace immediately. Shakespeare, Rich. III.
 I cannot brook delay, resolve me now;
 And what your pleasure is, shall satisfy me. Shakespeare.
Resolve me, strangers, whence and what you are? Dryden.
 2. To solve; to clear.
 Examine, sift, and resolve their alleged proofs, till you come to the very root whence they spring, and it shall clearly appear, that the most which can be inferred upon such plenty of divine testimonies, is only this, that some things, which they maintain, do seem to have been out of scripture not absurdly gathered. Hooker, b. ii. f. 7.
 I resolve the riddle of their loyalty, and give them opportunity to let the world see, they mean not what they do, but what they say. King Charles.
 He always bent himself rather judiciously to resolve, than by doubts to perplex a business. Hayward.
 The graves, when they have attained to the knowledge of these resolves, will easily resolve those difficulties which perplex them. Dryden's Duffresnoy.
 The man, who would resolve the work of fate,
 May limit number. Prior.
 Happines, was presently resolved by all, must be some one uniform end, proportioned to the capacities of human nature, attainable by every man, independent on fortune. Rogers's Sermons.
 3. To settle in an opinion.
 Long since we were resolved of your truth,
 Your faithful service, and your toil in war. Shakespeare.
 4. To fix in a determination.
 Good proof
 This day affords, declaring these resolv'd
 To undergo with me one guilt. Milton.
 I run to meet th' alarms,
Resolv'd on death, resolv'd to die in arms. Dryden.
Resolv'd for sea, the slaves thy baggage pack;
 Nothing retards thy voyage, unless Thy other lord forbids voluptuousness. Dryden's Persius.
 5. To fix in constancy; to confirm.
 Quit presently the chapel, or resolve you
 For more amazement:
 I'll make the statue move. Shakespeare.
 6. To melt; to dissolve.
Resolving is bringing a fluid, which is new concreted, into the state of fluidity again. Arbutnot on Aliments.
 Vegetable salts resolve the coagulated humours of a human body, and attenuate, by stimulating the solids, and dissolving the fluids. Arbutnot on Aliments.
 7. To analyse.
 Into what can we resolve this strong inclination of mankind to this error? it is altogether unimaginable, but that the reason of so universal a consent should be constant. Tillotson.
 Ye immortal souls, who once were men,
 And now resolv'd to elements again. Dryden.
 The decretals turn upon this point, and resolve all into a monarchical power at Rome. Baker's Reflections on Learning.
 To RESOLVE, v. n.
 1. To determine; to decree within one's self.
 Confirm'd, then I resolve
 Adam shall share with me. Milton.
 Covetousness is like the sea, that receives the tribute of all rivers, though far unlike it in lending any back; therefore those, who have resolved upon the thriving sort of piety, have seldom embarked all their hopes in one bottom. D. of Pi.
 2. To melt; to be dissolved.
 Have I not hideous death within my view?
 Retaining but a quantity of life,
 Which bleeds away, ev'n as a form of wax Resolveth from its figure 'gainst the fire. Shakespeare.

RES

No man condemn me, who has never felt
 A woman's power, or try'd the force of love;
 All tempers yield and soften in those fires,
 Our honours, interests, resolving down,
 Run in the gentle current of our joys. Southern's Oroonoko.
 When the blood stagnates in any part, it first coagulates, then resolves and turns alkaline. Arbutnot on Aliments.
 3. To be settled in opinion.
 Let men resolve of that as they please; this every intelligent being must grant, that there is something that is himself, that he would have happy. Locke.
 RESOLVE, n. f. [from the verb.] Resolution; fixed determination.
 I'm glad, you thus continue your resolve,
 To suck the sweets of sweet philosophy. Shakespeare.
 When he sees
 Himself by dogs, and dogs by men pursu'd,
 He straight revokes his bold resolve, and more Repents his courage, than his fear before. Denham.
 Caesar's approach has summon'd us together,
 And Rome attends her fate from our resolves. Addison, Cato.
 RESOLVEDLY, adv. [from resolved.] With firmness and constancy.
 A man may be resolvedly patient unto death; so that it is not the mediocrity of resolution, which makes the virtue;
 nor the extremity, which makes the vice. Grew's Cofinal.
 RESOLVEDNESS, n. f. [from resolved.] Resolution; constancy; firmness.
 This resolvedness, this high fortitude in sin, can with no reason be imagined a preparative to its remission. D. of Piety.
 RESOLVENT, n. f. [resolvens, Latin.] That which has the power of causing solution.
 In the beginning of inflammation, they require repellents; and in the increase, somewhat of resolvents ought to be mixed. Wigman's Surgery.
 Lactescent plants, as lettuce and endive, contain a most wholesome juice, resolvent of the bile, anodyne and cooling.
Arbutnot on Aliments.
 RESOLVER, n. f. [from resolvere.]
 1. One that forms a firm resolution.
 Thy resolutions were not before sincere; consequently God that saw that, cannot be thought to have justified that un-sincere resolver, that dead faith. Hammond's Pract. Catech.
 2. One that dissolves; one that separates parts.
 It may be doubted, whether or no the fire be the genuine and universal resolver of mixed bodies. Boyle.
 RESOLUTE, adj. [resolutus, Fr.] Determined; fixed; constant; steady; firm.
 Be bloody, bold, and resolute; laugh to scorn
 The pow'r of man; for none of woman born Shall harm Macbeth. Shakespeare, Macbeth.
 Edward is at hand
 Ready to fight; therefore be resolute. Shakespeare, Hen. VI.
 RESOLUTELY, adv. [from resolute.] Determinately; firmly;
 constantly; steadily.
 We resolutely must,
 To the few virtues that we have, be just. Roscommon.
 A man, who lives a virtuous life, despises the pleasures of sin, and notwithstanding all the allurements of sense persists resolutely in his course. Tillotson's Sermons.
 Some of those facts he examines, some he resolutely denies;
 others he endeavours to extenuate, and the rest he distorts with unnatural turns. Swift's Miscellanies.
 RESOLUTENESS, n. f. [from resolute.] Determinateness; state of being fixed in resolution.
 All that my resoluteness to make use of my ears, not tongue, could do, was to make them acquiesce. Boyle.
 RESOLUTION, n. f. [resolutio, Lat. resolution, Fr.]
 1. Act of clearing difficulties.
 In matters of antiquity, if their originals escape due relation, they fall into great obscurities, and such as future ages seldom reduce into a resolution. Brown's Vulgar Errors.
 The unravelling and resolution of the difficulties, that are met with in the execution of the design, are the end of an action. Dryden's Oedipus.
 2. Analysis; act of separating any thing into constituent parts.
 To the present impulses of sense, memory and instinct, all the sagacities of brutes may be reduced; though witty men, by analytical resolution, have chymically extracted an artificial logic out of all their actions. Hale's Orig. of Mankind.
 3. Dissolution.
 In the hot springs of extreme cold countries, the first heats are unsufferable, which proceed out of the resolution of humidity congealed. Digby on Bodies.
 4. [From resolute.] Fixed determination; settled thought.
 I th' progress of this business,
 Ere a determinate resolution,
 The bishop did require a respite. Shakespeare, Henry VIII.
 O Lord, resolutions of future reforming do not always satisfy thy justice, nor prevent thy vengeance for former miscarriages.
 We spend our days in deliberating, and we end them without coming to any resolution. L'Estrange.
 How

RES

How much this is in every man's power, by making resolutions to himself, is easy to try.

The mode of the will, which answers to dubitation, may be called suspension; that which answers to invention, resolution; and that which, in the phantastick will, is obstinacy, is constancy in the intellectual.

1. Constancy; firmness; steadiness in good or bad. The rest of the Helots, which were otherwise scattered, bent thitherward, with a new life of resolution; as if their captain had been a root, out of which their courage had sprung.

I would unstate myself to be in a due resolution. They, who governed the parliament, had the resolution to act those monstrous things.

What reinforcement we may gain from hope, If not what resolution from despair.

6. Determination of a cause in courts of justice. Nor have we all the acts of parliament or of judicial resolutions, which might occasion false alterations.

RESOLUTIVE. adj. [resolutus, Lat. resolutus, Fr.] Having the power to dissolve.

RESONANCE. n. f. [from resono, Lat.] Sound; resound.

An ancient musician informed me, that there were some famous lutes that attained not their full seasoning and best resonance, till they were about fourscore years old.

RESONANT. adj. [resonant, Fr. resonans, Lat.] Resounding, His volant touch

Fled and pursu'd transverse the resonant fugue. To RESORT. v. n. [resortir, Fr.]

1. To have recourse. The king thought it time to resort to other counsels, and to provide force to chastise them, who had so much despised all his gentler remedies.

2. To go publicly. Thither shall all the valiant youth resort, And from his memory inflame their breasts

To matchless valour. Hither the heroes and the nymphs resort.

3. To repair to. The fons of light Hafted, resorting to the fummons high.

To Argos' realms the victor god resorts, And enters cold Crotopus' humble courts.

4. To fall back. In law The inheritance of the son never resorted to the mother or to any of her ancestors, but both were totally excluded from the succession.

RESORT. n. f. [from the verb.] 1. Frequency; assembly; meeting.

Unknown, unquestion'd in that thick resort. 2. Concourse; confluence.

The like places of resort are frequented by men out of place.

3. Act of visiting. Join with me to forbid him her resort.

4. [Resort, Fr.] Movement; active power; spring. Some know the resorts and falls of business, that cannot sink into the main of it.

In fortune's empire blindly thus we go, We wander after pathless destiny, Whole dark resorts since prudence cannot know, In vain it would provide for what shall be.

To RESOUND. v. n. [resound, Lat. resonare, Fr.] 1. To echo; to sound back; to celebrate by sound.

The sweet finger of Israel with his plattery loudly resounded the innumerable benefits of the Almighty Creator.

The found of hymns, wherewith thy throne Incompass'd shall resound thee ever blest.

2. To sound; to tell so as to be heard far. The man, for wisdom's various arts renown'd, Long exercis'd in woes, oh muse! resound. 3. To return sounds; to sound with any noise.

With other echo late I taught your shades, To answer and resound far other song.

To RESOUND. v. n. To be echoed back. What resounds in fable or romance of Uther's sons.

What resounds back to them again, but generally a loud, rattling, impudent lye?

RESOURCE. n. f. [It is commonly written ressource, which see; ressources, Fr. skimmer derives it from ressoudre, Fr. to spring up.]

Some new or unexpected means that offer; resort; expedient. Pallas view'd

His foes pursuing, and his friends pursu'd; Us'd threatnings, mix'd with prayers, his last resource;

With these to move their minds, with those to fire their force.

To RESO'W. v. a. [re and saw.] To sow anew. Over wet at sowing time breedeth much dearth, infomuch as they are forced to resow summer corn.

To RESPARK. v. n. [re and speak.] To answer. The great cannon to the clouds shall tell,

And the king's rowle the heav'n shall bruit again, Respeaking earthly thunder.

RESPECT. v. a. [respectus, Lat.] 1. To regard; to have regard to. Claudio, I quake, Left thou should'st seven winters more respect Than a perpetual honour.

In orchards and gardens we do not so much respect beauty, as variety of ground for fruits, trees, and herbs.

2. [Respect, Fr.] To consider with a lower degree of reverence. There is nothing more terrible to a guilty heart, than the eye of a respected friend.

Whoever tastes, let him with grateful heart Respect that ancient loyal house.

3. To have relation to. I always loved and respected Sir William. 4. To look toward.

The needle doth vary, as it approacheth the pole; whereas, were there such direction from the rocks, upon a nearer approachment, it would more directly respect them.

Palladius adviseth, the front of his house should respect the South, that in the first angle it receive the rising rays of the winter sun, and decline a little from the winter setting thereof.

RESPECT. n. f. [respect, Fr. respectus, Lat.] 1. Regard; attention. You have too much respect upon the world;

They lose it, that do buy it with much care. My country's good with a respect more tender

Than mine own life. 2. Reverence; honour. You know me dutiful, therefore

Let me not shame respect; but give me leave To take that course by your content and voice.

Many of the best respects in Rome, Groaning under this age's yoke,

Have with'd, that noble Brutus had his eyes. 8. Consideration; motive.

Whatever secret respects were likely to move them, for contenting of their minds, Calvin returned.

The love of him, and this respect beside; For that my grandire was an Englishman, Awakes my conscience to confess all this. Since that respects of fortune are his love,

I shall not be his wife. 9. Relation; regard.

In respect of the suitors which attend you, do them what right in justice, and with as much speed as you may.

I have represented to you the excellency of the christian religion, in respect of its clear discoveries of the nature of God, and in respect of the perfection of its laws.

Every thing which is imperfect, as the world must be acknowledged in many respects, had some cause which produced it.

They believed but one supreme deity, which, with respect to the various benefits men received from him, had several titles.

RESPECTER. n. f. [from respect.] One that has partial regard. Neither is any condition more honourable in the sight of God than another; otherwise he would be a respecter of persons: for he hath proposed the same salvation to all.

RESPECTFUL. adj. [respect and full.] Ceremonious; full of outward civility.

Will you be only, and for ever mine? From this dear bosom shall I ne'er be torn?

Or you grow cold, respectful, or forsworn? With humble joy, and with respectful fear,

The list'ning people shall his story hear. 2. To answer. The great cannon to the clouds shall tell,

And the king's rowle the heav'n shall bruit again, Respeaking earthly thunder.

RESPECTFULLY. adv. [from respectful.] With some degree of reverence. To your glad genius sacrifice this day, Let common meats respectfully give way. RESPECTIVE.

RES

RESPECTIVE. adj. [from respect.]

1. Particular; relating to particular persons or things. 2. Particular; relating to particular persons or things.

Moses mentions the immediate causes, and St. Peter the more remote and fundamental causes, that constitution of the heavens, and that constitution of the earth, in reference to their respective waters, which made that world obnoxious to a deluge.

When so many present themselves before their respective magistrates to take the oaths, it may not be improper to awaken a due sense of their engagements.

3. [Respectful, Fr.] Relative; not absolute. The medium intended is not an absolute, but a respective medium: the proportion recommended to all is the same; but the things to be desired in this proportion will vary.

4. Accurate; nice; careful; cautious. Obsolete. Respective and wary men had rather seek quietly their own, and with that the world may go well, so it be not long of them, than with pain and hazard make themselves advisers for the common good.

He was exceeding respective and precise. 5. [Respectful, Fr.] Relative; not absolute.

What should it be, that he respects in her, But I can make respective in myself.

What should it be, that he respects in her, But I can make respective in myself.

RES

Widom and eloquence in vain would plead

One moment's respite for the learned head; Judges of writings and of men have dy'd.

2. Pause; interval. The fox then counsel'd th' ape, for to require

Respite till morrow e' aniver his desire. This customary war, which troubleth all the world, giveth little respite or breathing time of peace, doth usually borrow pretence from the necessary, to make itself appear more honest.

Some pause and respite only I require, Till with my tears I shall have quench'd my fire.

To RESPITE. v. a. [from the noun.] 1. To relieve by a pause.

In what bow'r or shade Thou find'st him, from the heat of noon retir'd,

To respite his day-labour with repast, Or with repose.

2. [Respite, old Fr.] To suspend; to delay. An act passed for the satisfaction of the officers of the king's army, by which they were promised payment, upon the publick faith, in November following; till which time they were to respite it, and be contented that the common soldiers and inferior officers should be satisfied upon their disbanning.

RESPLENDENCE. n. f. [from resplendens, Lat.] Lustre; brightness; splendour.

Son! thou in whom my glory I behold In full resplendence, heir of all my might.

To neglect that supreme resplendency, that shines in God, for those dim representations of it in the creature, is as absurd as it were for a Persian to offer his sacrifice to a parhelion instead of adoring the sun.

RESPLENDENT. adj. [resplendens, Lat.] Bright; shining; having a beautiful lustre.

Rich in commodities, beautiful in situation, resplendent in all glory.

There all within full rich array'd he found, With royal arras and resplendent gold.

The ancient electrum had in it a fifth of silver to the gold, and made a compound metal, as fit for most uses as gold, and more resplendent.

Empires of this fair world, resplendent Eve! Every body looks most splendid and luminous in the light of its own colour: cinnabar in the homogeneous light is most resplendent, in the green light it is manifestly less resplendent, in the blue light still less.

Resplendent brass, and more resplendent dainties. 2. To RESPOND. v. n. [respondere, Lat. respondere, Fr.]

1. To answer. Little used. 2. To correspond; to suit.

To every theme responds thy various lay; Here rows a torrent, there meanders play.

RESPONDENT. n. f. [respondens, Lat.] 1. An answerer in a suit.

In giving an answer, the respondent should be in court, and personally admonished by the judge to answer the judge's interrogation.

2. One whose province, in a set disputation, is to refute objections. How becomingly does Philopoli exercise his office, and seasonably commit the opponent with the respondent, like a long practised moderator?

The respondent may easily shew, that though wine may do all this, yet it may be finally hurtful to the soul and body of him.

RESPONSE. n. f. [responsus, Lat.] 1. An answer.

Mere natural piety has taught men to receive the responses of the gods with all possible veneration.

The oracles, which had before flourished, began to droop, and from giving responses in verse, descended to prose, and within a while were utterly silenced.

2. [Respons, Fr.] Answer made by the congregation, speaking alternately with the priest in publick worship.

To make his parishioners kneel and join in the responses, he gave every one of them a haddock and common prayer book.

3. Reply to an objection in a formal disputation. Let the respondent not turn opponent; except in retorting the argument upon his adversary after a direct response; and even this is allowed only as a confirmation of his own response.

RESPONIBLE. adj. [from responsus, Lat.] 1. Answerable; accountable.

He as much satisfies the itch of telling news; he as much persuades his hearers; and all this while he has his retreat secure, and stands not responsible for the truth of his relations.

2. Capable.

RES

2. Capable of discharging an obligation.
The necessity of a proportion of money to trade depends on money as a pledge, which writing cannot supply the place of; since the bill, I receive from one man, will not be accepted as security by another, he not knowing that the bill is legal, or that the man bound is honest or responsible. Locke.
- RESPONSIBLENESS. n. f. [from responsibile.] State of being obliged or qualified to answer.
- RESPONSION. n. f. [responsio, Lat.] The act of answering.
- RESPONSIVE. adj. [responsivus, Fr. from respondere, Lat.]
1. Answering; making answer.
A certificate is a responsive letter, or letter by way of answer. Ayliffe's Parergon.
2. Correspondent; suited to something else.
Sing of love and gay desire,
Responsive to the warbling lyre. Pentem.
Be there Demodocus the bard of fame,
Taught by the gods to please, when high he sings
The vocal lay responsive to the strings. Pope's Odyssey.
- RESPONSORY. adj. [responsorius, Lat.] Containing answer.
- REST. n. f. [Hebr. rest; Sax. ruste, Dutch.]
1. Sleep; repose.
All things retir'd to rest, mind us of like repose. Milton.
My soft limbs are wearied into rest. Pope.
2. The final sleep; the quietness of death.
Oft with holy hymns he charm'd their ears;
For David left him, when he went to rest,
His lyre. Dryden's Parson.
3. Stillness; cessation of motion.
Putrefaction asketh rest; for the subtle motion, which putrefaction requireth, is disturbed by any agitation. Bacon.
What cause mov'd the Creator, in his holy rest,
So late to build.
All things past are equally and perfectly at rest; and to this way of consideration of them are all one, whether they were before the world, or but yesterday. Locke.
4. Quiet; peace; cessation from disturbance.
Learn of me, for I am meek and lowly in heart; and ye shall find rest unto your souls. Mat. xi. 29.
He giveth you rest from all your enemies. Deut. xii. 10.
Though the righteous be prevented with death; yet shall he be in rest. Wisd. iv. 7.
Scap'd from such storms of pow'r, holding it best
To be below herself to be at rest. Daniel's Civil War.
The root cut off, from whence these tumults rose,
He should have rest, the commonwealth repose. Daniel.
Thus fenc'd, but not at rest or ease of mind. Milton.
With what a load of vengeance am I prest,
Yet never, never, can I hope for rest; James vi.
For when my heavy burden I remove,
The weight falls down, and crushes her I love. Dryden.
Like the sun, it had light and agility; it knew no rest but in motion, no quiet but in activity. South's Sermons.
Where can a frail man hide him? in what arms Shall a short life enjoy a little rest. Fanshawe.
Thither, where sinners may have rest, I go. Pope.
The grave, where ev'n the great find rest. Pope.
The midnight murderer
Invades the sacred hour of silent rest. Anonym.
5. Cessation from bodily labour.
There the weary be at rest. Job iii. 17.
6. Support; that on which anything leans or rests.
Forth prick'd Clorinda from the throng,
And gainst Tancredie set her spear in rest. Fairfax.
A man may think, that a musket may be shot off as well upon the arm, as upon a rest; but when all is done, good counsel setteth business straight. Bacon.
Their vizors clos'd, their lances in the rest,
Or at the helmet pointed, or the crest;
They sped the race. Dryden's Knight's Tale.
Take the handle in your right hand, and clasping the blade of it in your left, lean it steady upon the rest, holding the edge a little afloat over the work, so as a corner of the thin side of the chisel may bear upon the rest, and the flat side of the chisel may make a small angle with the rest. Moxon.
7. Place of repose.
Sustain'd by him with comforts, till we end
In dust, our final rest and native home. Milton.
8. Final hope.
He sets up his rest, to do more exploits with his mace, than a maurice pike. Shakep. Com. of Err.
Sea fights have been final to the war, but this is, when princes set up their rest upon the battle. Bacon.
This answer would render their counsels of less reverence to the people, if, upon those reasons, they should recede from what they had, with that confidence and disdain of the house of peers, demanded of the king; they therefore resolv'd to set up their rest upon that flake; and to go through with it, or perish in the attempt. Clarendon.

2. Consequence; effect produced by the concurrence of co-operating causes.
Did my judgment tell me, that the propositions sent to me were the results of the major part of their votes, I should then not suspect my own judgement for not speedily concurring with them. King Charles.
As in perfumes, compos'd with art and cost,
'Tis hard to say what scent is uppermost,
Nor this part musk or civet can we call,
Or amber, but a rich result of all:
So she was all a sweet, whole ev'ry part,
In due proportion mix'd, proclaim'd the maker's art. Dry.
Buying of land is the result of a full and fatiated gain: men in trade seldom lay out money upon land, till their profit has brought in more than trade can employ. Locke.
3. Inference from premises.
These things are a result or judgment upon fact. South.
4. Resolve; decision. Improper.
Rude, passionate, and mistaken results have, at certain times, fallen from great assemblies. Swift.

The sage dame,
By names of toasts, retails each batter'd jade. Pope.
4. To sell in broken parts.
He is furnish'd with no certainties,
More than he haply may retail from me. Shakespeare.
- RETAIL. n. f. [from the verb.] Sale by small quantities.
The author, to prevent such a monopoly of sense, is resolved to deal in it himself by retail. Addison.
We force a wretched trade by beating down the sale,
And selling basely by retail. Swift's Miscellanies.
- RETAILER. n. f. [from retail.] One who sells by small quantities.
From these particulars we may guess at the rest, as retailers do of the whole piece, by taking a view of its ends. Hakew.
- TO RETAIN. v. a. [retinere, Lat. retinere, Fr.]
1. To keep; not to lose.
Where is the patience now,
That you so oft have boasted to retain. Shakespeare. King Lear.
Though th' offending part felt mortal pain,
Th' immortal part its knowledge did retain. Denham.
The vigor of this arm was never vain;
And that my wonted prowess I retain,
Witness these heaps of slaughter. Dryden.
A tomb and fun'ral honours I decreed;
The place your armour and your name retains. Dryden.
Whatever ideas the mind can receive and contemplate without the help of the body, it is reasonable to conclude, it can retain without the help of the body too. Locke.
2. To keep; not to lay aside.
Let me retain
The name and all the addition to a king;
The sway, beloved sons, be yours. Shakespeare. King Lear.
As they did not like to retain God in their knowledge,
God gave them over to a reprobate mind. Rom. i. 22.

Can I retrench? yes mighty well
Shrink back to my paternal cell,
A little house, with trees a-row,
And like its master, very low.

Pope's Epist. of Horace.
RETRENCHMENT. n. f. [retranchement, Fr. from retranch.] The act of lopping away.

I had studied Virgil's design, his judicious management of the figures, the fober retranchments of his sense, which always leaves somewhat to gratify our imagination, on which it may enlarge at pleasure.

Dryden's Dedication to Virgil.
The want of vowels in our language has been the general complaint of our politest authors, who nevertheless have made these retranchments, and consequently encreased our former scarcity.

Addison.
I would rather be an advocate for the retranchment, than the encrease of this charity.

RET

TO RETRIBUTE. v. a. [retribuo, Lat. retribuere, Fr.] To pay back; to make repayment of.

Both the will and power to serve him are his upon so many scores, that we are unable to retribute, unless we do restore; and all the duties we can pay our maker are less properly requitals than restitutions. Boyle.

In the state of nature, a man comes by no arbitrary power to use a criminal, but only to retribute to him, so far as calm reason and conscience dictate, what is proportionate to his transgression. Locke.

RETRIBUTION. n. f. [retribution, Fr. from retribuo.] Repayment; return accommodated to the action.

The king thought he had not remunerated his people sufficiently with good laws, which evermore was his retribution for treasure. Bacon's Henry VII.

All who have their reward on earth, the fruits Of painful superstition, and blind zeal, Nought seeking but the praise of men, here find Fit retribution, empty as their deeds. Milton's Par. Lost.

In good offices and due retributions, we may not be pinching and niggardly: it argues an ignoble mind, where we have wronged to higgles and dodge in the amends. Hall.

There is no nation, though plunged into never such gross idolatry, but has some awful sense of a deity, and a persuasion of a state of retribution to men after this life. South.

It is a strong argument for a state of retribution hereafter, that in this world virtuous persons are very often unfortunate, and vicious persons prosperous. Addison's Spectator.

At the return of the year, the king of Syria will come up. 1 Kings xx. 22.

4. Revolution; vicissitude.

Weapons hardly fall under rule; yet even they have returns and vicissitudes; for ordnance was known in the city of the Oxidracas in India, and is what the Macedonians called Bacon's Essays.

5. Repayment of money laid out in commodities for sale.

As for any merchandize you have bought, ye shall have your return in merchandize or gold. Bacon.

As to roots accelerated in their ripening, there is the high price that those things bear, and the swiftness of their returns; for, in some grounds, a radish comes in a month, that in others will not come in two, and so make double returns. Bacon.

6. Profit; advantage.

The fruit, from many days of recreation, is very little; but from these few hours we spend in prayer, the return is great. Taylor's Rule of Living Holy.

7. Remittance; payment from a distant place.

Within these two months, I do expect return Of thrice three times the value of this bond. Shakespeare.

Brokers cannot have less money by them, than one twentieth part of their yearly returns. Locke.

8. Repayment; retribution; requital.

You made my liberty your late request, Is no return due from a grateful breast? I grow impatient, 'till I find some way, Great offices, with greater to repay. Dryden.

Since these are some of the returns which we made to God after obtaining our successes, can we reasonably presume, that we are in the favour of God?

Nothing better becomes a person in a publick character, than such a publick spirit; nor is there any thing likely to procure him larger returns of esteem. Atterbury.

Returns, like these, our mistress bids us make, When from a foreign prince a gift her Britons take. Prior.

Ungrateful lord! Would'st thou invade my life, as a return For proffer'd love? Rowe.

9. Act of restoring or giving back; restitution.

The other ground of God's sole property in any thing, is the gift, or rather the return of it made by man to God. South.

10. Relapse.

This is breaking into a constitution to serve a present expedient; the remedy of an empirick, to stifle the present pain, but with certain prospect of sudden returns. Swift.

11. [Retour, Fr.]

Either of the adjoining sides of the front of an house, or ground-plot, is called a return side. Moxon's Mech. Exerc.

Both these sides are not only returns, but parts of the front, and a stately tower in the midst of the front. Bacon.

RETU'RNABLE. adj. Allowed to be reported back. A law term.

It may be decided in that court, where the verdict is returnable. Hale.

He shall have an attachment against the sheriff, directed to the coroner, and returnable unto the king's bench. Ayliffe.

RETU'RNER. n. f. [from return.] One who pays or remits money.

The chapmen, that give highest for this, can make most profit by it, and those are the returners of our money. Locke.

REVE. n. f. The baillif of a franchise or manour.

The reves, the miller, and the mincing lady prioress speak in character. Dryden.

TO REVEAL. v. a. [revelo, Lat. revelare, Fr.]

1. To show; to discover; to lay open; to disclose a secret.

Be affam'd: speaking again that which thou hast heard, and revealing of secrets. Ecclesi. xli. 23.

I will cure them, and reveal unto them the abundance of peace. Jer. xxxiii. 6.

Light was the wound, the prince's care unknown, She might not, would not yet reveal her own. Waller.

The answer to one who asked what time was, si non regas intellige; that is, the more I think of time, the less I understand it; might persuade one, that time, which reveals all other things, is itself not to be discovered. Locke.

2. To impart from heaven.

The sufferings of this life are not to be compared with the glory which shall be revealed in us. Romans viii. 18.

REVEALER. n. f. [from reveal.]

1. Discoverer; one that shows or makes known.

The habit of faith in divinity is an argument of things unseen, as a stable assent unto things invident, upon authority of the divine revealer. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

The lives of the revealers may be justly set over against the revelation, to find whether they agree. Atterbury.

2. One that discovers to view.

He brought a taper; and the revealer light Expos'd both crime and criminal to sight. Dryden.

TO REVEL. v. n. [Skimmer derives it from reveiller, Fr. to awake; Mr. Lye from revelen, Dutch, to rove loosely about, which is much countenanced by the old phrase, revel-rout.]

1. To feast with loose and clamorous merriment.

My honey love, Will we return unto thy father's house, And revel it as bravely as the best. Shakespeare.

We'll keep no great ado—a friend or two. Tybalt being slain to late, It may be thought we held him carelessly, Being our kinsman, if we revel much. Shakespeare.

Antony, that revels long o' nights, Is up. Shakespeare's Julius Caesar.

We shall have revelling to-night; I will assume thy part in some disguise. Shakespeare.

He can report you more odd tales Of our outlaw Robin Hood, That revell'd here in Sherwood, Though he ne'er shot in his bow. Benj. Johnson.

Were the doctrine new, That the earth mov'd, this day would make it true; For every part to dance and revel goes, They tread the air, and fall not where they rose. Danney.

Where'er I revel'd in the women's bow'rs; For first I sought her but at looser hours The apples she had gather'd smelt most sweet. Prior.

REVEL. n. f. [from the verb.] A feast with loose and noisy jollity.

Let them pinch th' unclean knight, And ask him, why, that hour of fairy revel, In their so sacred paths he dares to tread? Shakespeare.

They could do no less but, under your fair conduct, Crave leave to view these ladies, and intreat An hour of revells with them. Shakespeare.

TO REVEL. v. a. [revello, Lat.] To retract; to draw back.

Those, who miserray, escape by their flood, revelling the humours from their lungs. Harvey.

REVEL-ROUT. n. f. A mob; an unlawful assembly of a rabble. Ainsworth.

For this his minion, the revel rout is done. —I have been told, that you Are frequent in your visitation to her. Rowe's Jane Shore.

REVELATION. n. f. [from revelatio, Fr.] Discovery; communication; communication of sacred and mysterious truths by a teacher from heaven.

When the divine revelations were committed to writing, the Jews were such scrupulous reverers of them, that they numbered even the letters of the Old Testament. D. of Pis.

As the gospel appears in respect of the law to be a clearer revelation of the mystical part, so it is a far more benign dispensation of the practical part. Sprat.

REVELLER. n. f. [from revel.] One who feasts with noisy jollity.

Fairies black, grey, green and white, You moonshine revellers attend your office. Shakespeare.

Unwelcome revellers, whose lawless joy Pains the sage ear, and hurts the sober eye. Pope.

REVELRY. n. f. [from revel.] Loose jollity; festive mirth.

Forget this new-fall'n dignity, And fall into our rustic revelry. Shakespeare.

There let Hymen oft appear In saffron robe with taper clear, And pomp, and feast, and revelry, With mask and antick pageantry. Milton.

TO REVENGE. v. a. [revenger, revancher, Fr.]

1. To return an injury.

If our hard fortune no compassion draws, The gods are just, and will revenge our cause. Dryden.

3. To wreak one's wrongs on him that inflicted them. With the reciprocal pronoun.

Come, Antony and young Octavius, Revenge yourselves alone on Cassius. Shakespeare's Jul. Caesar.

It is a quarrel most unnatural, To be reveng'd on him that loveth thee. Shakespeare's Rich. III.

Northumberland slew thy father; And thine, lord Clifford; and you vow'd revenge: If I be not, heav'n's be reveng'd on me! Shakespeare.

Edom hath revenged himself upon Judah. Ezek. xxv. 12.

O Lord, visit me, and revenge me of my persecutors. Jer.

Who shall come to stand against thee, to be revenged for the unrighteous men? Wisdom xii. 12.

Your fury of a wife, Not yet content to be reveng'd on you, Th' agents of your passion will pursue. Dryden.

REVENGE. n. f. [revanche, revanche, Fr.] Return of an injury.

REV

What will not ambition and revenge descend to. Milton.
 The satyr in a rage
 Forgets his business is to laugh and bite,
 And will of death and dire revenges write. Dryden.
 Draco, the Athenian lawgiver, granted an impunity to any person that took revenge upon an adulterer. Brome.
REVENGEFUL. adj. [from revenge.] Vindictive; full of revenge; full of vengeance.
 May my hands
 Never brandish more revengeful steel
 Over the glittering helmet of my foe. Shaksp. Rich. II.
 If thy revengeful heart cannot forgive,
 Lo! here I lend thee this sharp-pointed sword,
 Which hide in this true breast. Shaksp. Richard III.
 Into my borders now Jarbas falls,
 And my revengeful brother scales the walls. Denham.
 Repenting England, this revengeful day,
 To Philip's manes did an off'ring bring. Dryden.
REVENGEFULLY. adv. [from revengeful.] Vindictively.
 He smil'd revengefully, and leap'd
 Upon the floor; thence gazing at the skies,
 His eye-balls fiery red, and glowing vengeance;
 Gods I accuse you not. Dryden and Lee's Oedipus.
REVENGER. n. f. [from revenge.]
 1. One who revenges; one who wreaks his own or another's injuries.
 May be, that better reason will assuage
 The rash revenger's heat; words, well dispos'd,
 Have secret pow'r to appease enflamed rage. Fairy Queen.
 I do not know,
 Wherefore my father should revengers want,
 Having a son and friends. Shaksp. Ant. and Cleop.
 So shall the great revenger ruin
 Him and his issue, by a dreadful fate. Sandys's Paraphrase.
 Morocco's monarch
 Had come in person, to have seen and known
 The injur'd world's revenger and his own. Waller.
 2. One who punishes crimes.
 What government can be imagined, without judicial proceedings? and what methods of judicature, without a religious oath, which supposes an omniscient being, as conscious to its falsehood or truth, and a revenger of perjury. Bentley.
REVENGEMENT. n. f. [from revenge.] Vengeance; return of an injury.
 It may dwell
 In her son's flesh to mind revengement,
 And be for all chaste dames an endless monument. F. & Q.
 By the periculis of the same verse, vagabond is understood for such a one as travelleth in fear of revengement. Raleigh.
REVENGINGLY. adv. [from revenging.] With vengeance;
 vindictively.
 I've belov'd a lady,
 The princeess of this country; and the air on't Revengingly enfeebles me. Shaksp. Cymbeline.
REVENUE. n. f. [from revenue, Fr. Its accent is uncertain.] Income; annual profits received from lands or other funds.
 They privily send over unto them the revenues, wherewith they are there maintained. Spenser's State of Ireland.
 She bears a duke's revenues on her back,
 And in her heart scorns our poverty. Shaksp. Hen. VI.
 Only I retain
 The name and all the addition to a king;
 The sway, revenue, beloved sons, be yours. Shaksp.
 Many offices are of so small revenue, as not to furnish a man with what is sufficient for the support of his life. Temple.
 If the woman could have been contented with golden eggs,
 she might have kept that revenue on still. L'Estrange.
 His vassals easy, and the owner blest,
 They pay a trifle, and enjoy the rest;
 Not to a nation's revenues are paid;
 The servant's faults are on the master laid. Swift.
 To REVEBERATE. v. a. [from reverte, Lat.] To strike against; to reverberate. Not in use.
 Referee thy state, with better judgment check
 This hideous rashness:
 The youngest daughter does not love thee least;
 Nor are those empty hearted, whose loud sound Reverbs no hollowness. Shaksp. King Lear.
REVEBERANT. adj. [from revertens, Lat.] Refounding; beating back. The reading in the following passage should be, I think, reverberant.
 Hollow your name to the reverberate hills,
 And make the babbling gossip of the air
 Cry out, Olivia! Shaksp. Twelfth Night.
 To REVEBERATE. v. a. [from reverte, Lat. reverberat, Fr.]
 1. To beat back.
 Start
 An echo with the clamour of thy drum,
 And ev'n at hand a drum is ready brad,
 That shall reverberate all as well as thine. Shaksp. K. John.
 Nor doth he know them for aught,
 Till he behold them formed in th' applause
 Where they're extended; which, like an arch, reverberates
 The sound again. Shaksp.

REV

As the sight of the eye is like a glass, so is the ear a sinuous cave, with a hard bone, to stop and reverberate the sound. Bacon.
 As we, to improve the nobler kinds of fruits, are at the expence of walls to receive and reverberate the faint rays of the sun, so we, by the help of a good soil, equal the production of warmer countries. Swift.
 2. To heat in an intense furnace, where the flame is reverberated upon the matter to be melted or cleaned.
 Crocus martis, that is steel corroded with vinegar or sulphur, and after reverberated with fire, the loadstone will not attract. Brown's Vulgar Errors.
 To REVEBERATE. v. n.
 1. To be driven back; to bound back.
 The rays of royal majesty reverberated so strongly upon Villerio, that they dispelled all clouds. Howells.
 2. To rebound.
REVEBERATION. n. f. [from revertens, Fr. from revertens.]
 The act of beating or driving back.
 To the reflection of visible, small glasses suffice; but to the reverberation of audibles, are required greater spaces. Bac.
 The first repetitions follow very thick; for two parallel walls beat the sound back on each other, like the several re-verberations of the same image from two opposite looking-glasses. Addison.
REVEBERATORY. adj. [from revertens, Fr.] Returning;
 beating back.
 Good lime may be made of all kinds of flints, but they are hard to burn, except in a reverberatory kiln. Mason.
 To REVERBERATE. v. a. [from revertens, Fr. reverberat, Lat.] To revenge; to honour; to venerate; to regard with awe.
 An emperor often stamp'd on his coins the face or ornaments of his colleagues, and we may suppose Lucius Verus would omit no opportunity of doing honour to Marcus Aurelius, whom he rather reverberated as his father, than treated as his partner in the empire. Addison's Remarks on Italy.
 Jove shall again revenge your pow'r,
 And rise a swan, or fall a show'r. Prior.
 Taught 'em how clemency made pow'r rever'd,
 And that the prince below'd was truly fear'd. Prior.
 In my conquest be thy might declar'd,
 And for thy justice be thy name rever'd. Prior.
REVERENCE. n. f. [from reverens, Fr. reverentia, Lat.]
 1. Veneration; respect; awful regard.
 God is greatly to be feared in the assembly of the saints;
 and to be had in reverence of all about him. Pf. lxxxix. 7.
 When quarrels and factions are carried openly, it is a sign the reverence of government is lost. Bacon's Essays.
 Higher of the genial bed,
 And with mysterious reverence I deem. Milton.
 In your prayers, use reverent postures and the lowly gestures of humility, remembering that we speak to God, in our reverence to whom we cannot exceed. Taylor.
 A poet cannot have too great a reverence for readers. Dryd.
 The fear, acceptable to God, is a filial fear; an awful reverence of the divine nature, proceeding from a just esteem of his perfections, which produces in us an inclination to his service, and an unwillingness to offend him. Rogers.
 2. Act of obedience; bow; courtesy.
 Now lies he there,
 And none so poor to do him reverence. Shaksp. Jul. Cæs.
 Mordecai bowed not, nor did him reverence. Esth. iii. 2.
 He led her easily forth.
 Where Godfrey sat among his lords and peers,
 She reverence did, then blush'd as one dismay'd. Fairfax.
 Had not men the hoary heads rever'd,
 Or boys paid reverence, when a man appear'd,
 Both must have dy'd. Dryden's Juvenal.
 Upstarts the bedlam,
 And reverence made, accosted thus the queen. Dryden.
 The monarch
 Commands into the court the beauteous Emily:
 So call'd, she came; the senate rose and paid Becoming reverence to the royal maid. Dryden.
 3. Title of the clergy.
 Many now in health
 Shall drop their blood, in approbation
 Of what your reverence shall incite us to. Shaksp. Hen. V.
 4. Poetical title of a father.
 O my dear father! let this kiss
 Repair those violent harms, that my two sisters Have in thy reverence made. Shaksp. King Lear.
 To REVERENCE. v. a. [from the noun.] To regard with reverence; to regard with awful respect.
 Those that I reverence, those I fear, the wife;
 At fools I laugh, not fear them. Shaksp. Cymbeline.
 While they pervert pure nature's healthful rules
 To loathsome sickness, worthily since they God's image did not reverence in themselves. Milton.
 He flew Action, but despoil'd him not;
 Nor in his hate the funeral rites forgot;
 Arm'd as he was, he sent him whole below,
 And reverenc'd thus the manes of his foe. Dryden.
 As

REV

As his goodness will forbid us to dread him as slaves, so his majesty will command us to reverence him as sons. Rogers.
REVERENCE. n. f. [from reverens.] One who regards with reverence.
 The Athenians quite sunk in their affairs, had little commerce with the rest of Greece, and were become great reverencers of crowned heads. Swift.
REVEREND. adj. [from reverens, Fr. reverendus, Lat.]
 1. Venerable; deserving reverence; expecting respect by his appearance.
 Let his lack of years be no impediment, to let him lack a reverend estimation. Shaksp. Merchant of Venice.
 Reverend and gracious senators. Shaksp.
 Onias, who had been high priest, reverend in conversation, and gentle in condition, played for the Jews. 2 Mac. xv. 12.
 Reverend old man! lo here confest he stands. Pope.
 2. The honorary epithet of the clergy. We stile a clergyman, reverend; a bishop, right reverend; an archbishop, most reverend.
 A reverend fire among them came,
 Who preach'd conversion and repentance. Milton.
REVERENT. adj. [from reverens, Lat.] Humble; expressing submission; testifying veneration.
 They forthwith to the place
 Repairing where he judg'd them, prostrate fell Before him reverent. Milton's Paradise Lost.
 Meet then the senior, far renown'd for senile,
 With reverent awe, but decent confidence. Pope.
REVERENTIAL. adj. [from reverentia, Fr. from reverens.] Expressing reverence; proceeding from awe and veneration.
 That oaths made in reverential fear
 Of love and his wrath may any forswear. Donne.
 The least degree of contempt weakens religion; it properly consisting in a reverential esteem of things sacred. South.
 The reason of the infirmity being forgot, the after-ages perverted it, supposing only a reverential gratitude paid to the earth as the common parent. Woodward's Nat. Hist.
 All look up, with reverential awe,
 At crimes that scape, or triumph o'er the law. Pope.
REVERENTIALLY. adv. [from reverentia.] With show of reverence.
 The Jews, reverentially declining the situation of their temple, place their beds from North to South. Brown.
REVERENTLY. adv. [from reverens.] Respectfully; with awe; with reverence.
 Chide him for faults, and do it reverently. Shaksp.
 To nearest ports their shatter'd ships repair,
 Where by our dreadful cannon they lay aw'd;
 So reverently men quit th' open air,
 When thunder speaks th' angry gods abroad. Dryden.
 Then down with all thy boasted volumes, down;
 Only relieve the sacred one:
 Low, reverently low,
 Make thy stubborn knowledge bow:
 To look to heav'n be blind to all below. Prior.
REVERER. n. f. [from revere.] One who venerates; one who reveres.
 When the divine revelations were committed to writing, the Jews were such scrupulous reverers of them, that it was the business of the Majorites, to number not only the sections and lines, but even the words and letters of the Old Testament. Government of the Tongue.
REVERSAL. n. f. [from reverse.] Change of sentence.
 The king, in the reversal of the attainders of his partakers, had his will. Bacon's Henry VII.
 To REVERSE. v. a. [from reversus, Lat.]
 1. To turn upside down.
 A pyramid reversed may stand upon his point, if balanced by admirable skill. Temple's Miscellanies.
 2. To overturn; to subvert.
 These now controul a wretched people's fate,
 These can divide, and these reverse the state. Pope.
 3. To turn back.
 Michael's sword stay'd not;
 But with swift wheel reverse, deep entering shar'd Satan's right side. Milton.
 4. To contradict; to repeal.
 Better it was in the eye of his understanding, that sometime an erroneous sentence definitive should prevail, till the same authority, perceiving such oversight, might afterwards correct or reverse it, than that trifles should have respite to grow, and not come speedily unto some end. Hooker's Pref.
 And albeit they made great moans, yet could they not procure this sentence to be reversed. Hayward.
 Death, his doom which I
 To mitigate thus plead, not to reverse,
 To better life shall yield him. Milton's Par. Lost.
 Though grace may have reversed the condemning sentence, and sealed the sinner's pardon before God, yet it may have left no transcript of that pardon in the sinner's breast. South.
 Those seem to do best, who, taking useful hints from facts, carry them in their minds to be judg'd of, by what they shall find in history to confirm or reverse these imperfect observations. Locke.

REV

 5. To turn to the contrary.
 These plain characters we rarely find,
 Though strong the bent, yet quick the turns of mind;
 Or puzzling contraries confound the whole,
 Or affections quite reverse the soul. Pope.
 6. To put each in the place of the other.
 With what tyranny custom governs men; it makes that reputable in one age, which was a vice in another, and reverses even the distinctions of good and evil. Rogers.
 7. To recall; to renew. Obsolete.
 Well knowing true all he did rehearse,
 And to his fresh remembrance did reverse
 The ugly view of his deformed crimes. Fairy Queen.
 To REVERSE. v. n. [from revertens, Fr. reversus, Lat.] To return. Spens.
REVERSE. n. f. [from the verb.]
 1. Change; vicissitude.
 The strange reverse of fate you see;
 I pity'd you, now you may pity me. Dryden's Aurengz.
 By a strange reverse of things, Justinian's law, which for many ages was neglected, does now obtain, and the Theo-dosian code is in a manner antiquated. Baker.
 2. A contrary; an opposite.
 Count Tariff appeared the reverse of Goodman fact. Add.
 The performances, to which God has annexed the promises of eternity, are just the reverse of all the pursuits of sense. Rog.
 3. [Reverse, Fr.] The side of the coin on which the head is not impressed.
 As the Romans set down the image and inscription of the consul, afterward of the emperor on the one side, so they changed the reverse always upon new events. Camden.
 Our guard upon the royal side;
 On the reverse our beauty's pride. Waller.
 Several reverses are owned to be the representations of antique figures. Addison on Ancient Medals.
REVERSIBLE. adj. [from reversibilis, Fr. from reverse.] Capable of being reversed.
REVERSION. n. f. [from reversion, Fr. from reverse.]
 1. The state of being to be possessed after the death of the present possessor.
 As were our England in reversion his,
 And he our subjects next degree in hope. Shaksp. Rich. II.
 A life in reversion is not half so valuable, as that which may at present be entered on. Hammond's Fundamentals.
 2. Succession; right of succession.
 He was very old, and had out-lived most of his friends;
 many persons of quality being dead, who had, for recompence of services, procured the reversion of his office. Clarend.
 Upon what ground can a man promise himself a future repentance, who cannot promise himself a futurity? whose life depends upon his breath, and is so restrained to the present, that it cannot secure to itself the reversion of the very next minute. South's Sermons.
 So many candidates there stand for wit,
 A place at court is scarce so hard to get;
 In vain they crowd each other at the door;
 For e'en reversion are all begg'd before. Dryden.
REVERSIONARY. adj. [from reversion.] To be enjoyed in succession.
 There are multitudes of reversionary patents and reversionary promises of preferments. Arbutnot.
 To REVERT. v. a. [from revertens, Lat.]
 1. To change; to turn to the contrary.
 Wretched her subjects, gloomy fits the queen,
 Till happy chance revert the cruel scene;
 And apish folly, with her wild resort
 Of wit and jest, disturbs the solemn court. Prior.
 2. To reverberate.
 The stream boils
 Around the stone, or from the hollow'd bank
 Reverted plays in undulating flow. Thomson.
 To REVERT. v. n. [from revertens, old Fr.] To return; to fall back.
 My arrows,
 Too slightly timbred for so loud a wind,
 Would have reverted to my bow again. Shaksp. Hamlet.
 If his tenant and patentee shall dispose of his gift without his kingly assent, the lands shall revert to the king. Bacon.
REVERT. n. f. [from the verb.] Return; recurrence. A musical term.
 Hath not musick her figures the same with rhetoric? what is a revert but her antitrophe? Peachment of Musick.
REVERTIBLE. adj. [from revert.] Returnable.
REVERTY. n. f. [from revertens, Fr.] Loose musing; irregular thought.
 Revery is when ideas float in our mind, without any reflection or regard of the understanding. Locke.
 If the minds of men were laid open, we should see but little difference between that of the wife man and that of the fool; there are infinite reveries and numberless extravagancies pass through both. Addison.
 I am really so far gone, as to take pleasure in reversion of this kind. Pope.

 To REVERSE.

REV

To REVIST. v. a. [revist, revist, Fr. revist, Lat.]

1. To clothe again.

Her, nathless,
Th' enchanter finding fit for his intents,
Did thus revist, and deckt with due habiliments. Spenser.
When thou of life renewest the seeds,
The withered fields revist their cheerful weeds. Watson.
2. To reinvest; to vest again in a possession or office.
REVISTARY. n. f. [revistaire, Fr. from revist, Lat.] Place where dresses are deposited.

The effectual power of words the Pythagoreans extolled;
the impious Jews ascribed all miracles to a name, which was engraved in the revistary of the temple. Camden's Remains.
REVISTION. n. f. [revistum, Lat.] Return to life.

If the Rabines prophecy succeed, we shall conclude the days of the phoenix, not in its own, but in the last and general flames, without all hope of revistion. Brown.

To REVISTUAL. v. a. [re and vidual.] To stock with viduals
again.

It hath been objected, that I put into Ireland, and spent much time there, taking care to revistual myself and none of the rest. Raleigh's Apology.

To REVISTW. v. a. [re and vidual.]

1. To look back.

So swift he flies, that his revistuing eye
Has lost the chafers, and his ear the cry. Denham.

2. To see again.

I shall revist Sicilia; for whose fight
I have a woman's longing. Shakep. Winter's Tale.

3. To consider over again; to retrace; to reexamine.

Segrais says, that the Aeneis is an imperfect work, and that death prevented the divine poet from revistuing it; and, for that reason, he had condemned it to the fire. Dryden.

Shall I the long laborious scene revist,
And open all the wounds of Greece anew. Pope.

4. To survey; to overlook; to examine.

REVISTW. n. f. [revist, Fr. from the verb.] Survey; re-examination.

We make a general revist of the whole work, and a general revist of nature; that, by comparing them, their full correspondency may appear. Burnet's Theory of the Earth.

The works of nature will bear a thousand views and revisions; the more narrowly we look into them, the more occasion we shall have to admire. Aitken's Sermons.

To REVISTE. v. a. [re and vile.] To reproach; to vilify;
to treat with contumely.

Asked for their pass by every quib,
That list at will them to reviste or snib. Spenser.

I read in's looks
Matter against me; and his eye revist'd Me as his abject object. Shakep. Henry VIII.

Fear not the reproach of men, neither be afraid of their revistings. Isaiah li. 7.

She still beareth him an invincible hatred, revisteth him to his face, and railleth at him in all companies. Swift.

REVISTE. n. f. [from the verb.] Reproach; contumely; exprobration. Not used, but elegant.

I heard thee in the garden, and of thy voice Afraid, being naked, hid myself,—to whom
The gracious judge, without reviste, reply'd. Milton.

REVISTE. n. f. [from reviste.] One who revistes; one who treats another with contumelious terms.

The bitterest revistes are often half-witted people. G. of T.

REVISTINGLY. adv. [from reviste.] In an opprobrious manner;
with contumely.

The love I bear to the civility of expression will not suffer me to be revistingly broad. Maine.

REVISTAL. n. f. [from reviste.] Review; reexamination.

The revistal of these letters has been a kind of examination of conscience to me; so fairly and faithfully have I set down in them the undisguised state of the mind. Pope.

To REVISTE. v. a. [revist, Lat.] To review; to overlook.

Lintot will think your price too much;
Not, Sir, if you reviste it, and retouch. Pope.

REVISTE. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. Review; reexamination.

The author is to be excused, who never, in regard to his eyes and other impediments, gives himself the trouble of corrections and revistes. Boyle.

2. Among printers, a second proof of a sheet corrected.

REVISTE. n. f. [revist, Fr. from reviste.] Examiner; superintendant.

REVISTION. n. f. [revistion, Fr. from reviste.] Review.

To REVISTIT. v. a. [revistit, Fr. revist, revistito, Lat.] To visit again.

Thou I revistit safe,
And feel thy foreign vital lamp; but thou Revistit'st not these eyes, that rowl in vain,
To find thy piercing ray, and find no dawn. Milton.

Let the pale fire revistit Thebes, and bear
These pleasing orders to the tyrant's ear. Pope's Statius.

REVISTAL. n. f. [from reviste.] Recall from a state of languour, oblivion, or obscurity.

REV

Howsoever you shew bitterness, do not act any thing that is not revocable. Bacon's Essays.

2. That may be repealed.

REVOCABLENESS. n. f. [from revocable.] The quality of being revocable.

To REVOCATE. v. a. [revoco, Lat.] To recall; to call back.

His successor, by order, nullifies
Many his patents, and did revoke
And re-assume his liberalities. Daniel's Civil War.

REVOCATION. n. f. [revocation, Fr. revocatio, Lat.]

1. Act of recalling.

One, that saw the people bent for the revocation of Calvin, gave him notice of their affection. Hooker.

2. State of being recalled.

Elaiana's king commanded Chenandra to tell him that he had received advice of his revocation. Hovel's Pocal Forst.

3. Repeal; reversal.

If a grievance be inflicted on a person, he may appeal, it is not necessary to pray a revocation of such a grievance. Ayliffe.

To REVOCUE. v. a. [revocuer, Fr. revoco, Lat.]

1. To repeal; to reverse.

That society hath before consented, without revoking the same after. Hooker, b. i. f. 10.

When we abrogate a law as being ill made, the whole cause for which it was made still remaining, do we not herein revoke our very own deed, and upbraid ourselves with folly, yea all that were makers of it with oversight and error. Hail.

What reason is there, but that those grants and privileges should be revoked, or reduced to the first intention. Spenser.

Without my Aurengzebe I cannot live;
Revoke his doom, or else my sentence give. Dryden.

2. To check; to repress.

She strove their sudden rages to revoke,
That at the last suppressing fury mad,
They 'gan abstain. Fairy Queen, b. ii.

And cannot soon revolt and change your mind. Shakep.

REVOLIT. n. f. [revolte, Fr. from the verb.]

1. Defection; change of sides.

He was greatly strengthened, and the enemy as much enfeebled by daily revolts. Raleigh's History of the World.

If all our levies are made in Scotland or Ireland, may not those two parts of the monarchy be too powerful for the rest, in case of a revolt. Addison's State of the War.

2. A revolter; one who changes sides. Not in use.

You ingrate revolt,
You bloody Nero's, ripping up the womb
Of your dear mother England. Shakep. King John.

3. Gross departure from duty.

Your daughter hath made a gross revolt;
Tying her duty, beauty, wit, and fortunes
To an extravagant and wheeling stranger. Shakep.

REVOLTED. part. adj. [from revolt.] Having swerved from duty.

Thou single hast maintain'd Against revolted multitudes the cause of truth. Milton.

REVOLTER. n. f. [from revolt.] One who changes sides; a defector; a renegade.

Fair honour that thou dost thy God, in trusting
He will accept thee to defend his cause,
A murderer, a revoler, and a robber. Milton's Agonistes.

He was not a revoler from the truth, which he had once embraced. Aitken's Sermons.

Those, who are negligent or revolvers, shall perish. Swift.

To REVOLVE. v. n. [revolve, Lat.]

1. To roll in a circle; to perform a revolution.

They do not revolve about any common center. Cheyne.

If the earth revolve thus, each house near the equator must move a thousand miles an hour. Watt's Impr. of the Mind.

Each revolving year,
The teeming ewes a triple offspring bear. Pope.

2. To fall in a regular course of changing possellers; to devolve.

On the defection of an appeal, the jurisdiction does ipso jure revolve to the judge a quo. Ayliffe's Parergon.

You may revolve what tales I told you
Of courts, of princes, of the tricks of war. Shakep.

REVOLUTION. n. f. [revolution, Fr. revolutio, Lat.]

1. Course of any thing which returns to the point at which it began to move.

On their orbs impose
Such restless revolution, day by day Repeated. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. viii.

They will be taught by the diurnal revolution of the heavens. Watt's Improvement of the Mind.

2. Space measured by some revolution.

At certain revolutions are they brought,
And feel by turns the bitter change. Milton.

Meteors have no more time allowed them for their mounting, than the short revolution of a day. Dryden.

The Persian wept over his army, that within the revolution of a single age, not a man would be left alive. Wake.

3. Change in the state of a government or country. It is used among us as if it signified, for the change produced by the admission of king William and queen Mary.

4. Rotation in general; returning motion.

Comes thund'ring back with dreadful revolution
On my defenceless head. Milton.

To REVOLUT. v. a. [revoluit, Fr. re and voluit.] To vomit;
to vomit again.

They might cast it up, and take more vomiting and revo-luting what they drink. Hakewill on Providence.

REVOLUSION. n. f. [revulsion, Fr. revulsio, Lat.] The act of revolving or drawing humours from a remote part of the body.

Derivation differs from revulsion only in the measure of the distance, and the force of the medicines used: if we draw it to some very remote or contrary part, we call it revulsion;

3. To

RHE

if only to some neighbouring place, and by gentle means,
we call it derivation.

There is a way of revulsion to let blood in an adverse part. Bacon's Natural History.

I had heard of some strange cures of frenzies, by casual applications of fire to the lower parts, which seems reasonable enough, by the violent revulsion it may make of humours from the head. Temple's Miscellanies.

To REWARD. v. a. [re and award, to give in return.
Stinner.]

1. To give in return.

Thou hast rewarded me good, whereas I have rewarded thee evil. 1 Sam. xxiv. 17.

They rewarded me evil for good. Palm xxxv. 12.

2. To repay; to recompense for something good.

To judge th' unfaithful dead, but to reward
His faithful, and receive them into bliss. Milton.

The supreme being rewards the just, and punishes the unjust. Broom's Notes on the Odyssey.

REWARD. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. Recompense given for good.

Rewards and punishments do always presuppose something willingly done well or ill; without which respect, though we may sometimes receive good, yet then it is only a benefit and not a reward. Hooker, b. i. f. 9.

They have a good reward for their labour. Ecclesi. iv. 9.

To myself I owe this due regard,
Not to make love my gift, but my reward. Dryden.

Men have consented to the immortality of the soul and the recompenses of another world, promising to themselves some rewards of virtue after this life. Tillotson.

2. It is sometimes used with a mixture of irony, for punishment or recompense of evil.

REWARDABLE. adj. [from reward.] Worthy of reward.

Men's actions are judged, whether in their own nature rewardable or punishable. Hooker, b. i. f. 9.

The action that is but indifferent, and without reward, if done only upon our own choice, is an act of religion, and rewardable by God, if done in obedience to our superiors.

Taylor's Rule of Living Holy.

REWARDER. n. f. [from reward.] One that rewards; one that recompenses.

A liberal rewarder of his friends. Shakep. Rich. III.

As the supreme Being is the only proper judge of our per-fections, so is he the only fit rewarder of them. Addison.

Ill judges, as well as rewarders, have popular assemblies been, of those who best deserved from them. Swift.

To REWARD. v. a. [re and word.] To repeat in the same words.

Bring me to the text,
And I the matter will reward; which madness
Would gambol from. Shakep. Hamlet.

RHABARBARATE. adj. [from rhabarbara, Lat.] Impregnated or tinged with rhubarb.

The salt humours must be evacuated by the feminine, rhabarbarate, and sweet manna purgers, with acids added, or the purging waters. Elyer on the Humours.

RHABDOMANCY. n. f. [rhabdōmancy and rhabdōmancy.] Divination by a wand.

Of peculiar rhabdomancy is that which is used in mineral discoveries, with a forked hazel, commonly called Moses's rod, which, freely held forth, will stir and play if any mine be under it. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

RHAPSODIST. n. f. [from rhapsody.] One who writes without regular dependence of one part upon another.

Ask our rhapsodist, if you have nothing but the excellence and loveliness of virtue to preach, and no future rewards or punishments, how many vicious wretches will you ever reclaim. Watt's Improvement of the Mind.

RHAPSODY. n. f. [rhapsodia; ῥαψῳδία, to sew, and ὄδῃ, a song.] Any number of parts joined together, without necessary dependence or natural connection.

Such a deed, as sweet religion makes A rhapsody of words. Shakep. Hamlet.

This confusion and rhapsody of difficulties was not to be supposed in each single sinner. Hammond.

He, that makes no reflexions on what he reads, only loads his mind with a rhapsody of tales fit for the entertainment of others. Locke.

The words slide over the ears, and vanish like a rhapsody of evening tales. Watt's Improvement of the Mind.

RHETORICK. n. f. [rhetorica; rhetorica, Fr.]

RHO

2. The power of persuasion; oratory.
The heart's still rhetoric, silos'd with eyes, Shakep.
His sober lips then did he softly part,
Whence of pure rhetoric whole streams outflow, Fairfax.
Enjoy your dear wit and gay rhetoric, Milton.
That hath so well been taught her dazling fence.
RHETORICAL, adj. [rhetoricus, Lat. from rhetoric.] Pertaining to rhetoric; oratorical; figurative.
The apprehension is so deeply riveted into my mind, that rhetorical flourishes cannot at all loosen it. More.
Because Brutus and Cassius met a blackmore, and Pompey had on a dark garment at Pharsalia, these were prefaces of their overthrow, which notwithstanding are scarce rhetorical sequels; concluding metaphors from realities, and from conceptions metaphorical inferring realities again. Brown.
The subject moral, logical, or rhetorical, which does not come under our senses. Watts's Improvement of the Mind.
RHETORICALLY, adv. [from rhetorical.] Like an orator; figuratively; with intent to move the passions.
To RHETORICATE, v. n. [rhetorico, low Lat. from rhetoric.] To play the orator; to attack the passions.
I will be much more seasonable to reform, than apologize or rhetoricate; not to suffer themselves to perish in the midst of such solicitations to be saved. Decay of Piety.
RHETORICIAN, n. s. [rhetorician, Fr. rhetor, Lat.] One who teaches the science of rhetoric.
The ancient sophists and rhetoricians, which ever had young auditors, lived till they were an hundred years old. Bacon.
Tis the business of rhetoricians to treat the characters of the passions. Dryden's Duressay.
A man may be a very good rhetorician, and yet at the same time a mean orator. Baker's Reflections on Learning.
RHETORICIAN, adj. Suited a master of rhetoric.
Boldly pretum'd with rhetorician pride,
To hold of any question either side. Blackmore.
RHEUM, n. s. [ῥεῦμα; rheuma, Fr.] A thin watery matter oozing through the glands, chiefly about the mouth. Quincy.
Trust not those cunning waters of his eyes;
For villainy is not without such a rheum; Shakep.
And he long traded in it, makes it seem Like rivers of remorse. Shakep.
You did void your rheum upon my beard.
Why holds thine eye that lamentable rheum,
Like a proud river peering o'er his bounds. Shakep.
Each changing season does its poison bring,
Rheums chill the winter, agues blast the spring. Prior.
RHEUMATICK, adj. [ῥευματικός; from rheuma.] Proceeding from rheum or a peccant watry humour.
The moon, the governess of floods,
Pale in her anger, washes all the air,
That rheumatick diseases do abound. Shakep.
The blood taken away looked very fizy or rheumatick. Floy.
RHEUMATISM, n. s. [ῥευματισμός; rheumatisme, Fr. rheumatismus, Lat.] A painful distemper supposed to proceed from acrid humours.
Rheumatism is a distemper affecting chiefly the membrana communis musculorum, which it makes rigid and unfit for motion; and it seems to be occasioned almost by the same causes, as the mucilaginous glands in the joints are rendered stiff and gritty in the gout. Quincy.
The throbbing quinsy 'tis my star appoints,
And rheumatism I lend to rack the joints. Dryden.
RHEUMY, adj. [from rheum.] Full of sharp moisture.
Is Brutus sick?
And will he steal out of his wholesome bed,
To dare the vile contagion of the night?
And tempt the rheumy and unpurged air,
To add unto his sickness. Shakep. Julius Caesar.
The South he loos'd, who night and horror brings,
And fogs are shaken from his flaggy wings;
From his divided beard two streams he pours;
His head and rheumy eyes distil in thow'rs. Dryden.
RHINOCEROS, n. s. [ῥίνο and κέρας; rhinoceros, Fr.] A vast beast in the East Indies armed with a horn in his front.
Approach thou like the rugged Russian bear,
The arm'd rhinoceros, or Hyrcanian tyger;
Take any shape but that, and my firm nerves Shall never tremble. Shakep. Macbeth.
If you draw your beast in an emblem, fiew a landscape of the country natural to the beast; as to the rhinoceros an East Indian landscape, the crocodile, an Egyptian. Peacham.
RHOMB, n. s. [ῥόμβος; rhombus, Lat. ῥόμβος.] In geometry, a parallelogram or quadrangular figure, having its four sides equal, and consisting of parallel lines, with two opposite angles acute, and two obtuse: it is formed by two equal and right cones joined together at their base. Trevoux and Harris.
Save the sun his labour, and that swift Nocturnal and diurnal rhomb suppos'd.
Invisible else above all stars, the wheel
Of day and night. Milton.
See how in warlike muster they appear,
In rhombs and wedges, and half moons and wings. Milton.
RHOMBICK, adj. [from rhomb.] Shaped like a rhomb.

RIB

- Many other sorts of stones are regularly figured; the asteria in form of a star, and they are of a rhombick figure. Greu.
RHOMBICOID, n. s. [ῥομβοειδής; rhomboides, Fr.] A figure approaching to a rhomb.
Many other sorts of stones are regularly figured; and they are of a rhombick figure; talk, of such as are rhomboid. Greu.
RHOMBICOIDAL, adj. [from rhomboid.] Approaching in shape to a rhomb.
Another rhomboidal selenites of a compressed form, had many others infixed round the middle of it. Woodward.
RHUBARB, n. s. [ῥαβάρβα; rhubarba, Lat.] A medicinal root slightly purgative, referred by botanists to the dock.
What rhubarb, fenna, or what purgative drug Would scour these English hence. Shakep. Macbeth.
Having fixed the fontanel, I purged him with an infusion of rhubarb in small ale. Wifeman's Surgery.
RHYME, n. s. [ῥυθμός; rhyme, Fr.]
1. A harmonical succession of sounds.
2. The consonance of verses; the correspondence of the last found of one verse to the last found or syllable of another.
The youth with songs and rhymes:
Some dance, some hale the rope. Denham.
For rhyme the rudder is of verses,
With which like ships they steer their courses. Hudibras.
Such was the news, indeed, but songs and rhymes
Prevail as much in these hard iron times;
As would a plump of trembling fowl, that rise
Against an eagle fousing from the skies. Dryden.
If Cupid throws a single dart,
We make him wound the lover's heart;
But if he takes his bow and quiver,
'Tis sure he must transfix the liver;
For rhyme with reason may dispense,
And found has right to govern sense.
3. Poetry; a poem.
All his manly power it did disperse,
As he was warmed with enchanted rhymes,
That oftentimes he quak'd.
Who would not sing for Lycidas? he knew Himself to sing, and build the lofty rhyme. Milton.
Now sportive youth,
Carol in condite rhythms with sutting notes,
And quaver inharmonious.
RHYME or reason. Number or sense.
I was promis'd on a time,
To have reason for my rhyme;
But from that time into this season,
I had neither rhyme nor reason.
The guiltness of my mind drove the grossness of the hyp-pocry in a received belief, in despite of the teeth of all rhyme and reason, that they were fairies. Shakep.
To RHYME, v. n.
1. To agree in sound.
He was too warm on picking work to dwell,
But forgot his notions as they fell.
And, if they rhim'd and rattled, all was well. Dryden.
2. To make verses.
These fellows of infinite tongue, that can rhyme themselves into ladies favours, they do always reason themselves out again. Shakep. Henry V.
There march'd the bard and blockhead, side by side,
Who rhym'd for hire, and patroniz'd for pride. Dunbar.
RHYMER, n. s. [from rhyme.] One who makes rhymes;
RHYMSTER, s. a versifier; a poet in contempt.
Scall'd rhymers will ballad us out o' tune. Shakep.
It was made penal to the English, to permit the Irish to graze upon their lands, to entertain any of their minstrels, rhymers, or news-tellers. Darwin on Ireland.
Rhymers come on, and do the worst you can;
I fear not you, nor yet a better man.
His rhyme is constrained at an age, when the passion of love makes every man a rhymers, though not a poet. Dryden.
I speak of those who are only rhymsters, not poets.
So modern rhymers wisely blast
The poetry of ages past,
And from their ruin build their own.
RHYTHMICAL, adj. [ῥυθμικός; rhythmicus, Fr. from rhythm or rhythm.] Harmonical; having proportion of one sound to another.
RIB, n. s. [ribbe, Saxon.] A bone in the body.
1. Of these there are twenty-four in number, viz. twelve on each side the twelve vertebrae of the back; they are segments of a circle; they grow flat and broad, as they approach the sternum; but the nearer they are to the vertebrae, the rounder and thicker they are; at which end they have a round head, which, being covered with a cartilage, is received into the sinus in the bodies of the vertebrae: the ribs thus articulated, make an acute angle with the lower vertebrae: the ribs have each a small canal or sinus, which runs along their under sides, in which lies a nerve, vein, and artery: their extremities, which are fastened to the sternum, are cartilaginous, and the cartilages make an obtuse angle with the bony part of the ribs; this angle respects the head: the cartilages are

RIC

- harder in women than in men, that they may better bear the weight of their breasts: the ribs are of two sorts; the seven upper are called true ribs, because their cartilaginous ends are received into the sinus of the sternum: the five lower are called false ribs, because they are looser and shorter, of which only the first is joined to the extremity of the sternum, the cartilaginous extremities of the rest being tied to one another, and thereby leaving a greater space for the dilatation of the stomach and intestines: the last of these short ribs is shorter than all the rest; it is not tied to them, but sometimes to the mucleus obliquus descendens. Quincy.
Why do I yield to that suggestion?
Whole horrid image doth upbraid my hair,
And make my seated heart knock at my ribs,
Against the use of nature!
He open'd my left side, and took
From thence a rib, with cordial spirits warm
And life blood streaming fresh. Milton's Par. Lost, b. viii.
He, who first the passage try'd,
In harden'd oak his heart did hide,
And ribs of iron arm'd his side,
Who tempted first the briny flood. Dryden's Horace.
2. Any piece of timber or other matter which strengthens the side.
I should not see the sandy hour glass run,
But I should think of shallows and of flats;
And see my wealthy Andrew dock'd in sand,
Vailing his high top lower than her ribs,
To kiss her burial. Shakep. Merchant of Venice.
RIBALD, n. s. [ribaldus, Fr. ribaldo, Italian.] A loose, rough, mean, brutal wretch.
That lewd ribald, with vile lust advanced,
Laid first his filthy hands on virgin clean,
To spoil her dainty corse to fair and sheen. Fairy Queen.
Your ribald nag of Egypt,
The breeze upon her, like a cow in June, Hoists sails, and flies. Shakep. Antony and Cleopatra.
The busy day,
Wak'd by the lark, has rous'd the ribald crows,
And dreaming night will hide our joys no longer. Shakep.
Ne'er one sprig of laurel grac'd these ribalds,
From flathing Bentley down to piddling Tibbalds. Pope.
RIBALDRY, n. s. [from ribald; ribaldie, old Fr.] Mean, lewd, brutal language.
Mr. Cowley asserts, that obscenity has no place in wit; Buckingham says, 'tis an ill sort of wit, which has nothing more to support it than bare-faced ribaldry. Dryden.
The ribaldry of the low characters is different; the reeve, miller, and cook are distinguished from each other. Dryden.
In the same antique loom these scenes were wrought,
Embellish'd with good morals and just thought,
True nature in her noblest light you see,
E'er yet debauch'd by modern gallantry
To trifling jests and fulsom ribaldry. Granville.
If the outward profession of religion were once in practice among men in office, the clergy would see their duty and interest in qualifying themselves for lay-conversation, when once they were out of fear of being choaked by ribaldry or prophaneities. Swift.
RIBAND, n. s. [rubande, ruban, Fr.] A file of silk; a narrow web of silk, which is worn for ornament.
Quaint in green, the shall be loose enrob'd,
With ribbands pendent, flaring 'bout her head. Shakep.
A ribband did the dauid tresses bind,
The rest was loose. Dryden's Knight's Tale.
See, in the lists they wait the trumpets found;
Some love device is wrought on ev'ry sword,
And ev'ry riband bears some mystick word.
RIBBED, adj. [from rib.]
1. Furnished with ribs.
Was I by rocks engender'd? rib'd with steel?
Such tortures to resist, or not to feel?
Hung on each bough a single leaf appears,
Which shrivell'd in its infancy remains,
Like a clos'd fan, nor stretches wide its veins,
But as the seasons in their circle run,
It opens its ribb'd surface to the nearer sun.
2. Inclosed as the body by ribs.
Remember
The nat'ral brav'ry of your isle, which stands
As Neptune's park, ribb'd and pale'd in,
With rocks unfeeling, and roaring waters. Shakep.
RIBBON, n. s. See RIBAND.
To RIBBROAST, v. n. [rib and raast.] To beat soundly. A beast burlesque word.
That done, he rises, humbly bows,
And gives thanks for the princely blows;
Departs not meanly proud, and boasting
Of his magnificent ribbroasting. Butler.
I have been pinched in feth, and well ribbroast under my former masters; but I'm in now for skin and all. L'Estrange.
RIBSWORT, n. s. A plant.
Ric, n. s. Ric denotes a powerful, rich, or valiant man; as Ricard in these verses of Fortunatus:

RIC

- Hilperice potens, si interpres barbarus adfit,*
Adjutor fortis hoc quoque nomen habet.
Hilperic Barbarians a stout helper term'd.
So Alfric is altogether strong; Aethelric, nobly strong or powerful: to the same sense as Polycrates, Crato, Plutar-chus, Opimius. Gibson's Camden.
RICE, n. s. [oryza, Lat.] One of the esculent grains: it hath its grains disposed into a panicle, which are almost of an oval figure, and are covered with a thick hulk, somewhat like barley: this grain is greatly cultivated in most of the Eastern countries. Miller.
Rice is the food of two thirds of mankind; it is kindly to human constitutions, proper for the consumptive, and those subject to hemorrhages. Arbutnot.
If the snuff get out of the snuffers, it may fall into a dish of rice milk. Swift's Directions to the Butler.
RICH, adj. [riche, Fr. ricco, Italian; rica, Saxon.]
1. Wealthy; abounding in wealth; abounding in money or possessions; opulent.
I am as rich in having such a jewel,
As twenty seas, if all their sand were pearl. Shakep.
The rich shall not give more, and the poor no less. Exod.
A thief bent to unhoard the cash
Of some rich burgher. Milton.
Several nations of the Americans are rich in land, and poor in all the comforts of life. Locke.
He may look upon the rich as benefactors, who have beautified the prospect all around him. Seed.
2. Valuable; estimable; precious; splendid; sumptuous.
Earth, in her rich attire, Milton.
Consummate lovely smil'd.
3. Having any ingredients or qualities in a great quantity or degree.
So we th' Arabian coast do know
At distance, when the spices blow,
By the rich odour taught to steer,
Though neither day nor star appear.
If life be short, it shall be glorious,
Each minute shall be rich in some great action. Rowe.
Sauces and rich spices are fetched from India. Baker.
4. Fertile; fruitful.
There are, who fondly studious of increase,
Rich foreign mold on their ill-natur'd land Induce. Philips.
RICHED, adj. [from rich.] enriched. Obsolete.
Of all these bounds,
With shadowy forests, and with champions rich'd,
With plenteous rivers and wide skirted meads,
We make thee lady. Shakep. King Lear.
RICHES, n. s. [richesses, Fr.]
1. Wealth; money or possession.
The instrumentality of riches to charity has rendered it necessary by laws to secure propriety. Hammond.
Chemists seek riches by transmutation and the great elixir. Sprat.
Riches do not consist in having more gold and silver, but in having more in proportion than our neighbours, whereby we are enabled to procure to ourselves a greater plenty of the conveniences of life, than comes within their reach, who, sharing the gold and silver of the world in a less proportion, want the means of plenty and power, and so are poorer. Locke.
What riches give us, let us first enquire, Meat, fire, and cloaths; what more? meat, cloaths, and fire. Pope.
2. Splendid sumptuous appearance.
The riches of heav'n's pavement, trodden gold. Milton.
RICHLY, adv. [from rich.]
1. With riches; wealthily; splendidly; magnificently.
In Belmont is a lady richly left,
And she is fair, of wondrous virtues. Shakep.
Women richly gay in gems. Milton.
2. Plentifully.
In animals, some smells are found more richly than in plants.
After a man has studied the laws of England, the reading the reports of adjudged cases will richly improve him. Watts.
3. Truly; abundantly. An ironical use.
There is such licentiousness among the basest of the people, that one would not be sorry to see them bestowing upon one another a chastisement, which they so richly deserve. Addison.
RICHNESS, n. s. [from rich.]
1. Opulence; wealth.
Of virtue you have left proof to the world;
And virtue is grateful with beauty and richness adorn'd. Sid.
2. Finery; splendour.
3. Fertility; fecundity; fruitfulness.
This town is famous for the richness of the soil. Addison.
4. Abundance or perfection of any quality.
I amused myself with the richness and variety of colours in the western parts of heaven. Speclator.
5. Pampering qualities.
The lively tincture of whose gushing blood
Shou'd clearly prove the richness of his food. Dryden.
Rick.

RID

RICK. n. f. See REEK.

1. A pile of corn or hay regularly heaped up in the open field, and sheltered from wet.

An inundation

O'erflowed a farmer's barn and stable;

Whole ricks of hay and stacks of corn

Were down the sudden current born.

Mice and rats do great injuries in the field, houses, barns, and corn ricks.

A heap of corn or hay piled by the gatherer.

In the North they bind them up in small bundles, and make small ricks of them in the field.

RICKETS. n. f. [rachitis, Lat.] A name given to the di-temper at its appearance by Gilissen.

The rickets is a distemper in children, from an unequal ditribution of nourishment, whereby the joints grow knotty, and the limbs uneven: its cure is performed by evacuation and friction.

In some years, liver-grown, spleen, and rickets are put altogether, by reason of their likeness.

O were my pupil fairly knock'd o' th' head,

I thou'd possess th' estate, if he were dead;

He's so far gone with the rickets and th' evil,

That one small dose will send him to the devil.

Old Busby walks us in a theme,

Whole props support our infant vein,

And help the rickets in the brain;

But when our souls their force dilate,

Our thoughts grow up to wit's estate.

RICKETS. adj. [from rickets.] Disaffected with the rickets.

In a young animal, when the solids are too lax, the case of rickety children, the diet should be gently astringent.

RICKUS. n. f. A plant.RICKURE. n. f. [rickura, Lat.] A gaping.RID. *pret. of ride.*To RID. v. a. [from hæbban, Saxon.]

1. To let free; to redeem.

It is he that delivereth me from my cruel enemies; thou shalt rid me from the wicked man.

Rid me, and deliver me out of great waters.

I will bring you out from under their burthens, and rid you out of their bondage.

2. To clear; to disencumber.

They were not before so willing to be rid of their learned pastor, as now importunate to obtain him again from them, who had given him entertainment.

I must rid all the seas of pirates.

We'll use his countenance; which being done,

Let her, who would be rid of him, devise

His speedy taking off.

Upon the word, slept forth

Three of thy crew, to rid thee of that care.

I can put on

Thy terrors, as I put thy mildness on,

Image of thee in all things; and shall soon,

Arm'd with thy might, rid heav'n of these rebell'd.

Did faints for this bring in their plate;

For when they thought the cause had need on't,

Happy was he that could be rid on't.

The god uneasy till he slept again,

Relov'd at once to rid himself of pain.

At any rate we desire to be rid of the present evil, which we are apt to think nothing absent can equal.

The greater visible good does not always raise men's desire, in proportion to the greatness it appears to have; though every little trouble moves us, and sets on work to get rid of it.

The ladies asked, whether we believed that the men of any town would, at the same conjuncture, have loaden themselves with their wives; or rather, whether they would not have been glad of such an opportunity to get rid of them?

The father, seeing himself entirely rid of Theodosius, was not very much concerned at the obstinate refusal of his daughter.

3. To dispatch.

Having the best at Barnet field,

We'll thither straight; for willingness rids away.

4. To drive away; to press away; to destroy.

Ah deathmen! you have rid this sweet young prince.

RIDANCE. n. f. [from rid.]

1. Deliverance.

Deliverance from sudden death, riddance from all adversity, and the extent of saving mercy towards all men.

2. Disencumbrance; loss of something one is glad to lose.

I have too griev'd a heart

To take a tedious leave: thus losers part.

—A gentle riddance.

By this, the cock had a good riddance of his rival.

3. Act of clearing away any encumbrances.

Those blossoms, and those dropping gums,

That lie bestrown, ungloriously and unsmooth,

At riddance, if we mean to tread with ease.

RID

RIDDEN. the participle of ride.

He could never have ridden out an eternal period, but it must be by a more powerful being than himself.

RIDDLE. n. f. [rædels, Saxon, from ræde, counsel, perhaps a trial of wit.]

1. An enigma; a puzzling question; a dark problem.

How did you dare

To trade and traffick with Macbeth,

In riddles and in charms of death.

The Theban monster, that propos'd

Her riddle, and him, who solv'd it not, devour'd;

That once found out and solv'd, for grief and spite

Cast herself headlong from the Ilianian steep.

Her mother was thinking of a riddle.

2. Any thing puzzling.

'Twas a strange riddle of a lady;

Not love, if any lov'd her: hey day!

So towards never use their might,

But against such as will not fight.

3. [hættel, Saxon.] A coarse or open sieve.

Horfe-beans and tares, sown together, are easily parted with a riddle.

To RIDDLE. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To solve; to unriddle. There is something of whimsical analogy between the two senses of the word riddle: as, we say, to lift a question; but their derivations differ.

Riddle me this, and guess him if you can,

Who bears a nation in a single man?

2. To separate by a coarse sieve.

The finest sifted mould must be riddled in.

To RIDDLE. v. n. [from the noun.] To speak ambiguously or obscurely.

Be plain, good son, and homely in thy drift;

Riddling confession finds but riddling thrust.

RIDDLINGLY. adv. [from riddle.] In the manner of a riddle.

Though like the pestilence and old-fashion'd love,

Riddlingly it catch men, and doth remove

Never, till it be starv'd out, yet their state

Is poor.

To RIDE. v. n. preter. rid or rode; part. rid or ridden.Saxon; rijden, Dutch.]

1. To travel on horseback.

Brutus and Cassius

Are rid, like madmen, through the gates of Rome,

Were you but riding forth to air yourself,

Such parting were too petty.

Am not I thine ass, upon which thou hast ridden?

So stands a forest tall of mountain oaks

Advanc'd to mighty growth; the traveller

Hears from the humble valley, where he rides,

The hollow murmurs of the winds that blow

Amidst the boughs.

Let your master ride on before, and do you gallop after him.

2. To travel in a vehicle; to be borne, not to walk.

Infected be the air whereon they ride.

Upon this chaos rid the distressed ark, that bore the small remains of mankind.

3. To be supported in motion.

As venerable Nestor, hatch'd in silver,

Should with a bond of air, strong as the axle-tree,

On which heav'n rides, knit all the Grecian cars

To his experience'd tongue.

4. To manage an horse.

Skill to ride seems a science,

Proper to gentle blood; some others feign,

To manage steeds, as did this vaunter; but in vain.

The horses I saw well chosen, ridden, and furnished,

Inspir'd by love, whose business is to please,

He rode, he fenc'd, he mov'd with graceful ease.

5. To be on the water.

On the Western coast

Rideth a puissant army.

The sea was grown so rough, that the admiral was not able longer to ride it out with his galleys; but was enforced to slip his anchors, and run his gallees on ground.

They were then in a place to be aided by their ships, which rode near in Edinburgh Frith.

6. To be supported by something subervient.

A credulous father, and a brother noble,

Whose nature is so far from doing harms,

That he suspects none; on whose foolish honesty

My practices did easy.

To RIDE. v. a. To manage insolently at will.

Humility does not make us servile or insensible, nor oblige us to be ridden at the pleasure of every coxcomb.

The nobility could no longer endure to be ridden by bakers, coblers and brewers.

RID

RIDDER. n. f. [from ride.]

1. One who is carried on a horse or in a vehicle.

The strong camel and the gen'rous horse,

Refrain'd and aw'd by man's inferior force,

Do to the rider's will their rage submit,

And answer to the spur, and own the bit.

2. One who manages or breaks horses.

His horses are bred better; and to that end riders dearly hired.

I would with jockies from Newmarket dine,

And to rough riders give my choicest wine.

3. An infertile leaf.

RIDGE. n. f. [hugels, Saxon; rig, Danish; rugge, Dutch,

the back.]

1. The top of the back.

He thought it was no time to stay;

But in a trice advanc'd the knight

Upon the bare ridge bolt upright.

2. The rough top of any thing, resembling the vertebrae of the back.

As when a vulture on Imaus bred,

Whole snowy ridges the roving Tartar bounds,

Dilodges from a region scarce of prey.

His sons

Shall dwell to Seir, on that long ridge of hills!

The highest ridges of those mountains serve for the maintenance of cattle for the inhabitants of the vallies.

3. A steep protuberance.

Part rise in crystal wall, or ridge direct,

For haste.

About her coasts unruly waters roar,

And, rising on a ridge, insult the shore.

4. The ground thrown up by the plow.

Thou visitest the earth; thou waterest the ridges thereof abundantly; thou fettest the furrows thereof.

The body is smooth on that end, and on this 'tis fet with ridges round the point.

Wheat must be sowed above furrow fourteen days before

Michaelmas, and laid up in round high warm ridges.

Land for grafs lay down when you sow wheat or rye; but then your corn should be sowed on broad ridges.

5. The top of the roof rising to an acute angle.

Ridge tiles or roof tiles, being in length thirteen inches, and made circular breadthways like an half cylinder, whose diameter is about ten inches or more, and about half an inch and half a quarter in thicknefs, are laid upon the upper part or ridges of the roof, and also on the hips.

6. Ridges of a horse's mouth are wrinkles or ridings of the flesh in the roof of the mouth, running across from one side of the jaw to the other like fleshy ridges, with interjacent furrows or sinking cavities.

To RIDGE. v. a. [from the noun.] To form a ridge.

Thou from heav'n

Feign'dst at thy birth was given thee in thy hair,

Where strength can least abide, though all thy hairs

Were bristles rang'd like those that ridge the back

Of chaf'd wild boars, or rust'd porcupines.

RIDGELING. n. f. [gwis rijcula, Lat. Any.] A ram half ridg'd.

Tend my herd, and see them fed;

To morning pastures, evening waters led:

And 'ware the Libyan ridg'd butting head.

Tend them well, and see them fed

In pastures fresh, and to their watering led;

And 'ware the ridg'd with his butting head.

RIDG'Y. adj. [from ridge.] Rising in a ridge.

Far in the sea against the foaming shore,

There stands a rock, the raging billows roar

Above his head in storms; but when 'tis clear,

Uncoil their ridg'd backs, and at his feet appear.

RIDICULE. n. f. [ridicule, Fr. ridiculum, Lat.] Wit of that species that provokes laughter.

Sacred to ridicule his whole life long

And the sad burthen of some merry song.

Touch'd and sham'd by ridicule alone.

Those, who aim at ridicule,

Should fix upon some certain rule,

Which fairly hints they are in jest.

To RIDICULE. v. a. [from the noun.] To expose to laughter;

to treat with contemptuous merriment.

I with the vein of ridiculing all that is serious and good may have no worse effect upon our state, than knight errantry had on theirs.

He often took a pleasure to appear ignorant, that he might the better turn to ridicule those that valued themselves on their books.

RIDICULOUS. adj. [ridicule, Fr. ridiculus, Lat.] Worthy of laughter; exciting contemptuous merriment.

Thus was the building left ridiculous; and the work confusion nam'd.

It was not in Titus's power not to be derided; but it was in his power not to be ridiculous.

RIF

RINTCULOUSLY. adv. [from ridiculous.] In a manner worthy of laughter or contempt.

Epicurus's discourse concerning the original of the world is so ridiculously merry, that the design of his philosophy was pleasure and not instruction.

RIDICULOUSNESS. n. f. [from ridiculous.] The quality of being ridiculous.

What sport do Tertullian, Minucius and Arnobius make with the images consecrated to divine worship? from the meanness of the matter they are made, the casualties of fire, and rottenness they are subject to, on purpose to represent the ridiculousness of worshipping such things.

RIDING. particip. adj. Employed to travel on any occasion.

It is provided by another provincial constitution, that no suffragan bishop shall have more than one riding apparitor, and that archdeacons shall not have so much as one riding ap-paritor, but only a foot messenger.

RIDING. n. f. [from ride.] A district visited by an officer.RIDINGCOAT. n. f. [riding and coat.] A coat made to keep out weather.

When you carry your master's ridingcoat in a journey, wrap your own in it.

RIDINGHOOD. n. f. [riding and hood.] A hood used by women, when they travel, to bear off the rain.

RIG

They have an idle tradition, that a misle bird, feeding upon a seed she cannot digest, expelled it whole; which, falling upon a bough of a tree that hath some rift, putteth forth the misletoe.

Either tropick
'Gan thunder, and both ends of heav'n; the clouds
From many a horrid rift abortive pour'd
Pierce rain, with lightning mixt.
Some pick out bullets from the vessels sides,
Some drive old oakum through each seam and rift. Dryd.
To RIFT. v. a. [from the noun.] To cleave; to split.
To the dread rattling thunder
Have I giv'n fire, and rifted Jove's stout oak With his own bolt. Shakep. Temp.
At sight of him the people with a shout Rifted the air. Milton's Agonistes.
On rifted rocks, the dragon's late abodes,
The green rock trembles. Pope's Messab.
To RIFT. v. n.
1. To burst; to open.
I'd shriek, that even your ears
Should rift to hear me. Shakep. Winter's Tale.
Some trees are belt for ship-timber, as oaks that grow in moist grounds; for that maketh the timber tough, and not apt to rift with ordnance. Bacon's Nat. Hist.
When ice is congealed in a cup, it will swell instead of contracting, and sometimes rift. Bacon's Nat. Hist.
2. [Raver, Danish.] To belch; to break wind.
RIG. n. s. Rig, ridge, seem to signify the top of a hill falling on each side; from the Saxon, hrygg; and the Islandick, hryggur, both signifying a back. Gilson's Camden.
To RIG. v. a. [from rig or ridge, the back.]
1. To dress; to accoutre. Cloaths are proverbially said to be for the back, and victuals for the belly.
Jack was rigged out in his gold and silver lace, with a feather in his cap; and a pretty figure he made in the world. L'Estrange.
2. To fit with tackling.
He, like a foolish pilot, hath shipwreck'd
My vessel gloriously rigg'd. Milton's Agonistes.
The finner shall set forth like a ship launched into the wide sea, not only well built and rigged; but also carried on with full wind. South's Sermons.
He bids them rig the fleet.
He rigged out another small fleet, and the Achæans engaged him with theirs. Arbutnot on Cains.
RIGADON. n. s. [rigadon, French.] A dance.
RIGATION. n. s. [rigatio, Lat.] The act of watering. Diët.
RIGGER. n. s. [from rig.] One that rigs or dresses.
RIGGING. n. s. [from rig.] The falls or tackling of a ship.

To plow the deep,
To make fit rigging, or to build a ship. Creech.
His batter'd rigging their whole war receives;
All bare, like some old oak with tempests beat,
He stands, and fees below his scatter'd leaves. Dryden.
RIGGISH. adj. [from rig, an old word for a whore.] Wanton; whorish.
Vilest things
Become themselves in her, that the holy priests Bless her, when she is riggish. Shakep. Ant. and Cleop.
To RIGGLE. v. a. [properly to wriggle.] To move backward and forward, as shrinking from pain.
RIGHT. adj. [rig, Saxon; rectus, Dutch; ritto, Italian; rectus, Latin.]
1. Fit; proper; becoming; suitable; true; not erroneous; not wrong.
How forcible are right words! but what doth your arguing reprove? Job vi. 25.
The words of my mouth are plain to him that understandeth, and right to them that find knowledge. Prov. viii.
The Lord God led me in the right way. Gen. xxiv. 48.
There being no law of nature, nor positive law of God, that determines which is the right heir in all cases, the right of succession could not have been certainly determined. Locke.
If there be no prospect beyond the grave, the inference is certainly right, let us eat and drink, for to-morrow we die. Locke.
Our calendar wants to be reformed, and the equinox rightly computed; and being once reformed and set right, it may be kept so, by omitting the additional day at the end of every hundred and thirty-four years. Holder on Time.
A time there will be, when all these unequal distributions of good and evil shall be set right, and the wisdom of all his transactions made as clear as the noon-day. Atterbury.
2. Not mistaken; passing a true judgement; passing judgement according to the truth of things.
You are right, justice and you weigh this well;
Therefore still bear the balance and the sword. Shakep.
3. Just; honest; equitable.
Their heart was not right with him, neither were they steadfast in his covenant. Psalms lxxviii. 37.

RIG

4. Happy; convenient.
The lady has been disappointed on the right side, and found nothing more disagreeable in the husband, than she discovered in the lover. Addison's Spectator.
5. Not left.
It is not with that certainty to be received, what is believed concerning the right and left hand, that men naturally make use of the right, and that the use of the other is a disreition. Brown's Vulgar Errours.
The left foot naked, when they march to fight,
But in a bull's raw hide they sheathe the right. Dryden.
6. Strait; not crooked.
The idea of a right lined triangle necessarily carries with it an equality of its angles to two right ones. Locke.
7. Perpendicular.
RIGHT. interj. An expression of approbation.
Right, cries his lordship, for a rogue in need
To have a taste, is infolence indeed:
In me 'tis noble, suits my birth and state. Pope.

RIGHT. adv.
1. Properly; justly; exactly; according to truth.
Then shall the right aiming thunder-bolts go abroad, and from the clouds, as from a well-drawn bow, shall they fly to the mark. Widom v. 21.
With strict discipline instructed right,
Have learn'd to use your arms before you fight. Rochester.
Take heed you steer your vessel right, my son,
This calm of heaven, this mermaid's melody,
Into an unseen whirlpool draws you fast,
And in a moment links you. Dryden's Spanish Fryar.
To understand political power right, and derive it from its original, we must consider what state all men are naturally in, and that is a state of perfect freedom to order their actions, and dispose of their possessions and persons.

2. In a direct line.
Let thine eyes look right on, and let thine eyelids look straight before thee. Proverbs iv. 25.
Ye shall be driven out right forth, and none shall gather up him that wandereth. Jer. xlix. 5.
The people passed over right against Jericho. Job. iii. 10.
Insects have voluntary motion, and therefore imagination; for ants go right forwards to their hills, and bees know the way from a flowery heath to their hives. Bacon.
This way, right down to Paradise descend. Milton.
3. In a great degree; very. Now obsolete.
I gat me to my Lord right humbly. Psalms xxx. 8.
Right noble princes,
I'll acquaint our duteous citizens. Shakep. Rich. III.
Pardon us the interruption
Of thy devotion and right christian zeal, Shakep.
I cannot joy, until I be resolv'd
Where our right valiant is become. Shakep. Henry VI.
God shall help her right early. Psalms xlv. 5.

The senate will smart deep
For your upbraidings: I should be right sorry
To have the means to be to veng'd on you,
As I shall shortly on them. Benj. Jonson.
Right many a widow his keen blade,
And many fatherless, had made. Hudibras, p. 1.
4. It is still used in titles: as, right honourable; right reverend.
I mention the right honourable Thomas Howard lord high marshal. Peacocks on Drawing.

RIGHT. n. s.
1. Justice; not wrong.
Persons of noble blood are less envied in their rising; for it seemeth but right done to their birth. Bacon.
In the midst of your invectives, do the Turks this right, as to remember that they are no idolaters. Bacon.
One rising, eminent
In wise deport, spake much of right and wrong,
Of justice, of religion, truth, and peace,
And judgement from above. Milton's Par. Lost.
Long love to her has borne the faithful knight,
And well deserv'd, had fortune done him right. Dryden.
He, that would do right to religion, cannot take a more effectual course, than by reconciling it with the happiness of mankind.

2. Freedom from error.
Seldom your opinions err;
Your eyes are always in the right. Prior.
3. Just claim.
The Roman citizens were, by the sword, taught to acknowledge the pope their lord, though they knew not by what right. Raleigh's Essay.
The proud tyrant would many times say, that whatsoever belonged unto the empire of Rome, was of right his, for as much as he was possessed of the imperial scepter, which his great grandfather Mahomet had by law of arms won from Constantine. Kneller's History of the Turks.
Subdue by force, all who refuse
Right reason for their law; and for their king Messiah, who by right of merit reigns. Milton.

In the midst of your invectives, do the Turks this right, as to remember that they are no idolaters. Bacon.
One rising, eminent
In wise deport, spake much of right and wrong,
Of justice, of religion, truth, and peace,
And judgement from above. Milton's Par. Lost.
Long love to her has borne the faithful knight,
And well deserv'd, had fortune done him right. Dryden.
He, that would do right to religion, cannot take a more effectual course, than by reconciling it with the happiness of mankind.

RIG

My right to it appears,
By long possession of eight hundred years. Dryden.
By long possession of eight hundred years.
The Might and right are inseparable in the opinion of the world. L'Estrange's Fables.
Descriptions, figures, and fables must be in all heroic poems; every poet hath as much right to them, as every man hath to air. Dryden.
Judah pronounced sentence of death against Thamar: our author thinks it is very good proof, that because he did it, therefore he had a right to do it. Locke.
Agrippa is generally ranged in sets of medals among the emperors; as some among the empresses have no other right. Addison.

4. That which justly belongs to one.
To thee doth the right of her appertain, seeing thou only art of her kindred. Job. vi. 11.
The custom of employing these great persons in all great offices, passes for a right.
The pris'ner freed himself by nature's laws,
Born free, he sought his right. Dryden's Knight's Tale.
5. Property; interest.
A subject in his prince may claim a right,
Nor suffer him with strength impair'd to fight. Dryden.
6. Power; prerogative.
God hath a sovereign right over us, as we are his creatures, and by virtue of this right, he might, without injustice, have imposed difficult tasks: but in making laws, he hath not made use of this right. Tillotson.
7. Immunity; privilege.

The citizens,
Let them but have their rights, are ever forward
In celebration of this day with feasts. Shakep.
Their only thoughts and hope was to defend their own rights and liberties, due to them by the law. Clarendon.
8. The side not left.

On his right
The radiant image of his glory sat,
His only son. Milton.
9. To RIGHTS. In a direct line; straight.
These strata falling, the whole tract sinks down to rights into the abyss, and is swallowed up by it. Woodward.
10. To RIGHTS. Deliverance from error.

Several have gone about to inform them, and set them to rights; but for want of that knowledge of the present system of nature, have not given the satisfaction expected. Woodward.
To RIGHT. v. a. To do justice to; to establish in possessions justly claimed; to relieve from wrong.

How will this grieve you,
When you shall come to clearer knowledge, that
You thus have publish'd me? gentle my lord,
You scarce can right me thoroughly. Shakep.
If the injured person be not righted, every one of them is wholly guilty of the injustice, and bound to restitution. Taylor.
I could not expedient fee,
On this side death, to right our family. Waller.
Make my father known,
To right my honour, and redeem your own. Dryden.

RIGHTEOUS. adj. [iustitiae, Saxon; whence rightwile in old authors, and rightwisely in bishop Fisher: so much are words corrupted by pronunciation.]
1. Just; honest; virtuous; uncorrupt.
That far be from thee, to slay the righteous with the wicked; and that the righteous should be as the wicked. Gen.
2. Equitable.
Kill my rival too; for he no less Deserves; and I thy righteous doom will bless. Dryden.

RIGHTEOUSLY. adv. [from righteous.] Honestly; virtuously.
Athens did righteously decide,
When Phocion and when Socrates were try'd;
As righteously they did those dooms repent,
Still they were wise, whatever way they went. Dryden.

RIGHTHOUSNESS. n. s. [from righteous.] Justice; honesty; virtue; goodness.
The scripture, ascribing to the persons of men righteousness, in regard of their manifold virtues, may not be construed, as though it did thereby clear them from all faults. Hosker.
Here wretched Phileas warns the world with cries,
Cou'd warning make the world more just or wise;
Learn righteousness, and dread th' avenging deities. Dry.

RIGHTFUL. adj. [right and full.]
1. Having the right; having the just claim.
As in this haughty great attempt,
They laboured to supplant the rightful heir;
I lost my liberty, and they their lives. Shakep. Hen. VI.
Some will mourn in aches, some coal black,
For the depopling of a rightful king. Shakep. Rich. II.
2. Honest; just.

Nor would, for gold or fee,
Be won, their rightful causes down to tread. Fairy Queen.
Gather all the smiling hours;
Such as with friendly care have guarded Patriots and kings in rightful wars. Prior.

RIG

RIGHTFULLY. adv. [from rightful.] According to right; according to justice.

Henry, who claimed by succession, was sensible that his title was not found, but was rightfully in Mortimer, who had married the heir of York. Dryden's Preface to Pablen.

RIGHT-HAND. n. s. Not the left.
The rank of officers, by the murmuring stream,
Left on your right-hand brings you to the place. Shakep.

RIGHTFULNESS. n. s. [from rightful.] Moral rectitude.
But still although we fail of perfect rightfulness,
Seek we to tame these superfluities,
Nor wholly wink though void of purest fightfulness. Sid.

RIGHTLY. adv. [from right.]
1. According to truth; properly; suitably; not erroneously.
Each of his reign allotted, rightlier call'd Pow'rs of fire, air, water, and earth beneath. Milton.
Descend from heav'n, Urania! by that name
If rightly thou art call'd. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. vii.
For glory done
Of triumph, to be styl'd great conquerors,
Patrons of mankind, gods, and sons of gods;
Destroyers rightlier call'd, and plagues of men. Milton.
A man can never have to certain a knowledge, that a proposition, which contradicts the clear principles of his own knowledge, was divinely revealed, or that he understands the words rightly, wherein it is delivered; as he has, that the contrary is true. Locke.

Is this a bridal or a friendly feast?
Or from their deeds I rightlier may divine, Unto my down with infolence or wine. Pope's Odyssey.
2. Honestly; uprightly.
Let not my jealousies be your dishonour;
You may be rightly just, whatever I shall think. Shakep.
3. Exactly.
Should I grant, thou didst not rightly see;
Then thou wert first deceiv'd. Dryden.
4. Straitly; directly.
We with one end; but differ in order and way, that leadeth rightly to that end. Ascham's Schoolmaster.

RIGHTNESS. n. s. [from right.]
1. Conformity to truth; exemption from being wrong; rectitude.
It is not necessary for a man to be assured of the rightness of his conscience, by such an infallible certainty of persuasion, as amounts to the clearness of a demonstration; but it is sufficient if he knows it upon grounds of such a probability, as shall exclude all rational grounds of doubting. South.
Like brute beasts we travel with the herd, and are never so solicitous for the rightness of the way, as for the number or figure of our company. Rogers's Sermons.

2. Straitness.
Sounds move strongest in a right line, which nevertheless is not caused by the rightness of the line, but by the shortness of the distance. Bacon's Natural History.
RIGID. adj. [rigide, Fr. rigidus, Latin.]
1. Stiff; not to be bent; unpliant.
A body, that is hollow, may be demonstrated to be more rigid and inflexible, than a solid one of the same substance and weight. Ray on the Creation.

2. Severe; inflexible.
His severe judgment giving law,
His modest fancy kept in awe;
As rigid husbands jealous are,
When they believe their wives too fair. Denham.
3. Sharp; cruel. It is used somewhat harshly by Phillips.
Queen of this universe! do not believe
Those rigid threats of death; ye shall not die. Milton.
Cressy plains
And Agincourt, deep ting'd with blood, confess
What the Silures vigour unwittitood Could do in rigid fight. Phillips.

RIGIDITY. n. s. [rigiditas, Fr. from rigid.]
1. Stiffness.
Rigidity is said of the solids of the body, when, being stiff or impliable, they cannot readily perform their respective offices; but a fibre is said to be rigid, when its parts so strongly cohere together, as not to yield to that action of the fluids, which ought to overcome their resistance in order to the preservation of health: it is to be remedied by fomentations.

Rigidity of the organs is such a state as makes them resist that expansion, which is necessary to carry on the vital functions: rigidity of the vessels and organs must necessarily follow from the rigidity of the fibres. Arbutnot on Aliments.
2. Stiffness of appearance; want of easy or airy elegance.
This severe observation of nature, by the one in her comeliness, and by the other in her absolute forms, must needs produce in both a kind of rigidity, and consequently more naturalness than gracefulness. Watson's Architecture.

RIGIDLY. adv. [from rigid.]
1. Stiffly; unpliantly.
2. Severely; inflexibly.
RIGIDNESS. n. s. [from rigid.] Severity; inflexibility.

RIGLET.

RIM

- RIGLET. n. f. [regulet, Fr.] A flat thin square piece of wood. Thus the pieces that are intended to make the frames for pictures, before they are molded, are called riglets. Mox.
- RIGOL. n. f. A circle. Used in Shakespeare for a diadem. This sleep is found; this is a sleep. That, from this golden rigol, hath divorce'd So many English kings. Shakespeare, Henry IV.
- RIGOUR. n. f. [rigor, Latin.]
1. Cold; stiffness.
 2. The rest his look Bound with Gorgonian rigour, not to move. Milton.
 3. A convulsive shuddering with sense of cold. A right regimen, during the rigor or cold fit in the beginning of a fever, is of great importance; a long continued rigor is a sign of a strong disease: during the rigor, the circulation is less quick, and the blood actually stagnates in the extremities, and, pressing upon the heart, may produce concretions; therefore a rigor increaseth an inflammation. Art.
 4. Severity; sternness; want of condescension to others. Nature has got the victory over passion, all his rigour is turned to grief and pity. Denham's Sophy.
 5. Rigor makes it difficult for sliding virtue to recover. Clarif.
 6. Severity of conduct. Does not looseness of life, and a want of necessary sobriety in some, drive others into rigors that are unnecessary? Sprat.
 7. This prison lived in this convent, with all the rigor and austerity of a capuchin. Addison's Remarks on Italy.
 8. Strictness; unabated exactness. It may not seem hard, if in cases of necessity certain profitable ordinances sometimes be relaxed, rather than all men always strictly bound to the general rigor thereof. Hooker.
 9. Heat and cold are not, according to philosophical rigour, the essentials; but are names expressing our passions. Glanvill.
 10. The base degenerate age requires Severity and justice in its rigour: This awes an impious bold offending world. Addison.
 11. Rage; cruelty; fury. He at his foe with furious rigour smites, That strongest oak might seem to overthrow; The stroke upon his shield so heavy lights, That to the ground it doubleth him full low. Fairy Queen.
 12. Driven by the necessities of the times and the temper of the people, more than led by his own disposition to any height and rigour of actions. King Charles.
 13. Hardness; not flexibility; solidity; not softness. The stones the rigor of their kind expel, And supple into softness as they fell. Dryden.
 14. RIGOROUS. adj. [from rigour.] Severe; allowing no abatement. He shall be thrown down the Tarpeian rock With rigorous hands; he hath resisted law, And therefore law shall scorn him further trial, Than the severity of publick power. Shakespeare, Coriolanus.
 15. Are these terms hard and rigorous, beyond our capacities to perform? Rogers's Sermons.
 16. RIGOROUSLY. adv. [from rigorous.] Severely; without tenderness or mitigation. Left they faint At the sad sentence rigorously urg'd, For I behold them soften'd, and with tears Bewailing their excess, all terror hide. Milton.
 17. The people would examine his works more rigorously than himself, and would not forgive the least mistake. Dryden.
 18. RILL. n. f. [riulus, Lat.] A small brook; a little streamlet. May thy brimmed waves from this Their full tribute never miss, From a thousand petty rills, That tumble down the snowy hills. Milton.
 19. TO RILL. v. n. [from the noun.] To run in small streams. Io! Apollo, mighty king, let envy, Ill-judging and verbose, from Lethe's lake, Draw tuns unmeasurable; while thy favour Administers to my ambitious thirst The wholesome draught from Aganippe's spring Genuine, and with soft murmurs gently rilling Adown the mountains where thy daughters haunt. Prior.
 20. RILLET. n. f. [corrupted from riulet.] A small stream. A creek of Ose, between two hills, delivering a little fresh rillet into the sea. Carew's Survey of Cornwall.
 21. RIM. n. f. [rima, Saxon.]
 22. A border; a margin. It keeps of the same thickness near its centre; while its figure is capable of variation towards the rim. Grew.
 23. That which encircles something else. We may not affirm, that ruptures are confinable unto one side, as the peritoneum or rim of the belly may be broke; or its perforations relaxed in either. Brown's Vulgar Errors.
 24. The drum-maker uses it for rims. Motimer's Husbandry.
 25. RIME. n. f. [hym, Saxon.]
 26. Hoar frost. Breathing upon a glass giveth a dew; and in rime frosts you shall find drops of dew upon the inside of glass windows. Bacon's Natural History.

RIN

- In a hoar frost, a rime, is a multitude of quadrangular prisms piled without any order one over another. Grew.
2. [Rima, Lat.] A hole; a chink. Though birds have no epiglottis, yet can they contract the rime or chink of their larynx, so as to prevent the admission of wet or dry indigested. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

3. Eruption; ascent.
Upon the candle's going out, there is a sudden rise of water; for the flame filling no more place, the air and water succeed.
The hill submits itself
In small descents, which do its height beguile;
And sometimes mounts, but so as billows play;
Whole rise not hinders, but makes short our way. Dryden.
4. Place that favours the act of mounting aloft.
Rais'd to high, from that convenient rise
She took her flight, and quickly reach'd the skies. Greech.
Since the arguments against them rise from common received opinions, it happens, in controversial discourses, as it does in the assailing of towns, where, if the ground be but firm, whereon the batteries are erected, there is no farther inquiry of whom it is borrowed, so it affords but a fit rise for the present purpose. Locke.
5. Elevated place.
Such a rise, as doth at once invite
A pleasure, and a reverence from the light. Denham.
6. Appearance of the sun in the East.
Phœbus! stay;
The world to which you fly so fast,
From us to them can pay your hate
With no such object, and salute your rise
With no such wonder, as De Mornay's eyes. Waller.
7. Encrease in price.
Upon a breach with Spain, must be considered the present state of the king's treasure, the rise or fall that may happen in his constant revenue by a Spanish war.
The bishops have had share in the gradual rise of lands. Sw.

To rive their dangerous artillery
Upon no christian soul but English Talbot. Shakep.
- To RIVEL. v. a. [rēpēlē, Saxon, corrugated, rumpel'd.] To contract into wrinkles and corrugations.
Then droop'd the fading flow'rs, their beauty fled,
And clos'd their sickly eyes and hung the head,
And rivel'd up with heat, lay dying in their bed. Dryd.
- And since that plenteous autumn now is past,
Whose grapes and peaches have indulg'd your taste,
Take in good part, from our poor poet's board,
Such rivel'd fruits as winter can afford. Dryden.
- Alum sticks, with contracting pow'r, Shrink his thin essence like a rivel'd flow'r. Pope.
- RIVEN. part. of rive.
- RIVER. n. f. [riviere, Fr. rius, Lat.] A land current of water bigger than a brook.
It is a most beautiful country, being stored throughout with many goodly rivers, replenished with all sorts of fish. Spens.
- The first of these rivers has been celebrated by the Latin poets for the gentleness of its course, as the other for its rapidity. Addison's Remarks on Italy.
- RIVER-DRAGON. n. f. A crocodile. A name given by Milton to the king of Egypt.
Thus with ten wounds
The river-dragon tam'd at length, submits To let his sojourners depart. Milton's Par. Lost.
- RIVER-GOD. n. f. Tutelary deity of a river.
His wig hung as trait as the hair of a river-god rising from the water. Arbuthnot and Pope.
- RIVER-HORSE. n. f. Hippopotamus.
Rote,
As plants ambiguous between sea and land,
The river-horse and scaly crocodile. Milton.
- RIVET. n. f. [river, Fr. to break the point of a thing; to drive.] A fastening pin clenched at both ends.
The armourers accomplishing the knights,
With busy hammers closing rivets up,
Give dreadful note of preparation. Shakep. Henry V.

ROA

- Thy armour
I'll crush, and unlock the rivets all,
But I'll be matter of it. Shakep. Troilus and Cressida.
- Though Valeria's fair, and though the loves me too,
'Gainst her my soul is arm'd on every part;
Yet there are secret rivets to my heart,
Where Berenice's charms have found the way, Subtle as lightnings. Dryden's Tyrannick Love.
- The verse in fashion is, when numbers flow
So smooth and equal, that no fight can find
The rivet, where the polish'd piece was join'd. Dryden.
- The rivets of those wings includ Fit not each other. Dryden's Don Sebastian.
- This instrument should move easy upon the rivet. Sharp.
- To RIVET. v. a. [from the noun.]
1. To fasten with rivets.
This man
If all our fire were out, would fetch down new,
Out of the hand of Jove; and rivet him
To Caucasus, should he but frown. Benj. Johnson.
 2. To fasten strongly; to make immovable.
In rivetting the pin you rivet in should stand upright to the plate you rivet it upon; for if it do not stand upright, you will be forced to set it upright, after it is rivetted. Moxon.
- You were to blame to part with A thing stuck on with oaths upon your finger,
And rivetted with faith unto your flesh. Shakep.
- Why should I write this down, that's rivetted, Screw'd to my memory? Shakep. Cymbeline.
- What one party thought to rivet to a settledness by the strength and influence of the Scots, that the other rejects. King Charles.
- Till fortune's fruitless spite had made it known,
Her blows not shook but rivetted his throne. Dryden.
- Thus hath God not only rivetted the notion of himself into our natures, but likewise made the belief of his being necessary to the peace of our minds and happiness of society. Till.
- If the eye sees those things rivetted, which are loose, where will you begin to rectify the mistake. Lake.
- Where we use words of a loose and wandering signification, hence follows mistake and error, which those maxims, brought as proofs to establish propositions, wherein the terms stand for undetermined ideas, do by their authority confirm and rivet. Lake.
- Rivet and nail me where I stand, ye pow'rs. Congree.
- They provoke him to the rage
Of fangs and claws, and, flopping from your horse, Rivet the panting savage to the ground. Addison's Cat.
- A similitude of nature and manners, in such a degree as we are capable of, must tie the holy knot, and rivet the friendship between us. Atterbury.
- RIVULET. n. f. [rivulus, Lat.] A small river; a brook; a streamlet.
By fountain or by shady rivulet,
He fought them. Milton.
- The veins, where innumerable little rivulets have their confluence into the common channel of the blood. Bentley.
- I saw the rivulet of Salforata, formerly called Albulas, and smelt the stench that arises from its water, which Martial mentions. Addison's Remarks on Italy.
- RUXDOLLAR. n. f. A German coin, worth about four shillings and six-pence sterling. Ditt.
- ROACH. n. f. [from rutulus, Lat. red-haired.]
A roach is a fish of no great reputation for his dainty taste:
his spawn is accounted much better than any other part of him: he is accounted the water sheep, for his simplicity and foolishness; and it is noted, that roaches recover strength, and grow in a fortnight after spawning. Walton's Angler.
- If a gudgeon meet a roach,
He dare not venture to approach;
Yet still he leaps at flies. Swift.
- ROAD. n. f. [rade, Fr.]
1. Large way; path.
Would you not think him a madman, who, whilst he might easily ride on the beaten road way, should trouble himself with breaking up of gaps?
To God's eternal house direct the way,
A broad and ample road. Milton.
 2. [Rade, Fr.] Ground where ships may anchor.
Peering in maps for ports and roads;
And every object that might make me fear Misfortune to my ventures. Shakep. Merch. of Venice.
- About the island are many roads, but only one harbour.
Sandys's Journey.

3. Inroad;

ROA

3. Inroad; incurion.
The Volcians stand
Ready, when time shall prompt them, to make road Upon's again. Shakep. Coriolanus.

former road into that country, become famous and rich.
Kneller's History of the Turks.
- The king of Scotland, seeing none came into Perkin, turned his enterprise into a road, and wafted Northumberland with fire and sword. Bacon's Henry VII.
4. Journey. The word seems, in this sense at least, to be derived from rade, the preterite of ride: as we say, a short ride;
an easy ride.
With easy roads he came to Leicester,
And lodg'd in the abbey. Shakep. Henry VIII.
- He from the East his flaming road begins. Milton.
- To ROAM. v. n. [romigare, Italian. See Room.] To wander without any certain purpose; to ramble; to rove; to play the vagrant.

1. To cry as a lion or other wild beast.
Roaring bulls he would him make to tame. Spenser.
 2. To cry in distress.
At his nurse's tears
He whin'd and roar'd away your victory,
That pages blubb'd at him. Shakep. Coriolanus.
 3. To sound as the wind or sea.
South, East, and West, with mix'd confusion roar,
And howl the foaming billows to the shore.
Loud as the wolves on Orcas' stormy steep,
Howl to the roaring of the northern deep. Pope.
 4. To make a loud noise.
The brazen throat of war had ceas'd to roar.
Consider what fatigues I've known,
How oft I cross'd where carts and coaches roar'd. Gay.
- ROAR. n. f. [from the verb.]
1. The cry of the lion or other beast.
 2. An outcry of distress.
 3. A clamour of merriment.
Where be your gibes now? your gambols? your songs?
your flashes of merriment, that were wont to set the table in a roar?
The sound of the wind or sea.
Any loud noise.
Deep throated engines belch'd, whose roar
Imbowel'd with outrageous noise the air. Milton.
- Off on a plat of rising ground,
I hear the far-off curfew sound,
Over some wide-water'd shoar,
Swinging flow with fullen roar.
When cannons did diffuse,
Preventing posts, the terror, and the news;
Our neighbour princes trembled at their roar.
The waters, list'ning to the trumpet's roar,
Obey the summons, and forsake the shore. Dryden.
- ROARV. adj. [better roary; roars, Lat.] Dewy.
On Lebanon his foot he set,
And shook his wings with roary May dews wet. Fairfax.
- To ROAST. v. a. [roast, Fr. rosten, German; roysten, Saxon; roasted; from rastrum, Lat. a grate; to roast, being,
in its original sense, to broil on a gridiron.]
1. To dress meat, by turning it round before the fire.
He roasteth not that which he took in hunting. D. of Piet.
 2. Roasting and boiling are below the dignity of your office.
Swift's Directions to the Cook.

ROB

2. To impart dry heat to flesh.
Here elements have lost their uses,
Air ripens not, nor earth produces;
Fire will not roast, nor water boil. Swift's Miscellanies.
3. To dress at the fire without water.
In eggs boiled and roasted, there is scarce difference to be discerned. Bacon's Natural History.
4. To heat any thing violently.
Roasted in wrath and fire,
He thus o'erfiz'd with coagulate gore,
Old Priam seeks. Shakespeare.
- ROAST. for roasted.
He lost his roast beef stomach, not being able to touch a filloin. Addison's Spectator, N° 517.
- And if Dan Congreve judges right, Roast beef and ale make Britons fight. Prior.
- It warns the cook-maid, not to burn
The roast meat, which it cannot turn. Swift's Miscel.
- To rule the ROAST. To govern; to manage; to preside. It was perhaps originally roist, which signified a tumult, to direct the populace.
- The new-made duke, that rules the roast. Shakespeare.
- Where champions ruleth the roist, Tusser's Husbandry.
- There dailie disorder is most.
Alma flap-dash, is all again
In ev'ry finew, nerve, and vein;
Runs here and there, like Hamlet's ghost,
While every where the rules the roast. Prior.
- ROB. n. f. [I believe Arabick.] Insipidated juices.
The infusion, being evaporated to a thicker consistence, passeth into a jelly, rob, extract, which contain all the virtues of the infusion. A buthnot on Aliments.
- To ROB. v. a. [rober, old Fr. robare, Italian.]
1. To deprive of any thing by unlawful force, or by secret theft; to plunder. 'To be robbed, according to the present use of the word, is to be injured by theft secret or violent; to rob, is to take away by unlawful violence; and to steal, is to take away privately.
Is't not enough to break into my garden,
And, like a thief, to come to rob my grounds,
But thou wilt brave me with these lawcy terms?
Our fins being ripe, there was no preventing of God's justice from reaping that glory in our calamities, which we robbed him of in our prosperity. King Charles.
 2. To take away unlawfully.
I have not here designed to rob him of any part of that commendation, which he has so justly acquired from the whole author, whose fragments only fall to my portion. Dry.
 3. Better be disdained of all, than fashion a carriage to rob love from any. Shakespeare.
- Procure, that the nourishment may not be robbed and drawn away. Bacon's Natural History.
- Nor will I take from any man his due;
But thus assuming all, he robs from you.
Oh double sacrilege on things divine,
To rob the relic, and deface the shrine! Dryden.
- ROBBERY. n. f. [from rob.] A thief; one that robs by force, or steals by secret means; a plunderer.
These hairs, which thou dost ravish from my chin,
Will quicken and accuse thee; I'm your host;
With robbers hands, my hospitable favour
You should not ruffle thus. Shakespeare. King Lear.
- Barabbas was a robber. St. John.
- Had'st thou not committed Notorious murder on those thirty men
At Ascalon; then, like a robber, strip'd'st them
Of their robes. Milton's Agonistes.
- The robber must run, ride, and use all the desperate ways of escape; and probably, after all, his sin betrays him to the goal, and from thence advances him to the gibbet. South.
- Bold Prometheus did aspire,
And stole from heav'n the seeds of fire;
A train of ills, a ghastly crew,
The robber's blazing track pursue. Dryden's Horace.
- ROBBERY. n. f. [robberie, old Fr. from rob.] Theft perpetrated by force or with privacy.
Thieves for their robbery have authority,
When judges steal themselves. Shakespeare. Meas. for Meas.
- A storm or robbery
Shook down my mellow hangings. Shakespeare. Cymbeline.
- I hate robbery for burnt-offering. Isaiah lxi. 8.
- Some more effectual way might be found, for suppressing common thefts and robberies. Temple.
- ROBE. n. f. [robbe, Fr. robba, Italian; rauba, low Lat.] A gown of state; a dress of dignity.
Through tatter'd cloaths small vices do appear;
Robes and furr'd gowns hide all. Shakespeare. King Lear.

My

ROC

My Nan shall be the queen of all fairies, Finely attir'd in a robe of white. Shaksp.
The last good king, whom willing Rome obey'd,
Was the poor offspring of a captive maid;
Yet he those robes of empire justly bore,
Which Romulus, our sacred founder, wore. Dryden.
How by the finest art the native robe
To weave. Thomson's Autumn.
To ROBE. v. a. [from the noun.] To dress pompously; to invest.
What christian soldier will not be touched with a religious emulation, to see an order of Jesus do such service for enlarging the christian borders; and an order of St. George only to robe, and feast, and perform rites and observances. Bacon.
There in long robes the royal magi stand;
The sage Chaldeans rob'd in white appear'd,
And Brachmans. Pope's Temple of Fame.
Robed in loose array she came to bathe. Thomson.
RO'BERY. n. f. An herb. Ainsl.
ROBERTSMAN. n. f. In the old statutes, a sort of bold and ROBERTSMAN. stout robbers or night thieves, said to be so called from Robinhood, a famous robber.
RO'BIN. n. f. [rubecula, Lat.] A bird so named ROBIN-RED-BREAST. from his red breast.
Up a grove did spring, green as in May,
When April had been moist; upon whose bushes
The pretty robins, nightingales, and thrushes Warbled their notes. Suckling.
The robin-red-breast, till of late had rest,
And children faced held a martin's nest. Pope.
ROB'ROUS. adj. [robur, Lat.] Made of oak. Dict.
ROBUST. adj. [robustus, Lat. robustus, Fr.]
ROBUSTIOUS. strong; finewy; vigorous; forceful.
1. Strong; finewy; vigorous; forceful.
These redundant locks,
Robustious to no purpose, clustring down,
Vain monument of strength. Milton's Agonistes.
2. Boisterous; violent; unwieldy.
The men sympathize with the mastiffs, in robustious and rough coming on. Shaksp. Henry V.
It offends me to hear a robustious periwig-pated fellow tear a passion to tatters, to very rags, to split the ears of the groundlings. Shaksp. Hamlet.
While I was managing this young robustious fellow, that old spark, who was nothing but skin and bone, split through my fingers. Dryden's Don Sebastian.
Is haul'd about in gallantry robust. Thomson's Autumn.
3. Requiring strength.
The tenderness of a sprain remains a good while after, and leaves a lasting caution in the man, not to put the part quickly again to any robust employment. Locke.
4. Robustious is now only used in low language, and in a sense of contempt.
ROBUSTNESS. n. f. [from robust.] Strength; vigour.
Beef may confer a robustness on my son's limbs, but will hebetate his intellects. Arbutnot and Pope.
ROCAMBOLE. n. f. See GARLICK.
Rocambole is a sort of wild garlick, otherwise called Spanish garlick; the seed is about the bigness of ordinary peas. Mort.
Garlick, rocambole, and onions abound with a pungent volatile salt. Arbutnot on Aliments.
ROCHE-ALUM. n. f. [roche, Fr. a rock.] A purer kind of alum.
Roche-alum is also good. Mortimer's Husbandry.
RO'CHET. n. f. [rochet, Fr. rochetum, from roccus, low Lat. a coat.]
1. A surplice; the white upper garment of the priest officiating.
What zealous phrenzy did the senate seize,
That tare the rochet to such rags as these? Cleveland.
2. [Rubellia, Lat.] A fish. Ainsl.
ROCK. n. f. [roc, rocche, Fr. rocca, Italian.]
1. A vast mass of stone.
The splitting rocks cow'r'd in the sinking sands,
And would not dash me with their ragged sides. Shaksp.
There be rock herbs; but those are where there is some mould. Bacon's Natural History.
Distilling some of the tinctor liquor, all that came over was as limpid and colourless as rock water, and the liquor remaining in the vessel deeply ceruleous. Boyle.
These lesser rocks, or great bulky stones, are they not manifest fragments?
Of amber a nodule, invell'd with a coat, called rock amber. Burnet's Theory of the Earth.
Pigeons or doves are of several sorts; as wood pigeons and rock pigeons. Mortimer's Husbandry.
Ye darksome pines, that o'er yon rocks recline'd,
Wave high, and murmur to the hollow wind. Pope.
2. Protection; defence. A scriptural sense.
Though the reeds of Egypt break under the hand of him that leans on them, yet the rock of Israel will be an everlasting stay. King Charles.

3. [Rock, Danish; rocca, Italian; rucca, Spanish; spinnet, Dutch.] A distaff held in the hand, from which the wool was spun by twisting a ball below.
A learned and a manly soul
I purpos'd her; that should with even powers,
The rock, the spindle, and the sheers, controul
Of destiny, and spin her own free hours. Benj. Johnson.
On the rock a scanty measure place
Of vital flax, and turn'd the wheel apace. Dryden.
To ROCK. v. a. [roccare, Fr.]
1. To shake; to move backwards and forwards.
If, by a quicker rocking of the engine, the smoke were more swiftly shaken, it would, like water, vibrate to and fro. Boyle.
The wind was laid; the whirling found
Was dumb; a rising earthquake rock'd the ground.
A living tortoise, being turned upon its back, could help itself only by its neck and head, by pushing against the ground to rock itself as in a cradle, to find out the side towards which the inequality of the ground might more easily permit to roll its shell. Ray on the Creation.
2. To move the cradle, in order to procure sleep.
Come, take hand with me,
And rock the ground whereon these sleepers be. Shaksp.
Leaning her head upon my breast,
My panting heart rock'd her asleep. Suckling.
Like sick and froward children,
Were rock'd asleep by reason. Denham.
While his secret soul on Flanders preys,
He rocks the cradle of the babe of Spain. Dryden.
High in his hall, rock'd in a chair of state,
The king with his tempestuous council late. Dryden.

Sleep rock thy brain,
And never come mischance between us twain! Shaksp.
To ROCK. v. n. To be violently agitated; to reel to and fro.
The rocking town
Supplants their footsteps; to and fro they reel Astonish'd. Philips.
Like this rocking of the battlements. Young's Revenge.
ROCK-DOE. n. f. A species of deer.
The rock-doe breeds chiefly upon the Alps: a creature of admirable swiftness; and may probably be that mentioned in the book of Job: her horns grow sometimes so far backward, as to reach over her buttocks. Crew's Myology.
ROCK-RUBY. n. f. A name given improperly by lapidaries and jewellers to the garnet, when it is of a very strong, but not deep red, and has a fair cast of the blue. Hill on Gems.
Rock-ruby is of a deep red, and the hardest of all the kinds.
Woodward on Gems.
ROCK-SALT. n. f. Mineral salt.
Two pieces of transparent rock-salt; one white, the other
red. Woodward on Gems.
RO'CKER. n. f. [from rock.] One who rocks the cradle.
His fellow, who the narrow bed had kept,
Was weary, and without a rocker slept. Dryden.
RO'CKET. n. f. [rochetto, Italian.] An artificial firework, being a cylindrical case of paper filled with nitre, charcoal, and sulphur, and which mounts in the air to a considerable height, and there bursts.
Every rocket ended in a constellation, frowning the air with a shower of silver fangles. Addison.
When bonfires blaze, your vagrant works shall rise
In rockets, till they reach the wond'ring skies. Garth.
RO'CKET. n. f. A plant.
The flower of the rocket consists of four leaves expanded in form of a cross; the point becomes a pod, divided into two cells by an intermediate partition, to which the valves adhere on both sides: these cells are full of roundish seeds; to which may be added, the whole plant hath a peculiar fetid smell. Miller.
Rocket is one of the fallet furniture. Mortimer's Husbandry.
RO'CKLESS. adj. [from rock.] Being without rocks.
A crystal brook
Is weedless all above, and rockless all below. Dryden.

Such destruction to withstand, he oppos'd the rocky orb
Of tenfold adamant, his ample shield. Milton.
3. Hard; stony; obdurate.
I, like a poor bark, of fails and tackling reft,
Rush all to pieces on thy rocky bottom. Shaksp. Rich. III.
ROD. n. f. [roede, Dutch.]
1. A long twig.
Some chose a hazel rod of the same year's shoot, and this they bind on to another straight stick of any wood, and walking softly over those places, where they suspect the bowels of the earth to be enriched with metals, the wand will, by bowing towards it, discover it. Boyle.
2. A kind of scepter.
Sh' had all the royal makings of a queen;
As holy oil, Edward confessor's crown,
The rod and bird of peace. Shaksp. Henry VIII.
3. Any thing long and slender.
The pastoral reed of Hermes, or his opiate rod. Milton.
Let the fisherman
Increase his tackle, and his rod retie. Gay.
Haste, ye Cyclops, with your forked rods,
T'his rebel love braves all the gods,
And every hour by love is made,
Some heaven-defying Enclade. Granville.
4. An instrument for measuring.
Decempeda was a measuring rod for taking the dimensions of buildings, and signified the same thing as peritica, taken as a measure of length. Arbutnot on Coins.
5. An instrument of correction, made of twigs tied together.
If he be but once so taken idly roguing, he may punish him with stocks; but if he be found again so loitering, he may scourge him with whips or rods. Spenjer on Ireland.
I am whipt and scour'd with rods,
Nettled, and stung with plimies, when I hear Of Bolingbroke. Shaksp. Henry IV.
In this condition the rod of God hath a voice to be heard, and he, whose office it is, ought now to expound to the sick man the particular meaning of the voice. Hammond.
Grant me and my people the benefit of thy chastisements; that thy rod, as well as thy staff, may comfort us. K. Charles.
They trembling learn to throw the fatal dart,
And under rods of rough centurions smart. Dryden.
As soon as that sentence is executed, these rods, these instruments of divine displeasure, are thrown into the fire. Att.
A wit's a feather, and a chief a rod;
An honest man's the noblest work of God. Pope.
RODE. pret. of ride.
He in paternal glory rode. Milton.
RODOMONTADE. n. f. [from a boastful boisterous hero of Ariosto, called Rodomonte; rodomontade, Fr.] An empty noisy bluster or boast; a rant.
He only serves to be sport for his company; for in these gamefome days men will give him hints, which may put him upon his rodomontades. Government of the Tongue.
The libertines of painting have no other model but a rodo-montade genius, and very irregular, which violently hurries them away. Dryden's Dufresny.
He talks extravagantly in his passion, but if I would quote a hundred passages in Ben Jonson's Cethagus, I could shew that the rodomontades of Almanzor are neither so irrational nor impossible, for Cethagus threatens to destroy nature. Dry.
To RODOMONTADE. v. n. [from the noun.] To brag thra-sonically; to boast like Rodomonte.
ROE. n. f. [ra, ra-beon, Saxon.]
1. A species of deer.
He would him make
The roe bucks in flight to overtake. Fairy Queen.
They were as swift as the roes upon the mountains. Chr.
Procure me a Troglodyte footman, who can catch a roe at his full speed? Arbutnot and Pope.
2. The female of the hart.
Thy greyhounds are fleetier than the roe. Shaksp.
Run like a roe or hart upon
The lofty hills of Bitheron. Sandys's Paraphrase.
ROE. n. f. [properly roan or rone; rann, Danish; rogen, German.] The eggs of fish.
Here comes Romeo
Without his roe, like a dried herring. Shaksp.
ROGA'TION. n. f. [rogation, Fr. from rogo, Lat.] Litany;
supplication.
He perfecteth the rogations or litanies before in use, and addeth unto them that which the present necessity required. Hook.
Supplications, with this solemnity for appealing of God's wrath, were of the Greek church termed litanies, and rogations of the Latin. Taylor.
ROGA'TION-WEEK. n. f. The week immediately preceeding Whitunday; thus called from three fasts observed therein, the Monday, Tuesday, and Wednesday, called rogation days, because of the extraordinary prayers and processions then made for the fruits of the earth, or as a preparation for the devotion of holy Thursday. Dist.

ROI

ROGUE. n. f. [of uncertain etymology.]
1. A wandering beggar; a vagrant; a vagabond.
For fear lest we, like rogues, should be reputed,
And for ear-marked beads abroad be bruited. Hubbard.
The sheriff and the marshal may do the more good, and more terrify the idle rogue. Spenjer on Ireland.
The scum of people and wicked condemned men spoileth the plantation; for they will ever live like rogues, and not fall to work, but be lazy and do mischief. Bacon's Essays.
The troops are all scattered, and the commanders very poor rogues. Shaksp. All's well that ends well.
2. A knave; a dishonest fellow; a villain; a thief.
Thou kill'st me like a rogue and a villain. Shaksp.
A rogue upon the highway may have as strong an arm, and take off a man's head as cleverly as the executioner; but then there is a vast disparity, when one action is murder, and the other justice. South.
If he call rogue and rascal from the garret,
He means you no more mischief than a parrot. Dryden.
The rogue and fool by fits is fair and wise,
And ev'n the best, by fits, what they despise. Pope.
3. A name of slight tenderness and endearment.
Oh, what a rogue and pleasant slave am I!
I never knew a woman love man so. Shaksp.
—Alas, poor rogue, I think indeed she loves. Shaksp.
4. A wag.
To ROGUE. v. n. [from the noun.]

To run all countries a wild roguery. Donne.
2. Knavish tricks.
They will afterwards hardly be drawn to their wonted lewd life in thievery and roguery. Spenjer on Ireland.
You rogue, here's lime in this sack too; there is nothing but roguery to be found in villainous man. Shaksp.
Like the devil did tempt and sway 'em
To rogueries, and then betray 'em. Hudibras, p. i.
The kid smelt out the roguery. L'Estrange's Fables.
'Tis no scandal grown,
For debt and roguery to quit the town. Dryden.
The roguery of alchymy,
And we, the bubbled fools,
Spend all our present stock in hopes of golden rules. Swift.
3. Waggery; arch tricks.
RO'GUESHIP. n. f. [from rogue.] The qualities or personage of a rogue.
Say, in what nasty cellar under ground,
Or what church porch, your roguish may be found? Dry.
RO'GUISH. adj. [from rogue.]
1. Vagrant; vagabond.
I thought the persons, by whom it is used, be of better note than the former roguish sort; yet the fault is no less worthy of a marshal. Spenjer.
2. Knavish; fraudulent.
He gets a thousand thumps and kicks,
Yet cannot leave his roguish tricks. Swift's Miscellanies.
3. Waggish; wanton; slightly mischievous.
The most bewitching leer with her eyes, the most roguish cast; her cheeks are dimpled when she smiles, and her smiles would tempt an hermit. Dryden's Spanish Fryar.
I am pleased to see my tenants pass away a whole evening in playing their innocent tricks; our friend Wimble is as merry as any of them, and shews a thousand roguish tricks on these occasions. Addison's Spectator, N° 269.
Timothy used to be playing roguish tricks; when his mistress's back was turned, he would loll out his tongue. Arb.
RO'GUISHLY. adv. [from roguish.] Like a rogue; knavishly;
wantonly.
RO'GUISHNESS. n. f. [from roguish.] The qualities of a rogue.
RO'GUY. adj. [from rogue.] Knavish; wanton. A bad
word.
A shepherd's boy had gotten a roguish trick of crying a wolf, and fooling the country with false alarms. L'Estrange.
To ROISTER. v. n. [of this word the most probable etymology is from roister, Illickick, a violent man.]
To behave turbulently; to act at discretion; to be at free quarter; to bluster.
I have a roisting challenge sent amongst
The dull and factious nobles of the Greeks,
Will strike amazement to their drowsy spirits. Shaksp.
Among a crew of roisting fellows,
He'd fit whole evenings at the alehouse. Swift.
RO'ISTER, or ROISTERER. n. f. [from the verb.] A turbulent, brutal, lawless, blustering fellow.

 2. Blooming, fragrant, purple, as a rose.
 RO'SEN. adj. [from the noun.] crimsoned; flushed.
 Can you blame her, being a maid ret rosed over with the virgin crimson of modesty, if she deny the appearance of a naked blind boy. Shakespeare, Henry V.
 ROSE-MALLOW. n. f. Is in every respect larger than the common mallow; the leaves are rougher, and the plant grows almost shrubby. Miller.
 RO'SEMARY. n. f. [rosmarinus, Lat.] Is a verticillate plant, with a labiated flower, consisting of one leaf, whose upper lip or crest is cut into two parts, and turns up backward with crooked stamina or chives; but the under lip or beard is divided into three parts, the middle segment being hollow like a spoon; out of the two or three-toothed flower-cup rises the pointal, attended, as it were, by four embryos, which afterward turn to so many seeds that are roundish, and are inclosed in the flower-cup. Miller.
 Bedlam beggars, with roaring voices,
 Strike in their numb'd and mortify'd bare arms
 Pins, wooden pricks, nails, sprigs of rosmary;
 And with this horrible object, from low farms,
 Inforce their charity. Shakespeare, King Lear.
 Around their cell
 Set rows of rosmary with flowering stem. Dryden.
Rosmary is small, but a very odoriferous shrub; the principal use of it is to perfume chambers, and in decoctions for washing. Mortimer's Husbandry.
 The neighbours
 Follow'd with willful look the damsel bier, Sprig'd rosmary the lads and ladies bore. Gay.
 ROSE-NOBLE. n. f. An English gold coin, in value anciently sixteen shillings. Dith.
 The succeeding kings coined rose-nobles and double rose- nobles, the great sovereigns with the same inscription, Johannes transiens per medium coram ibat. Camden's Remains.

 The billows from the kindling prow retire,
 Pitch, rosin, tearwood on red wings aspire. Garth.
 2. Any insipidated matter of vegetables that dissolves in spirit.
 Tea contains little of a volatile spirit; its rosin or fixed oil, which is bitter and astringent, cannot be extracted but by rectified spirit. Arbutnot on Aliments.
 To RO'SIN. v. a. [from the noun.] To rub with rosin.
 Bouzebeus who could sweetly sing,
 Or with the rosin d'bow torment the string. Gay.
 RO'SINY. adj. [from rosin.] Resembling rosin. The example should perhaps be rosely. See RO'SSEL.
 The best soil is that upon a sandy gravel or rosiny sand. Temple.
 RO'SSEL. n. f.
 A true rosel or light land, whether white or black, is what they are usually planted in. Mortimer's Husbandry.
 RO'SSELLY. adj. [from rosel.]
 In Essex, moory land is thought to be the most proper:
 that which I have observed to be the best soil is a roselly top,
 and a brick earthy bottom. Mortimer's Husbandry.
 RO'STRATED. adj. [rostratus, Lat.] Adorned with beaks of ships.
 He brought to Italy an hundred and ten rostrated galleies of the fleet of Mithridates. Arbutnot.

 ty, colour, or fragrance.
 When the rosy ring'd morning fair,
 Weary of aged Tithon's sallow bed,
 Had sped her purple robe through dewy air. Fa. Queen.
 A smile that glow'd
 Celestial rosy red, love's proper hue. Milton.
 Fairest blossom! do not slight
 That age, which you may know so soon;
 The rosy morn renews her light,
 And milder glory to the noon. Waller.
 The rosy finger'd morn appears,
 And from her mantle shakes her tears,
 In promise of a glorious day.
 As Thessalian steeds the race adorn,
 So rosy colour'd Helen is the pride
 Of Lacedemon, and of Greece beside. Dryden.
 While blooming youth and gay delight
 Sit on thy rosy cheeks confest,
 Thou hast, my dear, undoubted right
 To triumph o'er this destin'd breast. Prior.
 To ROT. v. n. [rotan, Saxon; rotten, Dutch.] To putrify; to lose the cohesion of its parts.
 A man may rot even here.
 From hour to hour we ripe and ripe,
 And then from hour to hour we rot and rot.
 Being more nearly expost to the air and weather, the bodies of the animals would suddenly corrupt and rot; the bones would likewise all rot in time, except those which were secured by the extraordinary strength of their parts. Woodward.
 To ROT. v. a. To make putrid; to bring to corruption.
 No wood shone that was cut down alive, but such as was rotted in stock and root while it grew. Bacon.

 ROTUND. adj. [rotundus, Fr. rotundus, Lat.] Round; circular; spherical.
 The cross figure of the christian temples is more proper for spacious buildings than the rotund of the heathen; the eye is much better filled at first entering the rotund, but such as are built in the form of a cross gives us a greater variety. Add.

 ROTUNDIFOLIOLUS. adj. [rotundus and folium, Lat.] Having round leaves.
 ROTUNDITY. n. f. [rotunditas, Lat. rotundité, Fr. from rotund.] Roundness; sphericity; circularity.
 Thou all-shaking thunder,
 Strike flat the thick rotundity o' th' world. Shakespeare.
 With the rotundity common to the atoms of all fluids, there is some difference in bulk, else all fluids would be alike in weight.
 Rotundity is an emblem of eternity, that has neither beginning nor end. Addison on Ancient Medals.
 Who would part with these solid blessings, for the little fantastical pleasantness of a smooth convexity and rotundity of a globe. Bentley's Sermons.
 ROTUNDO. n. f. [rotundo, Italian.] A building formed round both in the inside and outside; such as the pantheon at Rome. Trev.
 To ROVE. v. n. [röfver, Danish, to range for plunder.] To ramble; to range; to wander.
 Thou't years upon thee, and thou art too full
 Of the wars furcits, to go rove with one That's yet unbruised. Shakespeare. Coriolanus.
 Faultless thou dropt from his unerring skill,
 With the bare power to sin, since free of will;
 Yet charge not with thy guilt his bounteous love,
 For who has power to walk, has power to rove. Arbuth.
 If we indulge the frequent rife and roving of passions, we thereby procure an unattentive habit. Watts.
 I view'd th' effects of that disastrous flame,
 Which kindled by th' imperious queen of love,
 Constrain'd me from my native realm to rove. Pope.
 To ROVE. v. a. To wander over.
 Roving the field, I chanc'd
 A goodly tree far distant to behold, Laden with fruit of fairest colours. Milton's Par. Lost.
 Cloacina as the town the rove'd,
 A mortal scavenger the saw, the lov'd. Gay.
 ROVER. n. f. [from rove.]
 1. A wanderer; a ranger.
 2. A fickle inconstant man.
 3. A robber; a pirate.
 This is the case of rovers by land, as some cantons in Arabia. Bacon's Holy War.
 4. At ROVERS. Without any particular aim.
 Nature shoots not at rovers: even inanimates, though they know not their perfection, yet are they not carried on by a blind unguided impetus; but that, which directs them, knows it. Glanvill's Scen.
 Providence never shoots at rovers: there is an arrow that flies by night as well as by day, and God is the person that shoots it. South's Sermon.
 Men of great reading show their talents on the meanest subjects; this is a kind of shooting at rovers. Addison.
 ROUGE. n. f. [rouge, Fr.] Red paint.

 Nor bodily, nor ghostly negro could Roughcast thy figure in a fadder mould. Cleaveland.
 2. To form any thing in its first rudiments.
 In merriment they were first practised, and this roughcast unhewn poetry was instead of stage plays for one hundred and twenty years. Dryden's Dedication to Juvenal.
 ROUGHCAST. n. f. [rough and cast.]
 1. A rude model; a form in its rudiments.
 The whole piece seems rather a loose model and roughcast of what I design to do, than a compleat work. Digby.
 2. A kind of plaster mixed with pebbles, or by some other cause very uneven on the surface.
 Some man must present a wall; and let him have some plaster, lome, or roughcast about him to signify wall. Shakespeare.
 ROUGH-DRAUGHT. n. f. [rough and draught.] A draught in its rudiments.
 My elder brothers came Rough-draughts of nature, ill design'd and lame,
 Blown off, like blossoms, never made to bear;
 Till I came finish'd, her last labour'd care. Dryden.
 To ROUGH-DRAW. v. a. [rough and draw.] To trace coarsely.
 His victories we scarce could keep in view,
 Or polish 'em to fast, as he rough-draw. Dryden.
 To ROUGHEN. v. a. [from rough.] To make rough.
 Such difference there is in tongues, that the same figure, which roughens one, gives majesty to another; and that was it which Virgil studied in his verses. Dryden's Ded. to Æneis.
 Ah! where must needy poet seek for aid,
 When dust and rain at once his coat invade!
 His only coat; when dust confus'd with rain,
 Roughens the nap, and leaves a mingled stain. Swift.
 To ROUGHEN. u. n. To grow rough.
 The broken landkip
 Ascending roughens into rigid hills. Thomson's Spring.
 To ROUGHEN. v. a. [rough and hew.] To give to any thing the first appearance of form.
 There's a divinity that shapes our ends,
 Rough-hew them how we will. Shakespeare. Hamlet.
 The whole world, without art and dress,
 Would be but one great wilderness,
 And mankind but a savage herd,
 For all that nature has conferr'd:
 This does but rough-hew and design,
 Leaves art to polish and refine. Hudibras, p. iii.
 ROUGHEN. particp. adj.
 1. Rugged; unpolished; uncivil; unrefined.
 A rough-hewn seaman, being brought before a justice for some misdemeanour, was by him ordered away to prison; and would not stir; saying, it was better to stand where he was, than go to a worse place. Bacon's Apophthegms.
 2. Not yet nicely finish'd.
 I hope to obtain a candid construction of this rough-hewn ill-timber'd discourse. Howell's Vocal Forest.
 ROUGHLY. adv. [from rough.]
 1. With uneven surface; with asperities on the surface.
 2. Harshly; uncivilly; rudely.
 Ne Mammon would there let him long remain,
 For terror of the torments manifold,
 In which the damned souls he did behold,
 But roughly him bespake. Fairy Queen, b. ii.
 Rebuk'd, and roughly sent to prison,
 Th' immediate heir of England! was this easy? Shakespeare.

 The little roughnesses or other inequalities of the leather against the cavity of the cylinder, now and then put a stop to the descent or ascent of the sucker. Boyle.
 While the steep horrid roughness of the wood Strives with the gentle canals of the flood.
 When the diamond is not only found, but the roughness smoothed, cut into a form, and set in gold, then we cannot but acknowledge, that it is the perfect work of art and nature. Denham.
 Such a persuation as this well fixed, will smooth all the roughness of the way that leads to happiness, and render all the conflicts with our lusts pleasing. Atterbury.

ROU

2. Austere to the taste.
 Divers plants contain a grateful sharpness, as lemons; or an austere and concocted roughness, as sloes. Brown.
 3. Taste of aspergency.
 A tobacco-pipe broke in my mouth, and the spitting out the pieces left such a delicious roughness on my tongue, that I champed up the remaining part. Spectator.
 4. Harshness to the ear.
 In the roughness of the numbers and cadences of this play, which was so designed, you will see somewhat more masterly than in any of my former tragedies. Dryden.
 The Swedes, Danes, Germans, and Dutch attain to the pronunciation of our words with ease, because our syllables resemble theirs in roughness and frequency of consonants. Sw.
 5. Ruggedness of temper; coarseness of manners; tendency to rudeness; coarseness of behaviour and address.
 Roughness is a needless cause of discontent; severity breedeth fear; but roughness breedeth hate: even reproofs from authority ought to be grave and not taunting. Bacon.
 When our minds eyes are disengag'd,
 They quicken sloth, perplexities untie,
 Make roughness smooth, and hardness mollify. Denham.
 Roughness of temper is apt to discountenance the timorous or modest. Addison.
 6. Absence of delicacy.
 Should feasting and balls once get among the cantons, their military roughness would be quickly lost, their tempers would grow too soft for their climate. Addison.

 5. Not broken.
 Pliny put a round number near the truth, rather than a fraction. Arbuthnot on Coins.
 6. Large; not inconsiderable.
 Three thousand ducats! 'tis a good round sum. Shakespeare.
 They set a round price upon your head. Addison.
 It is not easy to foresee what a round sum of money may do among a people, who have tamely suffered the Franche comté to be seized on. Addison's Remarks on Italy.
 She called for a round sum out of the privy purse. Hooke.
 7. Plain; clear; fair; candid; open.
 Round dealing is the honour of man's nature; and a mixture of falsehood is like alloy in gold and silver, which may make the metal work the better, but it embaleth it. Bacon.
 8. Quick; brisk.
 Painting is a long pilgrimage; if we do not actually begin the journey, and travel at a round rate, we shall never arrive at the end of it. Dryden's Dufresnoy.
 Sir Roger heard them upon a round trot; and after pausing, told them, that much might be said on both sides. Addison.
 9. Plain; free without delicacy or reserve; almost rough.
 Let his queen mother all alone intreat him,
 To shew his griefs; let her be round with him. Shakespeare.
 The kings interposed in a round and princely manner; not only by way of request and persuasion, but also by way of protestation and menace. Bacon.
 ROUND. n. f.
 1. A circle; a sphere; an orb.
 Hee thee hither,
 That I may pour my spirits in thine ear,
 And chastise with the valour of my tongue
 All that impedes thee from the golden round, Which fate and metaphisick aid doth seem To have crown'd thee withal. Shakespeare. Macbeth.

ROU

I'll charm the air to give a sound,
While you perform your antic round. Shakefp. Macbeth.
Three or four we'll dress like urchins,
With rounds of waxen tapers on their heads,
And rattles in their hands. Shakefp. Mer. Wives of Windsor.
What is this,
That rises like the issue of a king,
And wears upon his baby brow the round
And top of sovereignty? Shakefp. Macbeth.
Hirsute roots are a middle fort, between the bulbous and fibrous; that, besides the putting forth sap upwards and downwards, putteth forth in round. Bacon.
What if the fun
Be centre to the world; and other stars,
By his attractive virtue and their own
Incited, dance about him various rounds.
Knit your hands, and beat the ground
In a light fantastick round. Milton.
He did foretell and prophecy of him,
Who to his realms that azure round hath join'd. Denham.
They meet, they wheel, they throw their darts afar;
Then in a round the mingled bodies run,
Flying they follow, and pursuing shun.
How shall I then begin, or where conclude,
To draw a fame so truly circular?
For, in a round, what order can be shew'd,
Where all the parts so equal perfect are?
The mouth of Veluvio has four hundred yards in diameter; for it seems a perfect round. Addison.
This image on the medal plac'd,
With its bright round of titles grac'd,
And stamp on British coins shall live. Addison.
2. Rundle; step of a ladder.
When he once attains the utmost round,
He then unto the ladder turns his back,
Looks in the clouds, scorning the base degrees
By which he did ascend. Shakefp. Julius Caesar.
Many are kick'd down ere they have climbed the two or three first rounds of the ladder. Government of the Tongue.
All the rounds like Jacob's ladder rise;
The lowest hid in earth, the topmost in the skies. Dryden.
This is the last stage of human perfection, the utmost round of the ladder whereby we ascend to heaven. Norris.
3. The time in which any thing has passed through all hands, and comes back to the first: hence applied to a carousal.
A gentle round fill'd to the brink,
To this and t'other friend I drink. Suckling.
Women to cards may be compar'd; we play
A round or two, when us'd, we throw away. Granville.
The feast was serv'd; the bowl was crown'd;
To the king's pleasure went the mirthful round. Prior.
4. A revolution; a course ending at the point where it began.
We, that are of purer fire,
Imitate the starry quire,
Who, in their mighty watchful spheres,
Lead in swift rounds the months and years. Milton.
If nothing will please people, unless they be greater than nature intended, what can they expect, but the aid's round of vexatious changes. L'Estrange.
How then to drag a wretched life beneath
An endless round of still returning woes,
And all the gnawing pangs of vain remorse?
What torment's this? Smith.
Till by one countless sum of woes oppress'd,
Hoary with cares, and ignorant of rest,
We find the vital springs relax'd and worn;
Compell'd our common impotence to mourn,
Thus through the round of age, to childhood we return. Prior.
5. [Ronde, Fr.] A walk performed by a guard or officer, to survey a certain district.
ROUND, adv.
1. Every way; on all sides.
The terror of God was upon the cities round about. Gen.
All sounds whatsoever move round; that is, on all sides, upwards, downwards, forwards, and backwards. Bacon.
In darkness and with dangers compass'd round. Milton.
2. [En rond, à la ronde, Fr.] In a revolution.
At the best 'tis but cunning; and if he can in his own fancy raise that to the opinion of true wisdom, he comes round to practise his deceits upon himself. Gov. of the Tong.
Some preachers, prepared only upon two or three points, run the same round from one end of the year to another. Add.
3. Circularly.
One foot he center'd, and the other turn'd Round through the vast profundity obscure. Milton.
4. Not in a direct line.
If merely to come in, Sir, they go out;
The way they take is strangely round about. Pope.
ROUND, prep.
1. On every side of.
To officiate light round this opacous earth. Milton.

ROU

2. About; circularly about.

help the barrenness, which translators, overlooking in themselves, have apprehended in our tongue. Pelton.
ROUNDEL, n. f.
ROUNDELAY, n. f.
1. [Rondelet, French.] A kind of ancient poetry, which commonly consists of thirteen verses, of which eight are of one kind of rhyme and five of another: it is divided into three couplets; and at the end of the second and third, the beginning of the roundel is repeated in an equivocal sense, if possible.
Siker, like a roundel never heard I none,
Little lacketh Perigot of the best,
And Willie is not greatly over-gone,
So wren his under-songs well addrest. Spenser's Poet.
To hear thy rimes and roundelay,
Which thou wert wont in wastful hills to sing,
I more delight than lark in summer days,
Whole echo made the neighb'ring groves to ring. Spenser.

ROU

Come now a roundel and a fairy song. Shakefp.
They list'ning heard him, while he search'd the grove,
And loudly sung his roundelay of love,
But on the sudden stop'd. Dryden's Knight's Tale.

ROUT, n. f. [rot, Dutch.]
1. A clamorous multitude; a rabble; a tumultuous croud.
Besides the endless routs of wretched thralls,
Which thither were assembled day by day
From all the world. Fairy Queen, b. i.
A rout of people there assembled were,
Of every sort and nation under sky,
Which with great uproar preatd to draw near
To th' upper part. Spenser.
If that rebellion
Came like itself in base and abject routs,
Led on by bloody youth, goaded with rage,
And countenanced by boys and beggary,
You, reverend father, then had not been there. Shakefp.
Farmers were to forfeit their holds in case of unlawful retainer, or partaking in routs and unlawful assemblies. Bacon.
Such a tacit league is against such routs and shovels, as have utterly degenerated from the laws of nature. Bacon.
Nor do I name of men the common rout,
That wandering loose about,
Grow up and perish, as the summer fly. Milton's Agonistes.
The mad ungovernable rout,
Full of confusion and the fumes of wine,
Lov'd such variety and antic tricks. Roscommon.

RUB. n. f. [from the verb.]
1. Collision; hindrance; obstruction.
The breath of what I mean to speak
Shall blow each dust, each straw, each little rub
Out of the path, which shall directly lead Thy foot to England's throne. Shakespeare, King John.
Now every rub is smoothed in our way. Shakespeare.
Those you make friends,
And give your hearts to, when they once perceive
The least rub in your fortunes, fall away. Shakespeare.
Upon this rub, the English ambassadors thought fit to de-mur, and sent to receive directions. Hayward.
He expounds the giddy wonder
Of my weary steps, and under Spreads a path clear as the day,
Where no churlish rub says nay.
He that once sins, like him that slides on ice,
Goes swiftly down the slippery ways of vice;
Though conscience checks him, yet those rubs gone o'er,
He slides on smoothly, and looks back no more. Dryden.
An hereditary right is to be preferred before election; because the government is so disposed, that it almost executes itself: and upon the death of a prince, the administration goes on without any rub or interruption. Swift.

RUF

3. The first, inaccurate, unhapen beginning or original of any thing.
Moss is but the rudiment of a plant, and the mould of earth of bark. Bacon's Natural History.
The rudiments of nature are very unlike the grosser appearances. Glanvill's Sear.
So looks our monarch on this early fight,
Th' essay and rudiments of great success, Dryden.
Which all-maturing time must bring to light.
Shall that man pretend to religious attainments, who is defective and short in moral? which are but the rudiments, the beginnings, and first draught of religion; as religion is the perfection, refinement, and sublimation of morality. South.
God beholds the first imperfect rudiments of virtue in the foul, and keeps a watchful eye over it, till it has received every grace it is capable of. Addison's Spectator.
The happy boughs
Attire themselves with blooms, sweet rudiments
Of future harvest. Philips.
- RU'DIMENTAL. adj. [from rudiment.] Initial; relating to my shop, where you often practised for hours. Spectator.

- RU'E. v. a. [reoprian, Saxon.] To grieve for; to regret;
to lament.
Thou temptest me in vain;
To tempt the thing which daily yet I rue,
And the old cause of my continued pain,
With like attempts to like end to renew. Fairy Queen.
You'll rue the time,
That clogs me with this answer. Shakep.
France, thou shalt rue this treason with thy tears,
If Talbot but survive. Shakep. Henry VI.
There are two councils held;
And that may be determin'd at the one,
Which may make you and him to rue at th' other. Shak.
Oh! treacherous was that breath, to whom you Did trust our counsels, and we both may rue, Having his falshood found too late, 'twas he
That made me cast you guilty, and you me. Dennis.
I rue
That error now, which is become my crime.
Against this, thy will Chose freely what it now so justly rues. Milton.
- RU'E. n. f. [rue, Fr. ruta, Lat.] An herb called, herb of grace, because holy water was sprinkled with it.
The flower of rue for the most part consists of four hollow leaves, which are placed orbicularly, and expand in form of a rose; out of whose flower-cup rises the pointal, which afterward becomes a roundish fruit, which is generally four cornered, and composed of four cells fixed to an hard shell of small angular seeds.
What favor is better,
For places infected, than wormwood and rue. Tasso.
Here did the drop a tear; here, in this place,
I'll set a bank of rue, four herb of grace;
Rue, even for Ruth, here shortly shall be seen,
In the remembrance of a weeping queen. Shakep. Rich. II.
The weasel, to encounter the serpent, arms herself with eating of rue. More's Antidote against Atheism.

the neck. See RUFFLE.
You a captain; for what? for tearing a whore's ruff in a bawdy house? Shakep. Henry IV. p. 1.
We'll revel it,
With ruffs, and cuffs, and fardingals. Shakep.
Like an uproar in the town,
Before them every thing went down, Dryden.
Some tore a ruff, and some a gown,
Sooner may a gulling weather t'p, Dryden.
By drawing forth heav'n's scheme tell certainly,
What fashion'd hats, or ruffs, or suits next years,
Our giddy-headed antick youth will wear. Dennis.
The ladies freed the neck from those yokes, those linen ruffs in which the simplicity of their grandmothers had en-clothed it. Addison's Guardian, 1710.

1. I rear'd this flow'r,
Soft on the paper ruff its leaves I spread. Pope.
2. [From rough scales.] A small river fish.
A ruff or pope is much like the pear for shape, and taken to be better, but will not grow bigger than a gudgeon:
he is an excellent fish and of a pleasant taste. Walton.
3. A state of roughness. Obsolete.
As fields set all their bristles up; in such a ruff wert thou. Chapman's Iliads.
4. New state. This seems to be the meaning of this cant
word.
How many princes that, in the ruff of all their glory, have been taken down from the head of a conquering army to the wheel of the victor's chariot. L'Estrange.
- RU'FFIAN. n. f. [ruffiano, Italian; ruffian, Fr. a bawd; ruffeur, Danish, to pillage; perhaps it may be best derived from rough.] A brutal, boisterous, mischievous fellow; a cut-throat; a robber; a murderer.
Ruffian, let go that rude uncivil touch,
Thou friend of an ill fashion! Shakep. Two Gent. of Ver.
Have you a ruffian that will swear? drink? dance?
Revel the night? rob? murder? Shakep. Henry IV.
Sir Ralph Vane's bold answers termed rude and ruffian like, falling into years apt to take offence, furthered his condemnation. Hoyward.
The boasted ancestors of these great men,
Whose virtues you admire, were all such ruffians,
This dread of nations, this almighty Rome,
That comprehends in her wide empire's bounds
All under heaven, was founded on a rape. Addison's Cato.
- RU'FFIAN. adj. Brutal; savagely boisterous.
Experience'd age
May timely intercept the ruffian rage, Convene the tribes. Pope's Odyssey.
- TO RU'FFIAN. v. n. [from the noun.] To rage; to raise tumults; to play the ruffian. Not in use.
A fuller blast ne'er shook our battlements;
If it hath ruffian'd to foam the sea,
What ribs of oak, when mountains melt on them,
Can hold the mortise. Shakep. Othello.
- TO RU'FFLE. v. a. [ruffelen, Dutch, to wrinkle.]
1. To disorder; to put out of form; to make less smooth.
Naughty lady,
These hairs, which thou dost ravish from my chin,
Will quicken and accuse thee; I'm your host;
With robbers hands, my hospitable favour
You should not ruffle thus. Shakep. King Lear.
In changeable taffeties, differing colours emerge and vanish upon the ruffling of the same piece of silk. Boyle.
As you come here to ruffle vizard punk;
When sober rail, and roar when you are drunk. Dryden.
As the first began to rise,
She smooth'd the ruffled seas, and clear'd the skies. Dryden.
Bear me, some god! oh quickly bear me hence
To wholesome solitude, the nurse of sense;
Where contemplation prunes her ruffled wings,
And the free soul looks down to pity kings.
2. To discompose; to disturb; to put out of temper.
Were I Brutus,
And Brutus, Antony, there were an Antony
Would ruffle up your spirits, and put a tongue
In every wound of Cæsar, that should move
The stones of Rome to rise and mutiny.
We are transported by passions, and our minds ruffled by the disorders of the body; nor yet can we tell, how the soul should be affected by such kind of agitations. Glanvill.
3. To put out of order; to surpise.
The knight found out
Th' advantage of the ground, where best
He might the ruff'd foe infect. Hudibras, p. i.
4. To throw disorderly together.
Within a thicket I repos'd, when round
I ruff'd up fall'n leaves in heap, and found, Let fall from heaven, a sleep interminate. Chapman.

on himself. Deay of Piety.
RULE. n. f. [regula, Lat.]
1. Government; empire; sway; supreme command.
I am asham'd, that women
Should seek for rule, supremacy, or sway,
When they are bound to serve, love, and obey. Shakefp.
May he live
Ever belov'd, and loving may his rule be!
A wife servant shall have rule over a son that cauleth shame. Proverbs xvii. 2.
There being no law of nature nor positive law of God, that determines which is the positive heir, the right of succession; and consequently of bearing rule, could not have been determined. Locke.
This makes them apprehensive of every tendency, to endanger that form of rule established by the law of their country. Addison's Freeholder, N° 52.
Instruct me whence this uproar;
And wherefore Vanoe, the sworn friend to Rome,
Should spurn against our rule, and stir
The tributary provinces to war. A. Phillips's Briton.

RUM

falling before the queen of the faeries, desired that he might have the achievement of any adventure, which, during the feast, might happen; that being granted, he rested him on the floor, unfit for a better place by his rusticity. Spenser.
The sweetness and rusticity of a pastoral cannot be so well express'd in any other tongue as in the Greek, when rightly mixt with the Dorick dialect. Addison.
This so general expanse of their time would curtail the ordinary means of knowledge, as 'twould shorten the opportunities of vice; and so accordingly an universal rusticity presently took place, and stopped not till it had over-run the whole flock of mankind. Woodward's Natural History.

after immoderate venery, and about the end of their rut. Bre.
2. [Route, Fr.] The track of a cart wheel.
RUTH. n.f. [from rue.] Mercy; pity; tenderness; sorrow for the misery of another.

The Britons, by Maximilian laid way
With wretched miseries and woful ruth,
Were to those Pagans made an open prey. Fa. Queen.
All ruth, compassion, mercy he forgot.
She fair, he full of bashfulness and truth.

Lov'd much, hop'd little, and desired nought;
He durst not speak, by suit to purchase ruth. Fairfax.
The better part with Mary and with Ruth Chosen thou hast; and they that overween,
And at thy growing virtues fret their spleen,
No anger find in thee, but pity and ruth. Milton.

Ru'thful. adj. [ruth and full.] Ruthful; woful; sorrowful.
The inhabitants seldom take a ruthful and reaving experience of those harms, which infectious diseases carry with them. Carew's Survey of Cornwall.

wheat. Arbutnot on Aliments.

2. A disease in a hawk.
RYE GRASS. n.f. A kind of strong grass.
Some few rye-grass with the corn at Michaelmas. Mortimer.

SAB

S, Has in English the same hissing sound as in other languages, and unhappily prevails in so many of our words that it produces in the ear of a foreigner a continued sibilant.

In the beginning of words it has invariably its natural and genuine sound: in the middle it is sometimes uttered with a stronger appulse of the tongue to the palate, like z; as rose, rejecte, rejs, offer, nash, resident, buy, business. It sometimes keeps its natural sound; as lose, designation; for which I know not whether any rules can be given.

In the end of monosyllables it is sometimes s, as in this;
and sometimes z, as in as, has; and generally where s stands in verbs for ch, as gives. It seems to be established as a rule, that no noun singular should end with s single: therefore in words written with diphthongs, and naturally long, an e is nevertheless added at the end, as goose, house; and where the syllable is short the s is doubled, and was once ss, as ass, anciently asse, wilderness, anciently wildernesse, distress, anciently distresse.

SABA'OTH. n.f. [An Hebrew word signifying rest; sabbat, SA'BATH. n.f. [French; sabbatum, Latin.]

1. A day appointed by God among the Jews, and from them established among Christians for public worship; the seventh day set apart from works of labour to be employed in piety.
Holy Lord God of sabbath. Common Prayer.

I purpose,
And by our holy sabbath have I sworn,
To have the due and forfeit of my bond. Shakepeare.

Glad we return'd up to the coasts of light,
Ere sabbath ev'ning. Milton.

Here ev'ry day was sabbath: only free
From hours of pray'r, for hours of charity,
Such as the Jews from servile toil releas'd,
Where works of mercy were a part of rest:

Such as blest angels exercise above,
Vary'd with sacred hymns and acts of love;
Such sabbaths as that one the now enjoys,
Ev'n that perpetual one, which she employs:
For such vicissitudes in heav'n there are,
In praise alternate, and alternate pray'r. Dryden.

2. Intermission of pain or sorrow; time of rest.
Never any sabbath of release
Could free his travels and afflictions deep. Daniel's C. War.

Nor can his blessed soul look down from heav'n,
Or break th' eternal sabbath of his rest,
To see her miseries on earth. Dryden.

S A G

It hath a flower consisting of one leaf, which is shaped like a lily, fitfulous underneath, the tube widening into six segments, and resting on the footstalk: the point rises out of the bottom of the flower, and is divided into three-headed or crested capillaments; but the empalement afterwards turns to an oblong triangular fruit, divided into three cells, full of roundish seeds. It hath a tuberose root, and long nervous grassy leaves, with a longitudinal furrow through the middle of each. There are Spring-flowering crocuses, and those which flower in Autumn. Their seeds are ripe about the later end of April: the time of planting is in July. About the beginning of September they begin to spire, and sometime after appear the saffron flowers, which are gathered as well before as after they are full-blown; and the most proper time for this is early in the morning: the chives being all picked out of the flowers, the next labour about them is to dry them on the kiln: at first they give it a pretty strong heat. The charges and profits attending the culture of saffron, have been computed in the following manner: the rent of an acre of ground, and the expence of manuring it, is reckoned at twenty-three pounds: the value of twenty-six pounds of saffron, the computed produce of an acre in three years, is, at a mean, supposed to be thirty-nine pounds; and consequently the neat profits of an acre of ground, producing saffron, will in three years amount to sixteen pounds. Miller.

Grind your bole and chalk, and five or six shives of saffron. Peascham.

SA'FFRON. n. f. [carthamus, Latin.] A plant.
This plant agrees with the thistle in most of its characters; but the seeds of it are always destitute of down. It is very much cultivated in Germany for the dyes use, and is brought from thence into England. As it grows it spreads into many branches, each producing a flower at the top of the shoot, which, when fully blown, is cut or pulled off, and dried, and it is the part the dyes use. Miller.

SA'FFRON. adj. Yellow; having the colour of saffron.
Are these your customers?
Did this companion, with the saffron face,
Revel and feast it at my house to-day,
Whilst upon me the guilty doors were shut? Shaksp. Henry V.

Soon as the white and red mixt finger'd dame
Had guilt the mountains with her saffron flame,
I sent my men to Circe's house. Chapman's Odyssey.

Now when the rosy morn began to rise,
And wad'd her saffron streamer through the skies. Dryden.

To SAG. v. n. To hang heavy.
The mind I say by, and the heart I bear,
Shall never sag with doubt, nor shake with fear. Shaksp.

To SAG. v. a. To load; to burthen.

SAGA'CIOUS. adj. [sagax, Latin.]

1. Quick of scent.
So scented the grim feature, and up-turn'd
His nostrils wide into the murky air;
Sagacious of his quarry from so far. Milton's Paradise Lost.

With might and main they chas'd the murderous fox,
Nor wanted horns to inspire sagacious hounds. Dryden.

2. Quick of thought; acute in making discoveries.
Only sagacious heads light on these observations, and reduce them into general propositions. Locke.

SAGA'CIOUSLY. adv. [from sagacious.]

1. With quick scent.

2. With acuteness of penetration.

SAGA'CIOUSNESS. n. f. [from sagacious.] The quality of being sagacious.

SAGA'CITY. n. f. [sagaciti, French; sagacitas, Latin.]

1. Quickness of scent.

2. Acuteness of discovery.
It requires too great a sagacity for vulgar minds to draw the line nicely between virtue and vice. South.

Sagacity finds out the intermediate ideas, to discover what connection there is in each link of the chain, whereby the extremes are held together. Locke.

Many were eminent in former ages for their discovery of it; but though the knowledge they have left be worth our study, yet they left a great deal for the industry and sagacity of after-ages. Locke.

SA'GAMORE. n. f.

1. [Among the American Indians.] A king or supreme ruler. Bailly.

2. The juice of some unknown plant used in medicine.

SAGE. n. f. [sage, French; savia, Latin.] A plant of which the school of Salernum thought so highly, that they left this verse:
Cur moriatur homo cui salvia crescit in horto.

It hath a labiated flower, consisting of one leaf, whose upper lip is sometimes arched, and sometimes hooked; but the under lip or beard is divided into three parts, bunching out, and not hollowed at the clare: out of the flower-cup rises the pointal, attended, as it were, by four embryos, which afterward become so many seeds, which are roundish, shut up in an husk, which before was the flower-cup: to which may be added, that the stamina do somewhat resemble the os hyoides.
Miller.

SAIL. n. f. [regl, Saxon; seyhel, fyll, Dutch.]

1. The expanded sheet which catches the wind, and carries on the vessel on the water.

He came too late; the ship was under sail. Shaksp. Henry V.

They loosed the rudder-bands, and hoisted up the main sail to the wind. Acts xxvii. 40.

The galley born from view by rising gales,
She follow'd with her light and flying sails. Dryden.

2. [In poetry.] Wings.
He cutting way
With his broad sails, about him foared round;
At last, low stooping with unwieldy sway, Snatch'd up both horse and man. Fairy Queen.

3. A ship; a vessel.
A sail arriv'd
From Pompey's son, who through the realms of Spain Calls out for vengeance on his father's death. Addis. Cato.

4. Sail is a collective word, noting the number of ships.
So by a roaring tempest on the flood,
A whole armada of collected sail
Is scatter'd. Shaksp. Henry V.

It is written of Edgar, that he increased the fleet he found two thousand six hundred sail. Raleigh's Essays.

A feigned tear destroys us, against whom Tydides nor Achilles could prevail,
Nor ten years conflict, nor a thousand sail. Denham.

He had promised to his army, who were discouraged at the fight of Seleucus's fleet, consisting of an hundred sail, that at the end of the Summer they should see a fleet of his of five hundred sail. Arbutnot on Coins.

5. To strike SAIL. To lower the sail.
Fearing lest they should fall into the quicksands, they strike sails, and so were driven. Acts xxvii. 17.

6. A proverbial phrase for abating of pomp or superiority.
Margaret
Must strike her sail, and learn a while to serve Where kings command. Shaksp. Henry VI.

To SAIL. v. n. [from the noun.]

I shall not mention any thing of the sailing waggons. Mort.

2. To pass by sea.
When sailing was now dangerous, Paul admonished them. Acts.

3. To swim.
To which the stores of Cereus, in the scale,
Would look like little dolphins, when they sail
In the vast shadow of the British whale. Dryden.

4. To pass smoothly along.
Speak again, bright angel! for thou art
As glorious to this sight, being o'er my head,

S A I

As is a winged messenger from heav'n,
When he bestrides the lazy pacing clouds,
And sails upon the bosom of the air. Shak. Rom. and Jul.

To SAIL. v. a.

1. To pass by means of sails.
A thousand ships were mann'd to sail the sea. Dryden.

View Alcinous' groves, from whence Sailing the spaces of the boundless deep;
To Ariconium precious fruits arriv'd. Phillips.

2. To fly through.

Sublime the sails
Th' aerial space, and mounts the winged gales. Pope.

SAILER. n. f. [sailor is more usual, sailer more analogical; SAILOR. } from sail.] A seaman; one who practises or understands navigation.

They had many times men of other countries that were no sailors. Bacon.

Batter'd by his lee they lay;
The passing winds through their torn carivas play,
And flagging sails on heartless sailors fall. Dryden.

Young Pompey built a fleet of large ships, and had good sailors, commanded by experienced captains. Arbutnot.

Full in the openings of the spacious main
It rides, and, lo, descends the sailer train. Pope's Odyssey.

SAILYARD. n. f. [sail and yard.] The pole on which the sail is extended.

With glance to swift the subtle lightning pass,
As split the sailyard. Dryden's Juvenal.

SAIM. n. f. [jaine, Italian.] Lard. It still denotes this in Scotland: as swine's saim.

SAIN. Some obscure precedence, that hath tofore been sain. Shak.

SA'INFOIN. n. f. [sainfoin, Fr.] A kind of herb.

SAINT. n. f. [saint, French; sanctus, Latin.] A person eminent for piety and virtue.

To thee be worship and thy saints for aye. Shaksp.

She will not stay the siege of loving terms,
Nor ope her lap to saint seducing gold. Shaksp. Henry V.

Then thus I cloath my naked villainy
With odd ends, stol'n forth of holy writ,
And seem a saint, when most I play the devil. Shaksp. Henry V.

Miracles are required of all who aspire to this dignity, because they say an hypocrite may imitate a saint in all other particulars. Addis on Italy.

By thy example kings are taught to sway,
Heroes to fight, and saints may learn to pray. Granville.

So unaffected, so compos'd a mind;
So firm, yet soft, so strong, yet so refin'd,
Heav'n, as its purest gold, by tortures try'd;
The saint sustain'd it, but the woman dy'd. Pope.

To SAINT. v. a. [from the noun.] To number among saints;
to reckon among saints by a publick decree; to canonize.

Are not the principles of those wretches still owned, and their persons sainted, by a race of men of the same stamp? South.

Over against the church stands a large hospital, erected by a shoemaker, who has been beatified, though never sainted. Add.

Thy place is here, sad sister; come away:
Once, like thyself, I trembled, wept, and pray'd;
Love's victim then, though now a sainted maid. Pope.

To SAINT. v. n. To act with a shew of piety.
Whether the charmer sinner it, or saint it,
If folly grows romantick, I must paint it. Pope.

SAINTED. adj. [from saint.]

1. Holy; pious; virtuous.
Thy royal father
Was a most sainted king: the queen that bore thee,
Often upon her knees than on her feet,
Died every day she liv'd. Shaksp. Macbeth.

2. Holy; sacred.
I hold you as a thing enskied and sainted,
By your renouncement an immortal spirit,
And to be talk'd with in sincerity
As with a saint. Shaksp. Henry V.

The crown virtue gives,
After this mortal change, to her true servants,
Amongst the enthron'd gods on sainted hills. Milton.

SAINT John's Wort. n. f. A plant.
This plant hath a fibrose root: the leaves grow opposite by pairs at the joints of the stalks: the flower-cup consists of one leaf, which is divided into five parts, and expanded: the flower consists of five leaves expanded like a rose, having many filamina in the centre surrounding a conical ovary, which becomes a three-cornered pointed fruit, and is divided into three cells, containing many small seeds. There are thirty species of this plant, of which the four first sorts grow wild, and the rest are exotics. The first sort, called common Saint John's wort, is used in medicine. Miller.

SAINTLIKE. adj. [saint and like.]

1. Suited a saint; becoming a saint.
If still thou dost retain
The same ill habits, the same follies too,
Glo'd over only with a saintlike show,
Still thou art bound to vice. Dryden's Pers.

2. Resembling.

SAL

2. Resembling a faint.

The king, in whose time it passed, whom catholicks count a faintlike and immaculate prince, was taken away in the flower of his age. Bacon.
SAINTLY. adj. [from saint.] Like a faint; becoming a faint.

I mention still

Him whom thy wrongs, with faintly patience borne,
Made famous in a land and times obscure. Mit. Par. Loff.
SAINTSHIP. n. f. [from saint.] The character or qualities of a faint.

He that thinks his faintship licenses him to censure, is to be looked on not only as a rebel, but an usurper. Decay of Piety.
This favours something ranker than the tenets of the fifth monarchy, and of sovereignty founded upon faintship. South.
The devil was piqu'd such faintship to behold,

And long'd to tempt him. Pope.
SAKE. n. f. [rac, Saxon; sacke, Dutch.]
1. Final cause; end; purpose.

Thou neither do't persuade me to seek wealth
For empire's sake, nor empire to affect For glory's sake. Milton's Paradise Lost.
The prophane person serves the devil for nought, and fins only for his sake. Tillotson.

Wyndham like a tyrant throws the dart,
And takes a cruel pleasure in the smart;
Proud of the rage that her beauties make,
Delights in wounds, and kills for killing's sake. Granville.

2. Account; regard to any person or thing.
Would I were young for your sake, mistress Anne! Shakefp.
The general so likes your mulick, that he desires you, for love's sake, to make no more noise with it. Shakefp. Othello.

SAKER. n. f. [Saker originally signifies an hawk, the pieces of artillery being often denominated from birds of prey.]
The cannon, blunderbuss, and saker,

He was th' inventor of, and maker. Hudibras.
According to observations made with one of her majesty's sakers, and a very accurate pendulum-chronometer, a bullet, at its first discharge, flies five hundred and ten yards in five half seconds, which is a mile in a little above seventeen half seconds. Derham's Physico-Theology.

SAKERET. n. f. [from saker.] The male of a saker-hawk.
This kind of hawk is esteemed next after the falcon and gyrfalcon, but differently to be managed. Bailey.

SAL. n. f. [Latin.] Salt. A word often used in pharmacy.
Salto acids will help its passing off; as sal prunel. Floyer.
Sal gem is so called from its breaking frequently into gem-like squares. It differs not in property from the common salt of the salt springs, or that of the sea, when all are equally pure. Woodward's Met. Foss.

SALAMONIAK. n. f. [from sal.] Ammoniac is found still in Ammonia, as mentioned by the ancients, and from whence it had its name. Woodward.
SALACIOUS. adj. [salacis, Lat. salace, Fr.] Luttful; lecherous.

One more salacious, rich, and old,
Out-bids, and buys her. Dryden's Juven. Sat.
Feed him with herbs

Of generous warmth, and of salacious kind. Dryd. Virg.
Animals spleen'd, grow extremely salacious. Arbutnot.
SALACIOUSLY. adv. [from salacious.] Lecherously; lustfully.

SALACITY. n. f. [salacitas, Lat. from salacious.] Lust; lechery.
Immoderate salacity and excess of venery is supposed to shorten the lives of cocks. Brown's Vulg. Errors.

A corrosive acrimony in the seminal lymph produces salacity. Floyer on the Humours.

SALAD. n. f. [salade, Fr. salact, Germ.] Food of raw herbs.
I climbed into this garden to pick a salad, which is not amiss to cool a man's stomach. Shakefp. Henry VI.

My salad days,
When I was green in judgment, cold in blood. Shakefp. Lear.
You have, to rectify your palate,
An olive, capers, or some better salad, Ush'ring the mutton. Ben. Jonson.

Some coarse cold salad is before thee set;
Fall on. Dryden's Pers. Sat.
The happy old Coricyn's fruits and salads, on which he lived contented, were all of his own growth. Dryden.

Leaves, eaten raw, are termed salad: if boiled, they become potherbs; and some of those plants which are potherbs in one family, are salad in another. Watts.

SALAMANDER. n. f. [salamandre, Fr. salamandra, Lat.] An animal supposed to live in the fire, and imagined to be very poisonous. Ambley Parey has a picture of the salamander, with a receipt for her bite; but there is no such creature, the name being now given to a poor harmless insect.

The salamander liveth in the fire, and hath force also to extinguish it. Bacon's Natural History.
According to this hypothesis the whole lunar world is a torrid zone, and may be supposed uninhabitable, except they are salamanders which dwell therein. Brown.

Whereas it is commonly said that a salamander extinguisheth fire, we have found by experience, that on hot coals it dieth immediately. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

SAL

The artist was so encompassed with fire and smoke, that one would have thought nothing but a salamander could have been safe in such a situation. Addison's Guardian.

SALAMANDER'S HAIR. n. f. A kind of asbestos, or mineral wool, being a kind of mineral, which whiteneth in the burning, and consumeth not. Bacon.

Of English tale, the coarser sort is called plaister or parget; the finer, spade, earth flax, or salamander's hair. Woodward.
SALAMANDRINE. adj. [from salamander.] Resembling a salamander.

Laying it into a pan of burning coals, we observed a certain salamandrine quality, that made it capable of living in the midst of fire, without being consumed or singed. Speilator.

SALARY. n. f. [salare, Fr. salarium, Latin.]
1. Salarium, or salary, is derived from sal. Arbutnot.
2. Stated hire; annual or periodical payment.

This is hire and salary, not revenge. Shak. Hamlet.
Several persons, out of a salary of five hundred pounds, have always lived at the rate of two thousand. Swift.

SALE. n. f. [aal, Dutch.]
1. The act of selling.
2. Vent; power of selling; market.

Nothing doth more enrich any country than many towns; for the countrymen will be more industrious in tillage, and rearing of all husbandry commodities, knowing that they shall have ready sale for them at those towns. Spenser.

3. A public and proclaimed exposition of goods to the market; auction.
Those that won the plate, and those thus sold, ought to be marked so as they may never return to the race, or to the sale. Temple.

4. State of being venal; price.
The other is not a thing for sale, and only the gift of the gods. Shakefp. Cymbeline.

Others more moderate seeming, but their aim Private reward; for which both God and state They'd set to sale. Milton's Agonista.

The more money a man spends, the more must he endeavour to increase his stock; which at last sets the liberty of a commonwealth to sale. Addison.

5. It seems in Spenser to signify a wicker basket; perhaps from salieu, in which fish are caught.
To make baskets of bulrushes was my wont;
Who to entrap the fish in winding sale
Was better fenn? Spenser.

SALEABLE. adj. [from sale.] Vendible; fit for sale; marketable.
I can impute this general enlargement of saleable things to no cause sooner than the Cornishman's want of vent and money. Carew.

This vent is made quicker or slower, as greater or less quantities of any saleable commodity are removed out of the course of trade. Lect.

SALEABLENESS. n. f. [from saleable.] The state of being saleable.
SALEABLY. adv. [from saleable.] In a saleable manner.

SALEBOUS. adj. [salebrosus, Latin.] Rough; uneven; rugged.
SALESMAN. n. f. [sale and man.] One who sells cloath's ready made.

Poets make characters, as salesmen cloaths;
We take no measure of your fops and beaus. Swift.
SALEWORK. n. f. [sale and work.] Work for sale; work carefully done.

I see no more in you than in the ordinary
Of nature's salework. Shakefp. As you like it.
SALIENT. adj. [French.] Denotes a lion in a leaping posture, and standing so that his right foot is in the dexter point, and his hinder left foot in the sinister base point of the escutcheon, by which it is distinguished from rampant. Harvis.

SALIENT, in heraldry, is when the lion is sporting himself. Peacock.

SALIENT. adj. [salient, Latin.]
1. Leaping; bounding; moving by leaps.
The legs of both sides moving together, as frogs, and salient animals, is properly called leaping. Brown's Vulg. Err.

2. Beating; panting.
A salient point so first is call'd the heart,
By turns dilated, and by turns compress'd,
Expels and entertains the purple guest. Blackmore.

3. Springing or shooting with a quick motion.
Who best can fend on high
The salient spout, far streaming to the sky. Pope.

SALINE. adj. [salinus, Latin.] Consisting of salt; containing salt.
SALENOUS. n. f. [from saline.] A tituting salt.

We do not easily ascribe their induration to cold; but rather unto salinous spirits and concretionary juices.
This saline sap of the vessels, by being refused reception of the parts, declares itself in a more hostile manner, by drying the radical moisture. Harvey on Constriction.

SAL

If a very small quantity of any salt or vitriol be dissolved in a great quantity of water, the particles of the salt or vitriol will not sink to the bottom, though they be heavier in specie than the water; but will evenly diffuse themselves into all the water, so as to make it as saline at the top as at the bottom. Newton's Opt.

As the substance of coagulations is not merely saline, nothing dissolves them but what penetrates and relaxes at the same time. Arbutnot on Aliments.

SALIGOTS. n. f. A kind of thistle. Arbutnot.
SALIVA. n. f. [Latin.] Every thing that is spit up; but it more strictly signifies that juice which is separated by the glands called salival. Quincy.

Not meeting with disturbance from the saliva, I the sooner extirpated them. Wise's Surgery.
SALIVARY. adj. [from saliva, Latin.] Relating to spittle.

The woodpecker, and other birds that prey upon flies, which they catch with their tongue, in the room of the said glands have a couple of bags filled with a viscid humour, which, by small canals, like the salivary, being brought into their mouths, they dip their tongues herein, and so with the help of this natural birdlime attack the prey. Grew.

The necessity of spittle to dissolve the aliment appears from the contrivance of nature in making the salivary ducts of animals which ruminate, extremely open: such animals as swallow their aliment without chewing, want salivary glands. Arbutnot on Aliments.

TO SALIVATE. v. a. [from saliva, Latin.] To purge by the salival glands.
She was prepossessed with the scandal of salivating, and went out of town. Wise's Surgery.

SALIVATION. n. f. [from salivate.] A method of cure much practised of late in venereal, scrophulous, and other obdurate caufs, by promoting a secretion of spittle. Quincy.

Holding of ill-tasted things in the mouth will make a small salivation. Grew's Cosmol.

SALIVOUS. adj. [from saliva.] Consisting of spittle; having the nature of spittle.
There happeneth an elongation of the uvula, through the abundance of salivous humour flowing upon it. Wise's Surgery.

SALLET. n. f. [corrupted by pronunciation from salad.]
SALLETTING. n. f. [from sallet.] I tried upon sallet oil.
Sow some early salletting. Boyle.

SALLIANCE. n. f. [from sally.] The act of issuing forth; sally.
A word not elegant, but out of use.
Now mote I weat,
Sir Guyon, why with so fierce salliance
And fell intent, ye did at earst me meet. Fairy Queen.

SALLOW. n. f. [sallus, Latin.] A tree of the genus of willow.
See WILLOW.
Sallows and reeds on banks of rivers born,
Remain to cut to stay thy vines. Dryden.

SALLOW. adj. [sall, German; black; sale, French; foul.]
Sickly; yellow.
What a deal of brine
Hath waft thy sallow cheeks for Rosaline? Shakefp. As you like it.

The scene of beauty and delight is chang'd:
No roses bloom upon my fading cheek;
Nor laughing graces wanton in my eyes;
But haggard grief, lean-looking sallow care,
And pining discontent, a rueful train,
Dwell on my brow, all hideous and forlorn. Rowe.

SALLOWNESS. n. f. [from sallow.] Yellowness; sickly paleness.
A fish-diet would give such a sallowness to the celebrated beauties of this island, as would scarce make them distinguishable from those of France. Addison.

SALLY. n. f. [sallie, French.]
1. Eruption; issue from a place besieged; quick egress.
The deputy sat down before the town for the space of three Winter months; during which time sallies were made by the Spaniards, but they were beaten in with loss. Bacon.

2. Range; excursion.
Every one shall know a country better, that makes often sallies into it, and traverses it up and down, than he that, like a mill-horse, goes still round in the same track. Locke.

3. Flight; volatile or prightly exertion.
These passages were intended for sallies of wit; but whence comes all this rage of wit?
4. Escape; levity; extravagant flight; frolic; wild gaiety; exorbitance.

At his return all was clear, and this excursion was esteemed but a sally of youth.
'Tis but a sally of youth. Watson.

We have written some things which we may with never to have thought on: some sallies of levity ought to be imputed to youth.

The epistolical part, made up of the extravagant sallies of the prince of Wales and Falstaff's humour, is of his own invention. Shakefp. Illustrated.

SAL

TO SALLY. v. n. [from the noun.] To make an eruption; to issue out.
The Turks sallying forth, received thereby great hurt. Knell.

The noise of some tumultuous fight:
They break the truce, and sally out by night. Dryden.
The summons take of the same trumpet's call,
To sally from one port, or man one publick wall. Tate.

SALLYPORT. n. f. [sally and port.] Gate at which sallies are made.
My slippery soul had quit the fort,
But that the stopp'd the sallyport. Cleveland.

Love to our citadel resorts
Through those deceitful sallyports;
Our sentinels betray our forts. Denham.

SALMAGUNDI. n. f. [It is said to be corrupted from selon mon gout, or sale à mon goût.] A mixture of chopped meat and pickled herrings with oil, vinegar, pepper, and onions.

SALMON. n. f. [salmo, Latin; saumon, French.]
The salmon is accounted the king of fresh-water fish, and is bred in rivers relating to the sea, yet so far from it as admits no tincture of brackishness. He is said to breed or cast his spawn in most rivers in the month of August: some say that then they dig a hole in a safe place in the gravel, and there place their eggs or spawn, after the melter has done his natural office, and then cover it over with gravel and stones, and so leave it to their Creator's protection; who, by a gentle heat which he infuses into that cold element, makes it brood and beget life in the spawn, and to become famlets early in the Spring: having spent their appointed time, and done this natural duty in the fresh waters, they haste to the sea before Winter, both the melter and spawner. Sir Francis Bacon observes the age of a salmon exceeds not ten years: his growth is very sudden, so that after he is got into the sea he becomes from a famlet, not so big as a gudgeon, to be a salmon, in as short a time as a gosling becomes a goose. Watson's Angler.

They poke them with an instrument somewhat like the salmon spear. Carew's Survey of Cornwall.
They take salmon and trouts by groping and tickling them under the bellies in the pools, where they hover, and so throw them on land. Carew.

Of fishes, you find in arms the whale, dolphin, salmon and trout. Peacocks.

SALMONTROUT. n. f. A trout that has some resemblance to a salmon; a famlet.
There is in many rivers that relate to the sea salmontrouts as much different from others, in shape and spots, as sheep differ in their shape and bigness. Watson's Angler.

SALSUGINOUS. adj. [salsugo, Latin.] Salty; somewhat salt.
The distinction of salts, whereby they are discriminated into acid, volatile, or salsuginous, if I may so call the fugitive salts of animal substances, and fixed or alcalizate, may appear of much use in natural philosophy. Boyle.

SALT. n. f. [sals, Gothick; reate, Saxon; sal, Latin; sel, French.]
1. Salt is a body whose two essential properties seem to be dissolubility in water, and a pungent vapor: it is an active incombustible substance: it gives all bodies consistence, and preserves them from corruption, and occasions all the variety of tastes. There are three kinds of salts, fixed, volatile, and essential: fixed salt is drawn by calcining the matter, then boiling the ashes in a good deal of water: after this the solution is filtrated, and all the moisture evaporated, when the salt remains in a dry form at the bottom: this is called a lixivious salt. Essential salt is that drawn chiefly from the parts of animals, and some putrified parts of vegetables: it rises easily, and is the most volatile of any. The essential salt is drawn from the juice of plants by crystallization. Harvis.

Is not discourse, manhood, learning, gentleness, virtue and liberality, the spice and salt that seasons a man? Shakefp.

He peridiously has given up,
For certain drops of salt, your city Rome,
To his wife and mother. Shak. Cicerianus.

Since salts differ much, some being fixt, some volatile, some acid, and some urinous, the two qualities wherein they agree are, that it is easily dissoluble in water, and affects the palate with a savour, good or evil. Boyle.

 they be exposed to the air, so as to be kept from rain. Locke.
 SALVABILITY. n. f. [from salvabile.] Possibility of being received to everlasting life.
 Why do we Christians so fiercely argue against the salvabi- lity of each other, as if it were our with that all should be damned, but those of our particular sect. Decay of Piety.
 SALVABLE. adj. [from salvus, Latin.] Possible to be saved.
 Our wild fancies about God's decrees, have in event reprobated more than those decrees, and have bid fair to the damning of many whom those left salvable. Decay of Piety.
 SALVAGE. adj. [salvage, French; selvaggio, Italian, from salvo, Latin.] Wild; rude; cruel. It is now spoken and written salvage.
 May the Elixian plains
 Prove as a desert, and none there make stay
 But salvage beasts, or men as wild as they. Waller.
 A salvage race inur'd to blood. Dryden.
 SALVATION. n. f. [from salvus, Latin.] Preservation from eternal death; reception to the happiness of heaven.
 As life and death, mercy and wrath, are matters of meer understanding or knowledge, all mens salvation, and all mens endless perdition, are things so opposite, that whosoever doth affirm the one must necessarily deny the other. Hosier.
 Him the most High,
 Wrap'd in a balmy cloud with winged steeds,
 Did, as thou saw'st, receive; to walk with God
 High in salvation, and the climes of bliss, Exempt from death. Milton's Parad. Lost, b. xi.

 save what was left.] A plate on which any thing is presented.
 He has printed them in such a portable volume, that many of them may be ranged together on a single plate; and is of opinion, that a salver of spectators would be as acceptable an entertainment for the ladies, as a salver of sweetmeats. Addison.
 Between each act the trembling salvers ring,
 From four to sweet wine. Pope.
 SA'LVO. n. f. [from salvo jure, Latin, a form used in granting any thing: as salvo jure pueri.] An exception; a reservation; an excuse.
 They admit many salves, cautions, and reservations, so as they cross not the chief design. King Charles.
 It will be hard if he cannot bring himself off at last with some salvo or distinction, and be his own confessor. L'Estr.
 If others of a more serious turn join with us deliberately in their religious professions of loyalty, with any private salves or evasions, they would do well to consider those maxims in which all casuists are agreed. Addison.
 SALUTARINESS. n. f. [from salutary.] Wholesomeness; quality of contributing to health or safety.
 SALUTARY. adj. [salutaires, Fr. salutaris, Latin.] Whol-some; healthful; safe; advantageous; contributing to health or safety.

 If this salute my blood a jot: it faints me,
 To think what follows. Shakefp. Henry VIII.
 3. To kiss.
 SALUTE. n. f. [from the verb.]
 1. Salutation; greeting.
 The custom of praying for those that sneeze is more ancient than these opinions hereof: so that not any one disease has been the occasion of this salute and deprecation. Brown.
 O, what avails me now that honour high
 To have conceiv'd of God, or that salute,
 Hail highly favour'd, among women blest!
 Continual salutes and addresses entertaining him all the way, kept him from faving to great a life, but with one glance of his eye upon the paper, 'till he came to the fatal place where he was flabbed. South's Sermons.
 I shall not trouble my reader with the first salutes of our three friends. Addison.
 2. A kiss.

 were in my time, when all employments went to parliament-men's friends. Scot's.
 SA'MLET. n. f. [salmonet, or salmonet.] A little falmon.
 Sir Francis Bacon observes the age of a falmon exceeds not ten years, so his growth is very sudden: after he is got into the sea he becomes from a salmet, not so big as a gudgeon, to be a falmon, in as short a time as a golling becomes a goose.
Waller's Angler.
 SA'MPHIRE. n. f. [saint Pierre, French; sithum, Latin.]
 A plant preserved in pickle.
 The leaves are thick, succulent, narrow, branchy, and trifid: the flowers grow in an umbel, each consisting of five leaves, which expand in form of a rose: the empalement of the flower becomes a fruit, consisting of two plain and gently streaked leaves. This plant grows in great plenty upon the rocks near the sea-shore, where it is washed by the salt water.
 It is greatly esteemed for pickling, and is sometimes used in medicine. Miller.
 Half way down
 Hangs one that gathers samphire: dreadful trade!
 Methinks he seems no bigger than his head. Shakefp.
 SA'MPLE. n. f. [from exempli.] A specimen; a part of the whole shown that judgment may be made of the whole.
 He intreated them to tarry but two days, and he himself would bring them a sample of the oar. Raleigh.
 I have not engaged myself to any: I am not loaded with a full cargo: 'tis sufficient if I bring a sample of some goods in this voyage. Dryden.
 I design this but for a sample of what I hope more fully to discuss. Woodward's Natural History.
 Determinations of justice were very summary and decisive, and generally put an end to the vexations of a law-suit by the ruin both of plaintiff and defendant: travellers have recorded some samples of this kind. Addison.
 From most bodies
 Some little bits ask leave to flow;
 And, as through these canals they roll,
 Bring up a sample of the whole. Prior.
 To SA'MPLE. v. a. To show something similar. Ainsworth.
 SA'MPLER. n. f. [exemplar, Latin; whence it is sometimes written sampler.] A pattern of work; a piece worked by young girls for improvement.
 O love, why do'st thou in thy beautiful sampler set such a work for my desire to set out, which is impossible. Sidney.
 Fair Philomela, she but lost her tongue,
 And in a tedious sampler sew'd her mind. Shak. Tit. And.
 We created with our needles both one flower,
 Both on one sampler, fitting on one cushion;
 Both warbling of one song, both in one key,
 As if our hands, our sides, voices and minds
 Had been incorporate. Shakespeare.
 Coarse complexions,
 And cheeks of sorry grain, will serve to ply
 The sampler, and to teize the housewife's wool. Milton.
 I saw her sober over a sampler, or gay over a jointed baby. Pope.
 SA'NABLE. adj. [sanabilis, Latin.] Curable; susceptible of remedy; remediable.

SANCTIFICATION. n. f. [from sanctificare, Fr. from sanctificare, low Latin.]

1. The state of being freed, or act of freeing from the dominion of sin for the time to come. The grace of his sanctification and life, which was first received in him, might pass from him to his whole race, as malediction came from Adam unto all mankind. Hosker.

2. The act of making holy; consecration. The bishop kneels before the cross, and devoutly adores and kisses it: after this follows a long prayer for the sanctification of that new sign of the cross. Stillington.

SANCTIFIER. n. f. [from sanctificare.] He that sanctifies or makes holy.

To be the sanctifier of a people, and to be their God, is all one. Derham's Physico-Theology.

TO SANCTIFY. v. a. [from sanctificare, Fr. sanctifico, Latin.]

1. To free from the power of sin for the time to come. For if the blood of bulls, sprinkling the unclean, sanctifies to the purifying of the flesh, how much more shall the blood of Christ? Heb. ix. 13.

2. To make holy; to make a means of holiness. The gospel, by not making many things unclean, as the law did, hath sanctified those things generally to all, which particularly each man to himself must sanctify by a reverend and holy use. Hosker.

Those judgments God hath been pleased to send upon me, are so much the more welcome, as a means which his mercy hath sanctified to me as to make me repent of that unjust act. King Charles.

Those external things are neither parts of our devotion, or by any strength in themselves direct causes of it; but the grace of God is pleased to move us by ways suitable to our nature, and to sanctify these sensible helps to higher purposes. South.

What actions can express the intire purity of thought, which refines and sanctifies a virtuous man? Addison.

3. To make free from guilt. The holy man, amaz'd at what he saw, Made haste to sanctify the blifs by law. Dryden.

4. To secure from violation. Truth guards the poet, sanctifies the line. Pope.

SANCTIMONIOUS. adj. [from sanctimonia, Latin.] Saintly; having the appearance of sanctity. A sanctimonious pretence, under a pomp of form, without the grace of an inward integrity, will not serve the turn. L'Estrange.

SANCTIMONY. n. f. [from sanctimonia, Latin.] Holiness; scrupulous austerity; appearance of holiness. If sanctimony, and a frail vow between an errant Barbarian and a superstitious Venetian, be not too hard for my wit, and all the tribe of hell, thou shalt enjoy her. Shak. Othello.

Her pretence is a pilgrimage to St. Jacques le Grand, which holy undertaking, with most austere sanctimony, the accomplished. Shakespeare's All's well that ends well.

There was great reason why all discreet princes should beware of yielding hasty belief to the robes of sanctimony. Rel.

About him all the sanctities of heav'n Stood thick as stars, and from his sight receiv'd Beatitude pass'd utterance. Milton.

TO SANCTUARISE. v. n. [from sanctuary.] To shelter by means of sacred privileges. No place indeed should murder sanctuarise. Shakespeare.

SANCTUARY. n. f. [from sanctuarium, Fr. sanctuarium, Latin.]

1. A holy place; holy ground. Properly the penitential, or most retired and awful part of a temple. Having waste ground enough, Shall we desire to raze the sanctuary, And pitch our evils there. Shakespeare.

2. Within his sanctuary itself their shrines. Let it not be imagined, that they contribute nothing to the happiness of the country who only serve God in the duties of a holy life, who attend his sanctuary, and daily address his goodness. Rogers's Sermon.

3. A place of protection; a sacred asylum: whence a sanctuary man, one who takes shelter in a holy place. Come, my boy, we will to sanctuary. Shakespeare. R. III.

I'll hence forthwith unto the sanctuary, To save at least the heir of Edward's right. Shak. H. VI.

But sanctuary children, ne'er 'till now. Shakespeare. R. III.

He fled to Beverly, where he and divers of his company registered themselves sanctuary men. Bacon's Henry VII.

Howsoever the sanctuary man was protected from his creditors, yet his goods out of sanctuary should not. Bacon's H. VII.

This our high place, our sanctuary, our hill. Milton.

What are the bulls to the frogs, or the lakes to the meadows? Very much, says the frog; for he that's worried will be sure to take sanctuary in the fens. L'Estrange.

The admirable works of painting were made fuel for the fire; but some reliques of it took sanctuary under ground, and escaped the common destiny. Dryden's Dufresny.

SAND. n. f. [from sand, Danish and Dutch.]

1. Particles of stone not conjoined, or stone broken to powder. That finer matter called sand, is no other than very small pebbles. Here I th' sands These I'll rake up, the post un*sanctified*. Shakespeare. K. Lear.

Hark, the fatal followers do pursue! The sands are number'd that make up my life: Here must I stay, and here my life must end. Shak. H. VI.

Sand hath always its root in clay, and there be no veins of sand any great depth within the earth. Bacon.

Calling for more paper to re*scribe*, king Philip shew'd him the difference betwixt the ink box and sand box. Hosker.

If quicksilver be put into a convenient glass vessel, and that vessel exactly stopp'd, and kept for ten weeks in a sand furnace, whose heat may be constant, the corpuscles that constitute the quicksilver will, after innumerable revolutions, be so connected to one another, that they will appear in the form of a red powder. Boyle.

Engag'd with money bags, as bold As men with sand bags did of old. Hudibras.

The force of water casts gold out from the bowels of mountains, and exposes it among the sands of rivers. Dryden.

Shells are found in the great sand pit at Woolwich. Woodward.

Celia and I, the other days, Walk'd o'er the sand hills to the sea. Prior.

Her fons spread Beneath Gibraltar to the Lybian sands. Milton.

SANDAL. n. f. [from sandalum, Fr. sandalum, Latin.] A loose shoe. Thus sung the uncouth swain to th' oaks and rills, While the still morn went out with sandals grey. Milton.

From his robe Flows light ineffable: his harp, his quiver, And Lycian bow are gold: with golden sandals: His feet are shod. Prior.

The sandals of celestial mold, Fledg'd with ambrosial plumes, and rich with gold, Surround her feet. Pope's Odyssey.

SANDARAK. n. f. [from sandarake, French; sandaraca, Latin.]

1. A mineral of a bright right colour, not much unlike to red arsenick. Bailey.

2. A white gum oozing out of the juniper-tree. Bailey.

SANDBLIND. adj. [from sand and blind.] Having a defect in the eyes, by which small particles appear to fly before them. My true begotten father, being more than sandblind, high gravelblind, knows me not. Shakespeare. Merch. of Venice.

SANDBOX Tree. n. f. [from sand, Latin.] A plant. It hath a funnel-shaped flower, consisting of one leaf, which is spread open at the brim, and slightly cut into twelve parts: at the bottom of the tube is placed the pointal, which afterwards becomes a globular compressed fruit, which has twelve cells, in each of which is contained one roundish flat seed. The fruit of this plant, if suffered to remain on 'till they are fully ripe, burst in the heat of the day with a violent explosion, making a noise like the firing of a pistol, and hereby the seeds are thrown about to a considerable distance. These seeds, when green, vomit and purge, and are supposed to be somewhat a kin to nux vomica. Miller.

SANDED. adj. [from sand.]

1. Covered with sand; barren. In well sanded lands little or no snow lies. Mortimer.

2. The river pours along Refill'd, roaring dreadful down it comes; Then o'er the sanded valley floating spreads. Thomson.

SANG. The preterite of sing. Then sang Moses and Israel this song unto the Lord. Ex. xv.

2. The next they sang, of all creation first. Milton.

SANGUIFEROUS. adj. [from sanguis, Latin.] Conveying blood. The fifth conjugation of the nerves is branched to the muscles of the face, particularly the cheeks, whose sanguiferous vessels it twists about. Derham's Physico-Theology.

SANGUIFICATION. n. f. [from sanguis, Latin.] The production of blood; the conversion of the chyle into blood. Since the lungs are the chief instrument of sanguification, the animal that has that organ faulty can never have the vital juices, derived from the blood, in a good state. Arbutnot.

3. Athmatic persons have voracious appetites, and consequently, for want of a right sanguification, are leucophlegmatic. Arbutnot on Ailments.

SANGUIFY. v. n. [from sanguis and facio, Latin.] To produce blood. Bitters, like cholera, are the best sanguifiers, and also the best febrifuges. Player on the Humours.

TO SANGUIFY. v. n. [from sanguis and facio, Latin.] To produce blood. At the same time I think, I command: in inferior faculties, I walk, see, hear, digest, sanguify, and carnify, by the power of an individual soul. Hale.

SANGUINARY. adj. [from sanguinaris, Lat. sanguinaire, French; from sanguis, Latin.] Cruel; bloody; murderous. We may not propagate religion by wars, or by sanguinary persecutions to force consciences. Bacon.

The scene is now more sanguinary, and fuller of actors: never was such a confused mysterious civil war as this. Howel.

Passion transforms us into a kind of savages, and makes us brutal and sanguinary. Broom's Notes on the Odyssey.

SANGUINARY. n. f. [from sanguis, Lat.] An herb. Ainsworth.

SANGUINE. adj. [from sanguis, Fr. sanguineus, from sanguis, Lat.] 1. Red; having the colour of blood. This fellow Upbraided me about the rose I wear; Saying, the sanguine colour of the leaves Did represent my master's blushing cheeks. Shak. H. VI.

A stream of nect'rous humour issuing flow'd Sanguine. Milton.

2. Dire Tisiphone there keeps the ward, Girt in her sanguine gown. Dryden.

Her flag aloft, spread rustling to the wind, And sanguine streamers seem the flood to fire: The weaver, charm'd with what his loom design'd, Goes on to sea, and knows not to retire. Dryden.

3. Abounding with blood more than any other humour; cheerful. The choleric fell short of the longevity of the sanguine. Bacon.

4. Though these faults differ in their complexions as sanguine from melancholy, yet they are frequently united. Gov. of Tongue.

5. Warm; ardent; confident. A set of sanguine tempers ridicule, in the number of foppes, all such apprehensions. Swift.

SANGUINE. n. f. [from sanguis.] Blood colour. A grievous wound, From which forth gush'd a stream of gore, blood thick, That all her goodly garments stain'd around, And in deep sanguine dy'd the grassy ground. Fa. Queen.

SANGUINENESS. n. f. [from sanguine.] Ardour; heat of passion; confidence. Sanguinity is perhaps only used by Swift.

Rage, or phrensy it may be, in some perhaps natural courage, or sanguineness of temper in others; but true valour it is not, if it knows not as well to suffer as to do. That mind is truly great, and only that, which stands above the power of all extrinick violence; which keeps itself a distinct principality, independent upon the outward man. Decay of Piety.

I very much distrust your sanguinity. Swift.

SANGUINEOUS. adj. [from sanguineus, Latin; sanguis, French.]

1. Constituting blood. This animal of Plato containeth not only sanguineus and reparable particles, but is made up of veins, nerves, and arteries. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

2. Abounding with blood. A plethorick constitution, in which true blood abounds, is called sanguineus. Arbutnot.

SANGUEDRIM. n. f. [from sanguis, Latin.] The chief council among the Jews, consisting of seventy elders, over whom the high priest presided. Arbutnot.

SANICLE. n. f. [from sanicle, Fr. sanicula, Latin.] A plant. It is an umbelliferous plant, and its flower consists of five leaves, placed orbicularly; but bent back to the centre of the flower, and resting on the empalement, which becomes a fruit composed of two seeds, which are gibbous and prickly on one side, but plain on the other. Miller.

SANIOUS. adj. [from sanies.] Running a thin serous matter, not a well digested pus. Observing the ulcer sanious, I propos'd digestion as the only way to remove the pain. Wifeman.

SANITY. n. f. [from sanitas, Latin.] Soundness of mind. How pregnant, sometimes, his replies are? A happiness that often madness hits on, Which sanity and reason could not be So prosperously delivered of. Shakespeare. Hamlet.

SANK. The preterite of sink. As if the opening of her mouth to Zelmane had opened some great floodgate of sorrow, whereof her heart could not abide the violent issue, she sank to the ground. Sidney.

Our men followed them close, took two ships, and gave divers others of their ships their death's wounds, whereof soon after they sank and perished. Bacon's War with Spain.

SANS.

SAP

SANS, prep. [French.] Without. Out of use.
 Last scene of all,
 That ends this strange eventful history,
 Is second childishness and mere oblivion,
 Sam teeth, sans eyes, sans taste, sans every thing. Shakesp.
 For nature so preposterously to err,
 Being not deficient, blind, or lame of sense,
Sans witchcraft could not. Shakesp. Othello.
SAP, n. f. [sæpe, Saxon; sap, Dutch.] The vital juice of plants; the juice that circulates in trees and herbs.
 Now sucking of the sap of herbs most sweets,
 Or of the dew, which yet on them does lie,
 Now in the same bathing his tender feet. Spenser.
 Though now this grained face of mine be hid
 In sap consuming Winter's drizzled snow,
 And all the conduits of my blood froze up,
 Yet hath my night of life some memory. Shakespeare.
 Wound the bark of our fruit-trees,
 Left, being over-proud with sap and blood,
 With too much riches it confound itself. Shakesp. R. II.
 His presence had infused
 Into the plant scintillating sap. Milton.
 The sap which at the root is bred
 In trees, through all the boughs is spread. Waller.
 Vegetables consist of the same parts with animal substances, spirit, water, salt, oil, earth; all which are contained in the sap they derive from the earth. Arbutnot.
 To SAP, v. a. [sapper, French; zappare, Italian.] To undermine; to subvert by digging; to mine.
 Their dwellings were sapp'd by floods,
 Their houses fell upon their household gods. Dryden.
 To SAP, v. n. To proceed by mine; to proceed invisibly.
 For the better security of the troops, both assaults are carried on by sapping. Tatler.
 In vain may heroes fight, and patriots rave,
 If secret gold saps on from knave to knave. Pope.
SAPPHIRE, n. f. [sapphirus, Latin: so that it is improperly written saphyre.] A precious stone of a blue colour.
 Sapphire is of a bright blue colour. Woodward.
 In enroll'd tufts, flow'rs purpled, blue and white,
 Like sapphire, pearl, in rich embroidery. Shakespeare.
 He tinctures rubies with their rosy hue,
 And on the sapphire spreads a heavenly blue. Blackmore.
 That the sapphire should grow foul, and lose its beauty, when worn by one that is lecherous, and many other fabulous stories of gems, are great arguments that their virtue is equivalent to their value. Derham.
SAPPHIRINE, adj. [sapphirinus, Latin.] Made of sapphire; resembling sapphire.
 She was too sapphirine and clear for thee;
 Clay, flint, and jet now thy fit dwellings be. Denne.
 A few grains of shell silver, with a convenient proportion of powdered crystal glass, having been kept three hours in fusion, I found the coliquated mals, upon breaking the crucible, of a lovely sapphirine blue. Boyle.
SAPID, adj. [sapidus, Latin.] Tasty; palatable; making a powerful stimulation upon the palate.
 Thus camels, to make the water sapid, do raise the mud with their feet.
 The most oily parts are not separated by a slight decoction, till they are disentangled from the salts; for if what remains of the subject, after the infusion and decoction be continued to be boiled down with the addition of fresh water, a fat, sapid, odorous, viscous, inflammable, frothy water will constantly be found floating a-top of the boiling liquor. Arbutnot.
SAPIDITY, n. f. [from sapid.] Tastefulness; power of stimulating the palate.
 As for their taste, if their nutriment be air, neither can it be an instrument thereof; for the body of that element is inguistible, and void of all sapidity. Brown's Vulg. Errors.
 If sapidness belong not to the mercurial principle of vegetables and animals, it will scarce be discriminated from their phlegm. Boyle.
SAPIENCE, n. f. [sapiencia, Fr. sapientia, Latin.] Wisdom; sagacity; knowledge.
 By sapience, I mean what the ancients did by philosophy; the habit or disposition of mind which importeth the love of wisdom. Grew.
 Ne only they that dwell in lowly dust,
 The sons of darkness and of ignorance;
 But they whom thou, great Jove, by doom unjust,
 Didst to the top of honour cast advance:
 They now, put up with's deignful insolence,
 Despise the brood of blessed sapience. Spenser.
 King James, of immortal memory, among all the lovers and admirers of divine and human sapience, accomplished at Theobalds his own days on earth. Watson.
 Because enterprises guided by ill counsels have equal success to those by the best judgment conducted, therefore had violence the same external figure with sapience. Raleigh.
 Immense, and all his father in him shone. Milton.

SAR

O sovereign, virtuous, precious of all trees
 In Paradise! of operation blest
 To sapience. Milton.
 Many a wretch in Bedlam,
 Though perhaps among the rout
 He wildly flings his filth about,
 Still has gratitude and sapience.
 To spare the folks that give him ha'pence. Swift.
SAPIENT, adj. [sapiens, Latin.] Wise; sage.
 There the sapient king held dalliance. Milton.
SAPLESS, adj. [sapless, Dutch.]
 1. Wanting sap; wanting vital juice.
 Pitheless arms, like to a wither'd vine,
 That droops his sapless branches to the ground. Shak. H.N.I.
 The tree of knowledge, blasted by disputes,
 Produces sapless leaves instead of fruits. Denham.
 This single stick was full of sap; but now in vain does art tie that withered bundle of twigs to its sapless trunk. Swift.
 2. Dry; old; husky.
 If by this bribe, well plac'd, he would enslave
 Some sapless usurer that wants an heir. Dryden's Jew.
SAPLING, n. f. [from sap.] A young tree; a young plant.
 Look how I am bewitch'd; behold, mine arm
 Is, like a blasted sapling, wither'd up. Shakesp. R. III.
 Nurie the saplings tall, and curl the grove
 With ringlets quaint. Milton.
 A sapling pine he wrench'd from out the ground,
 The readiest weapon that his fury found. Dryden.
 What planter will attempt to yoke
 A sapling with a falling oak?
 Slouch turn'd his head, saw his wife's vigorous hand Wielding her oaken sapling of command. King's Lear.
SAPONACEOUS, adj. [from sapo, Latin, soap.] Sopy; resinous.
 1. Resembling soap; having the qualities of soap.
 By digesting a solution of salt of tartar with oil of almonds, I could reduce them to a soft saponaceous substance. Boyle.
 Any mixture of an oily substance with salt, may be called a soap: bodies of this nature are called saponaceous. Arbutnot.
SAPOR, n. f. [Latin.] Taste; power of affecting or stimulating the palate.
 There is some sapor in all aliments, as being to be distinguished and judged by the gust, which cannot be admitted in air. Brown's Vulg. Errors.

SAPPY, adj. [from sap.]
 1. Abounding in sap; juicy; succulent.
 The sappy parts, and next resembling juices,
 Were turn'd to moisture for the body's use,
 Supplying humours, blood, and nourishment. Dryden.
 The sappy boughs
 Attire themselves with blooms, sweet rudiments
 Of future harvest. Philips.
 The green heat the ripe, and the ripe give fire to the green;
 To which the bigness of their leaves, and hardness of their stalks, which continue moist and sappy long, doth much contribute. Mortimer.
 2. Young; not firm; weak.
 This young prince was brought up among nurses, till he arrived to the age of six years: when he had passed this weak and sappy age, he was committed to Dr. Cox. Hayward.
SARABAND, n. f. [sarabande, Spanish; sarabande, French.] A Spanish dance.
 The several modifications of this tune-playing quality in a fiddle, to play preludes, sarabands, jigs, and gavots, are as much real qualities in the instrument as the thought is in the mind of the composer. Arbutnot, and Pope's Works.
SARCASM, n. f. [sarcasme, Fr. sarcasmus, Latin.] A keen reproach; a taunt; a gibe.
Sarcasms of wit are transmitted in story. Gow. of the Town.
 Rejoice, O young man, says Solomon, in a severe sarcasm, in the days of thy youth, and walk in the ways of thy heart; but know that for these things God will bring thee into judgment. Rogers's Sermon.
 When an angry master says to his servant it is bravely done, it is one way of giving a severe reproach; for the words are spoken by way of sarcasm, or irony. Watts.
SARCASTICALLY, adv. [from sarcastick.] Tauntingly; severely.
 He asked a lady playing with a lap-dog, whether the women of that country used to have any children or no; thereby sarcasmically reproaching them for misplacing that affection upon brutes, which could only become a mother to her child. South.
SARCASTICAL, adj. [from sarcasm.] Keen; taunting; severely.
 What a fierce and sarcasmical reprehension would this have drawn from the friendship of the world, and yet what a gentle one did it receive from Christ? SARACENET.

SAT

SARACENET, n. f. [Supposed by Skinner to be sericum saracenicum, Latin.] Fine thin woven silk.
 Why art thou then exasperate, thou idle immaterial skein of sleigh'd silk, thou green saracenet flap for a fore eye, thou tassel of a prodigal's purse?
 If they be covered, though but with linnen or saracenet, it intercepts the effluvia. Brown's Vulg. Errors.
 These are they that cannot bear the heat
 Of figur'd silks and under saracenet sweat. Dryd. Juven.
 She darts from saracenet ambush wily leers,
 Twitches thy sleeve, or with familiar airs
 Her fan will pat the cheek; these snares disdains. Gay.

 Unwillingly to school. Shak. As you like it.
 Schoolboys lag with satchels in their hands. Swift.
 To SATE, v. a. [satis, Latin.] To satiate; to glut; to pall; to feed beyond natural desires.
 Sated at length, ere long I might perceive Strange alteration in me. Milton's Paradise Lost.
 How will their bodies strip
 Enrich the victors, while the vultures sate
 Their maws with full repast. Phillips.
 Thy useless strength, mistaken king, employ,
 Sated with rage, and ignorant of joy. Prior.
SATELLITE, n. f. [satelles, Lat. satellite, Fr.] This word is commonly pronounced in prose with the e mute in the plural, as in the singular, and is therefore only of three syllables; but Pope has in the plural continued the Latin form, and assigned it four; I think, improperly.] A small planet revolving round a larger.
 Four moons move about Jupiter, and five about Saturn, called their satellites. Lecke.
 The smallest planets are situated nearest the sun and each other; whereas Jupiter and Saturn, that are vastly greater, and have many satellites about them, are wisely removed to the extreme regions of the system. Bentley.
 Ask of yonder argent fields above,
 Why Jove's satellites are less than Jove? Pope.
SATELLITIOUS, adj. [from satelles, Lat.] Consisting of satellites.
 Their solidity and opacity, and their satellitious attendance, their revolutions about the sun, and their rotations about their axis, are exactly the same. Cheyne's Phil. Princ.
 To SATIATE, v. a. [satis, Latin.]
 1. To satisfy; to fill.
 Those smells are the most grateful where the degree of heat is small, or the strength of the smell allayed; for these rather woo the sense than satiate it. Bacon.
 Buying of land is the result of a full and satiated gain; and men in trade seldom think of laying out their money upon land, till their profit has brought them in more than their trade can well employ. Locke.
 The loosen'd winds
 Hurl'd high above the clouds; 'till all their force Consum'd, her rav'nous jaws th' earth satiates clos'd. Philips.
 2. To glut; to pall; to fill beyond natural desire.
 They satiate and soon fill,
 Though pleasant. Milton.
 Whatever novelty presents, children are presently eager to have a taste, and are as soon satiated with it. Locke.
 He may be satiated, but not satisfy'd. Norris.
 3. To gratify desire.
 I may yet survive the malice of my enemies, although they should be satiated with my blood. King Charles.
 4. To saturate; to impregnate with as much as can be contained or imbibed.
 Why does not salt of tartar draw more water out of the air, than in a certain proportion to its quantity, but for want of an attractive force after it is satiated with water? Newton.
SATIATE, adj. [from the verb.] Glutted; full to satiety.
 When it has satiated, it seems a participle; when satiating, an adjective.
 Our generals, retir'd to their estates,
 In life's cool evening, satiated of applause,
 Nor think of bleeding ev'n in Brunswick's cause. Pope.
 Now may's and thrives all hush'd and satiated lay,
 Yet eat, in dreams, the custard of the day. Pope's Dunci.
SATIETY, n. f. [satietas, Latin; satiété, Fr.] Fulness beyond desire or pleasure; more than enough; wearisomeness of plenty; state of being palled or glutted.
 He leaves a shallow plash to plunge him in the deep,
 And with satiety seeks to quench his thirst. Shakespeare.
 Nothing more jealous than a favourite, especially towards the waining time and suspect of satiety. Wotton.
 In all pleasures there is satiety; and after they be used, their verdure departeth. Hakewill.
 They satiate and soon fill,
 Though pleasant; but thy words, with grace divine Imbu'd, bring to their sweetness no satiety. Milton.
 No action, the usefulness of which has made it the matter of duty, but a man may bear the continual pursuit of, without loathing or satiety. South.
 The joy unequal'd, if its end it gain,
 Without satiety, though e'er so blest,
 And but more relish'd as the more distress'd. Pope.
SATIN, n. f. [satim, French; d'aso di setan, Italian; satijn, Dutch.] A soft close and shining silk.

SAT

Such a glittering shew it bare, and so bravely it was held up from the head: upon her body she wore a doublet of sky-colour satins, covered with plates of gold, and as it were nailed with precious stones, that in it she might seem armed. Sidney.

The ladies dress'd in rich fymars were seen,
Of Florence satins, flower'd with white and green,
And for a shade betwixt the bloomy gridelin. Dryden.

Her petticoat, transform'd apace,
Became black satins bound with lace. Swift.

Lay the child carefully in a case, covered with a mantle of blue satins. Arbutn. and Pope.

SATIRE. n. f. [satira, anciently satura, Lat. not from satyrus, a satyr; satire, Fr.] A poem in which wickedness or folly is censured. Proper satire is distinguished, by the generality of the reflections, from a lampoon which is aimed against a particular person; but they are too frequently confounded.

He dares to sing thy praises in a clime
Where vice triumphs, and virtue is a crime;
Where ev'n to draw the picture of thy mind,
Is satyr on the most of human kind. Dryden.

SATIRICAL. adj. [satiricus, Latin; satirique, French; from SATIRICK. s. satire.]

1. Belonging to satire; employed in writing of invective.
You must not think, that a satyrick style
Allows of scandalous and brutish words. Rescommon.

What human kind desires, and what they shun, Rage, passions, pleasures, impotence of will,
Shall this satirical collection fill. Dryden's Juvenal.

2. Censorious; severe in language.
Slanders, fir; for the satirical slave says here, that old men have grey beards; that their faces are wrinkled. Shak. Hamlet.

He that hath a satirical vein, as he maketh others afraid of his wit, so he had need be afraid of others memory. Bacon.

On me when dunces are satirick,
I take it for a panegyrick. Swift.

SATIRICALLY. adv. [from satirical.] With invective; with intention to censure or vilify.

He applies them satirically to some customs, and kinds of philosophy, which he arraigns. Dryden.

SATIRIST. n. f. [from satire.] One who writes satires.

Wyckly, in his writings, is the sharpest satyr of his time; but, in his nature, he has all the softness of the tenderest dispositions: in his writings he is severe, bold, undertaking; in his nature gentle, modest, inoffensive. Granville.

All vain pretenders have been constantly the topics of the most candid satyrists, from the Codrus of Juvenal to the Damon of Boileau. Letter to the Publisher of the Dunciad.

Yet soft his nature, though severe his lay;
His anger moral, and his wisdom gay:
Blest satyr! who touch'd the mean so true,
As show'd vice had his hate and pity too. Pope.

TO SATIRIZE. v. a. [satirizer, Fr. from satire.] To censure as in a satire.

Covetousness is described as a veil cast over the true meaning of the poet, which was to satirize his prodigality and voluptuousness. Dryden.

Should a writer single out and point his raillery at particular persons, or satirize the miserable, he might be sure of pleasing a great part of his readers; but must be a very ill man if he could please himself. Addison.

I insist that my lion's mouth be not defiled with scandal; for I would not make use of him to revile the human species, and satirize his betters. Addison's Spectator.

It is as hard to satirize well a man of distinguished virtues, as to praise well a man of distinguished vices. Swift.

SATISFACTION. n. f. [satisfactio, Latin; satisfaction, French.]

1. The act of pleasing to the full.
The mind, having a power to suspend the execution and satisfaction of any of its desires, is at liberty to consider the objects of them. Locke.

2. The state of being pleased.
'Tis a wretched satisfaction a revengeful man takes, even in losing his life, provided his enemy go for company. L'Estr.

There are very few discourses so short, clear, and consistent, to which most men may not, with satisfaction enough to themselves, raise a doubt. Locke.

3. Release from suspense, uncertainty, or uneasiness.
Wilt thou leave me so unsatisfied?
—What satisfaction can you have? Shakespeare.

4. Gratification; that which pleases.
Run over the circle of earthly pleasures, and had not God secured a man a solid pleasure from his own actions, he would be forced to complain that pleasure was not satisfaction. South.

Of ev'ry nation each illustrious name,
Such toys as these have cheated into fame;
Exchanging solid quiet to obtain
The windy satisfaction of the brain. Dryden's Juvenal.

5. Amends; atonement for a crime; recompense for an injury.
Die he or justice must; unless for him
Some other able, and as willing, pay
The rigid satisfaction, death for death. Mit. Par. Lost.

SATISFACTIVE. adj. [satisfactus, Lat.] Giving satisfaction.

By a final and satisfactory discernment of faith, we lay the last effects upon the first cause of all things. Brown's Vulg. Err.

SATISFACTORILY. adj. [from satisfactory.] To satisfaction.

Bellonius hath been more satisfactorily experimental, not only affirming that chameleons feed on flies, but upon experimentation he found these animals in their bellies. Brown's V. Er.

They strain their memory to answer him satisfactorily unto all his demands. Digby.

SATISFACTORINESS. n. f. [from satisfactory.] Power of satisfying; power of giving content.

The incompleteness of the seraphick lover's happiness, in his fruitions, proceeds not from their want of satisfactoriness, but his want of an entire possession of them. Boyle.

SATISFACTORY. adj. [satisfactorius, Fr. satisfactus, Latin.]

1. Giving satisfaction; giving content.
An intelligent American would scarce take it for a satisfactory account, if, desiring to learn our architecture, he should be told that a pillar was a thing supported by a basis. Locke.

2. Atoning; making amends.
A most wise and sufficient means of redemption and salvation, by the satisfactory and meritorious death and obedience of the incarnate son of God, Jesus Christ. Sanderfon.

TO SATISFY. v. a. [satisfaire, Fr. satisfacio, Latin.]

1. To content; to please to such a degree as that nothing more is desired.

When come to the utmost extremity of body, what can there put a stop and satisfy the mind that it is at the end of space, when it is satisfied that body itself can move into it? Locke.

This I would willingly be satisfied in, whether the soul, when it thinks thus, separate from the body, acts less rationally than when conjointly with it? Locke.

5. To convince.
He declares himself satisfied to the contrary, in which he has given up the cause.

The standing evidences of the truth of the Gospel, are in themselves most firm, solid, and satisfying. Atterbury.

TO SATISFY. v. n. To make payment.

By the quantity of silver they give or take, they estimate the value of other things, and satisfy for them: thus silver becomes the measure of commerce. Locke.

SATURABLE. adj. [from saturate.] Impregnable with any thing 'till it will receive no more.

Be the figures of the salts never so various, yet if the atoms of water were fluid, they would always conform to those figures as to fill up all vacuities; and consequently the water would be saturable with the same quantity of any salt, which it is not. Grew's Cuscul. Sac.

SATURANT. adj. [from saturans, Lat.] Impregnating to the fill.

TO SATURATE. v. a. [saturare, Latin.] To impregnate 'till no more can be received or imbibed.

Rain-water is plentifully saturated with terrestrial matter, and more or less stored with it.

His body has been fully saturated with the fluid of light, to be able to last so many years without any sensible diminution, though there are constant emanations thereof. Cheyne.

Still night succeeds
A soften'd shade, and saturated earth
Awaits the morning beam. Thomson.

SATURDAY. n. f. [sæternus, or sæternus, Saxon, according to Vestiges, from sætern, a Saxon idol; more probably from Saturn, dis Saturni.] The last day of the week.

Affecting private life, or more obscure
In savage wilderness? Milton.

Cornels, and savage berries of the wood,
And roots and herbs, have been my meagre food. Dryden.

2. Untamed; cruel.
Chain me to some steep mountain's top,
Where roaring bears and savage lions roam. Shakespeare.

Tyrants no more their savage nature kept,
And foes to virtue wonder'd how they wept. Pope.

3. Uncivilized; barbarous; untaught.
Hence with your little ones:
To fright you thus, methinks, I am too savage;
To do worse to you, were fell cruelty. Shakespeare. Macbeth.

Thus people lived altogether a savage life, 'till Saturn, arriving on those coasts, devised laws to govern them by. Raleigh.

The savage clamour drown'd
Both harp and voice. Milton.

A herd of wild beasts on the mountains, or a savage drove of men in caves, might be so disordered; but never a peculiar people. Spratt's Sermons.

SAVAGE. n. f. [from the adjective.] A man untaught and uncivilized; a barbarian.

Long after these times were they but savages. Raleigh.

The fabled lives by rapine and ruin of all the country, omitting nothing of that which savages, enraged in the height of their unruly behaviour, do commit. Hayward.

To deprive us of metals is to make us mere savages; to change our corn for the old Arcadian diet, our houses and cities for dens and caves, and our clothing for skins of beasts: 'tis to bereave us of all arts and sciences, nay, of revealed religion. Bentley.

TO SAVAGE. v. a. [from the noun.] To make barbarous, wild, or cruel. A word not well authorized.

You are more saucy with lords than the heraldry of your birth and virtue gives you commission. Shakespeare. Study.

SAV

Study is like the heav'n's glorious sun,
That will not be deep search'd with fancy looks;
Small have continual plodders ever won,
Save bafe authority from others' books. Shakespeare.
And if thou hast the mettle of a king,
Being wrong'd as we are by this peevish town,
Turn thou the mouth of thy artillery,
As we will ours against these fancy walls. Shakespeare, K. John.
Power's first pedigree from force derives,
And calls to mind the old prerogatives
Of free-born man; and with a fancy eye
Searches the heart and soul of majesty. Denham's Sophy.
I lose my patience, when with fancy pride
By untun'd ears I hear his numbers try'd. Roscommon.
No fancy citizen shall dare
To strike a soldier, nor, when struck, resent
The wrong. Dryden's Juvenal.
Homer, to express a man both timorous and fancy, makes Use of a kind of point, namely, that he had the eyes of a dog,
But the heart of a deer. Addison's Spectator.

I meet thee? Dryden's Juvenal.
Though putting the mind upon an unusual stress that may discourage, ought to be avoided; yet this must not run it into a lazy savouring about ordinary things. Lake.
Yourself look after him, to cure his savouring at his bulnests. Lake.
If men were weaned from their savouring humour, wherein they let a good part of their lives run uselessly away, they would acquire skill in hundreds of things. Lake.
So the young 'quire, when first he comes From country school to Will's or Tom's,
Without one notion of his own,
He sauv'ring wildly up and down. Prior.
The brainless stripling
Spells uncouth Latin, and pretends to Greek;
A sauv'ring tribe! such born to wide estates,
With yea and no in senates hold debates. Tidd.
Here sauv'ring 'prentices o'er Otway weep.
Led by my hand, he sauv'ring Europe round,
And gather'd ev'ry vice. Dunciad.
SA'VOUY. n. f. [savorie, French; satureia, Latin.] A plant.
It is of the verticillate kind, with a labiate flower, whose upper lip or crest is divided into two parts; but the lower lip or beard is divided into three parts, the middle part being crenated: these flowers are produced from the wings of the leaves in a loose order, and not in whorles or spikes, as are most of this tribe of plants. Miller.
SA'VOUR. n. f. [savour, French.]
1. A scent; odour.
What savour is better, if phsyick be true,
For places infected, than wormwood and rue? Tissot.
Benzo calls its smell a tartarous and hellish savour. Turn.

Turn then my freshest reputation to A savour that may strike the dullest nostril? Shakespeare.
I smell sweet savours, and I feel soft things. Shakespeare.
That Jews stink naturally, that is, that there is in their race an evil savour, is a received opinion we know not how to admit. Brown's Vulgar Errors.
Truffles, which have an excellent oil, and a volatile salt of a grateful savour, are heating. Arbutnot on Diet.
2. Taste; power of affecting the palate.
I taste
The savour of death from all things. Milton.
A directer influence from the sun gives fruit a better savour and a greater worth. South.
To SA'VOUR. v. n. [savourer, Fr. from the noun.]
1. To have any particular smell or taste.
2. To betoken; to have an appearance or taste of something.
This ripping of ancestors is very pleasing, and savoureth of good conceit and some reading. Spenser on Ireland.
The duke's answers to his attachments are very diligently and civilly couched; and though his heart was big, yet they all savour of an humble spirit. Watson.
If 'twere a secret that concern'd my life,
This boldness might become thee;
But such unnecessary rudeness savours
Of some design. Denham's Sophy.
I have rejected every thing that savours of party. Addison.
To SA'VOUR. v. a.
1. To like.
Wisdom and goodness to the vile seem vile;
Filths savour but themselves. Shakespeare.
2. To exhibit taste of.
Thou savour'st not the things that be of God. Gospel.
That savours only of rancour and pride. Milton.
SA'VOURILY. adv. [from savoury.]
1. With gust; with appetite.
The collation he fell to very savourily. L'Estrange's Fables.
This musti is some English renegade, he talks so savourily of toasting. Dryden, Don Sebastian.

2. Pleasing smell.
SA'VOURY. adj. [savoureux, Fr. from savour.]
1. Pleading to the smell.
The pleasant savoury smell
So quicken'd appetite, that I Could not but taste! Milton's Paradise Lost.
From the boughs a savoury odour blown,
Grateful to appetite! more pleas'd my sense
Than smell of sweetest fennel, or the tears
Of ewe, or goat, dropping with milk at ev'n. Milton.
2. Piquant to the taste.
Savoury meat, such as my father loveth.
The savoury pulp they chew. Milton.
SA'VOY. n. f. [brassica subarctica, Latin.] A sort of colwort.
SA'USAGE. n. f. [sauçisse, French; salsum, Latin.] A roll or ball made commonly of pork or veal, and sometimes of beef, minced very small, with salt and spice; sometimes it is stuffed into the guts of fowls, and sometimes only rolled in flower.

SAW. n. f. [sawe, Danish; raga, or rize, Saxon; seie, Fr.]
1. A dentated instrument, by the attrition of which wood or metal is cut.
The teeth are filed to an angle, pointing towards the end of the saw, and not towards the handle of the saw, or straight between the handle and end; because the saw is designed to act only in its progress forwards, a man having in that more strength than he can have in drawing back his saw, and therefore when he draws it back, he bears it lightly off the unswain stuff, which enables him the longer to continue his several progressions of the saw. Moxon's Mech. Exer.
The roach is a leather-mouth'd fish, and has saw like teeth in his throat. Walton's Angler.
Then saw were tooth'd, and sounding axes made. Dryden.
If they cannot cut,
His saw are toothless, and his hatchets lead. Pope.
2. [Saxo, Sax. sæge, Dut.] A saying; a sentence; a proverb.
Good king, that must approve the common saw:
Thou out of heaven's benediction com'st
To the warm sun! Shakespeare's King Lear.
From the table of my memory
I'll wipe away all saws of books. Shakespeare, Hamlet.
His weapons, holy saws of sacred writ;
His study in his tilt-yard. Shakespeare, Henry VI.
Strict age and four severity,
With their grave saws in slumber lie. Milton.

A carpenter, after he hath sawn down a tree, and wrought it handiome, sets it in a wall. Wisd. xiii. 11.
It is an incalency, from a swift motion, such as that of running, threshing, or sawing. Ray on the Creation.
If I cut my finger, I shall as certainly feel pain as if my soul was co-extended with the limb, and had a piece of it sawn through. Collier.
Master-workmen, when they direct any of their underlings to saw a piece of stuff, have several phrases for the sawing of it: they seldom say, saw the piece of stuff; but, draw the saw through it; give the piece of stuff a kerf. Moxon.
It is the carpenters work to hew the timber, saw it out, and frame it. Mortimer.
SA'WDUST. n. f. [saw and dust.] Dust made by the attrition of the saw.
If the membrane be fouled by the sawdust of the bone, wipe it off with a sponge. Wifeman's Surgery.

They colour it by laying it in a sawpit that hath oak saw- dust therein. Mortimer's Husbandry.
SAW-WORT. n. f. [serratula, Latin.] A plant.
It hath a stoculose flower, consisting of several florets divided into many parts, resting on the embryo, and contained in a scaly empalement, like the greater centaury, from which this differs in having smaller heads, and from the knapweed in having the borders of the leaves cut into small sharp segments, resembling the teeth of a saw. Miller.
SAW-WREST. n. f. [saw and wrest.] A sort of tool.
With the saw-wrest they set the teeth of the saw; that is, they put one of the notches of the wrest between the first two teeth on the blade of the saw, and then turn the handle horizontally a little about upon the notch towards the end of the saw; and that at once turns the first tooth somewhat towards you, and the second tooth from you. Moxon's Mech. Exer.
SA'WER. n. f. [scieur, French; from saw.] One whose trade SA'WYER. } is to saw timber into boards or beams.
The pit-saw is used by joiners, when what they have to do may be as soon done at home as send it to the sawyers. Moxon.
SA'XIFRAGE. n. f. [saxifraga, Fr. saxifraga, Lat.] A plant.
The flower consists of several leaves placed orbicularly, which expand in form of a rose, out of whose multifid flower-cup rises the pointal, which commonly ends in two horns, and afterward turns, together with the flower-cup, into a roundish fruit, which has likewise two horns and two cells, which are full of small seeds. Miller.
Saxifraga, quasi saxum frangens, to break the stone, is applicable to any thing having this property; but is a term most commonly given to a plant, from an opinion of its medicinal virtues to this effect. Quincy.
SA'XIFRAGE Meadow. n. f. [silamum, Latin.] A plant.
It hath a rose and umbellated flower, consisting of several leaves placed circularly, and resting upon the empalement, which afterward becomes a fruit composed of two short channelled seeds.
SA'XIFRAGOUS. adj. [saxum and frago, Latin.] Dissolvent of the stone.
Because goat's blood was found an excellent medicine for the stone, it might be conceived to be able to break a diamond; and so it came to be ordered that the goats should be fed on saxi- fragous herbs, and such as are conceived of power to break the stone. Brown's Vulgar Errors.
To SAY. v. a. preter. said. [recgan, Saxon; seggen, Dutch.]
1. To speak; to utter in words; to tell.
Say it out, Diggon, for whatever it might;
For nought but well might him betight,
He is so meek. Spenser.
In this slumbry agitation what have you heard her say? Shak.
Speak unto Solomon; for he will not say thee nay. 1 Kings.
2. To allege.
After all can be said against a thing, this will still be true, that many things possibly are, which we know not of. Tillot.
In vain shall we attempt to justify ourselves, as the rich young man in the gospel did, by appealing to the great duties of the law; unless we can say somewhat more, even that we have been liberal in our distributions to the poor. Atterbury.
3. To tell in any manner.
With flying speed, and seeming great pretence, Came messenger with letters which his message said. F. Qu.
To SAY. v. n.

'Twixt his stretch'd footing and the scaffoldage. Shakespeare.
SCA'FFOLDING. n. f. [from scaffold.]
1. Temporary frames or stages.
What are riches, empire, power,
But steps by which we climb to rise and reach
Our wish; and, that obtain'd, down with the scaffolding
Of sceptres and of thrones.
Sicknels, contributing no less than old age to the shaking down this scaffolding of the body, may discover the inward structure. Pope.
2. Building slightly erected.
Send forth your lab'ring thought;
Let it return with empty notions fraught,
Of airy columns every moment broke,
Of circling whirlpools, and of spheres of smoke:
Yet this solution but once more affords
New change of terms and scaffolding of words. Prior.
SCALA'DE. n. f. [French; scalada, Spanish, from scala, Latin, scala, do. } a ladder.] A ladder given to a place by raising ladders against the walls.
What can be more strange than that we should within two months have won one town of importance by scalade, battered and assaulted another, and overthrow great forces in the field? Bacon.

Do scald like molten lead. Shakespeare. King Lear.
Here the blue flames of scalding brimstone fall,
Involving swiftly in one ruin all. Cowley.
Scalding tears wore a channel where they fell. Dryden.
That I grieve, 'tis true;
But 'tis a grief of fury, not despair!
And if a manly drop or two fall down,
It scalds along my cheeks, like the greenwood,
That, spitt'ring in the flame, works outward into tears. Dryden's Cleomenes.
It depends not on his will to persuade himself, that what actually scalds him, feels cold. Locke.
Has he any other wound about him, except the accidental scaldings of his woe? Addison.
Warm cataplasms discuss; but scalding hot may confirm the tumour: heat, in general, doth not resolve and attenuate the juices of a human body; for too great heat will produce concretions. Arbutnot on Aliments.
The best thing we can do is to scald him;
For which operation there's nothing more proper
Than the liquor he deals in, his own melted copper. Swift.
2. A provincial phrase in husbandry.
In Oxfordshire the four land they follow when the sun is pretty high, which they call a scalding fallow. Mortimer.

Your vows to her and me, put in two scales,
Will even weigh, and both as light as tales. Shakespeare.
Here's an equivocator, that could swear, in both the scales, against either scale; who committed treason enough for God's sake, yet could not equivocate to heaven. Shakespeare. Macbeth.
Long time in even scale
The battle hung. Milton's Paradi. Lost, b. vi.
The world's scales are even; what the main
In one place gets, another quits again. Cleaveland.
The scales are turn'd, her kindness weighs no more Now than my woe. Waller.
In full assemblies let the crowd prevail;
I weigh no merit by the common scale,
The conscience is the test. Dryden.
If we consider the dignity of an intelligent being, and put that in the scales against brute inanimate matter, we may affirm, without overvaluing human nature, that the soul of one virtuous and religious man is of greater worth and excellency than the sun and his planets. Bentley's Sermons.
2. The sign Libra in the Zodiac.
Juno pours out the urn, and Vulcan claims
The scales, as the just product of his flames. Crocut.
3. [Escaille, French; squama, Latin.] The small shells or crusts which lying one over another make the coats of fishes.
He puts him on a coat of mail,

SCATH. n. f. [from scath, Saxon.] Waste; damage; mischief; depopulation. Scath in Scotland denotes spoil or damage: as, he bears the scath and the scorn. A proverb.

She suborned hath
This crafty messenger, with letters vain,
To work new woe and unprovided scath. Fairy Queen.

The ear that budded fair is burnt and blasted,
And all my hoped gain is turn'd to scath. Spenser.

He bore a pitiful mind against king Edward, doing him all the scath that he could, and annoying his territories. Spenser.

My proud one doth work the greater scath,
Through sweet allurements of her lovely hue. Spenser.

They placed them in Rhodes, where daily doing great scath to the Turk, the great warrior Soliman, with a mighty army, so overlaid them, that he won the island from them. Knolles.

Still preserv'd from danger, harm, and scath,
By many a sea and many an unknown shore. Fairfax.

SCATHFUL. adj. [from scath.] Mischievous; destructive.

A bawling vessel was he captain of,
For shallow draught, and bulk unprizable,
With which such scathful grapple did he make,
That very envy, and the tongue of loss,
Cried fame and honour on him. Shakespeare. Twelfth Night.

To SCATTER. v. a. [from scatter, Saxon; scatteren, Dutch.]

1. To throw loosely about; to sprinkle.

Where cattle pastur'd late, now scatter'd lies
With carcasses and arms th' enflam'd field. Milton.

The progress of the found, and the scenary of the bordering regions, are imitated from A. n. vii. on the founding the horn of Aleto. Pope.

3. The disposition and consecution of the scenes of a play.

To make a more perfect model of a picture, is in the language of poets, to draw up the scenary of a play. Dryden.

SCENE. n. f. [from scena, Latin; scène, French.]

1. The stage; the theatre of dramatick poetry.

Cedar and pine, and fir and branching palm,
A sylvan scene; and as the ranks ascend Shade above shade, a woody theatre
Of stateliest view. Milton.

2. The general appearance of any action; the whole contexture of objects; a display; a series; a regular disposition.

Now prepare thee for another scene. Milton.

A mute scene of sorrow, mixt with fear;
Still on the table lay the unfinished cheer. Dryden.

A larger scene of action is display'd,
And, rising hence, a greater work is weigh'd. Dryden.

Ev'ry fev'ral place must be
A scene of triumph and revenge to me. Dryden.

When rising Spring adorns the mead,
A charming scene of nature is display'd. Dryden.

Eternity! thou pleasing, dreadful thought!
Through what variety of untry'd beings,
Through what new scenes and changes must we pass! Addison.

About eight miles distance from Naples lies a very noble scene of antiquities: what they call Virgil's tomb is the first. Addison on Italy.

Say, shepherd, say, are these reflections true?
Or was it but the woman's fear that drew
This cruel scene, unjust to love and you. Prior.

3. Part of a play.

It shall be so my care
To have you royally appointed, as if The scene you play were mine. Shakespeare. Winter's Tale.

Our author would excuse these youthful scenes
Begotten at his entrance. Granville.

4. So much of an act of a play as passes between the same persons in the same place.

If his characters were good,
The scenar entire, and freed from noise and blood,
The action great, yet circumscrib'd by time,
The words not forc'd, but sliding into rhyme,
He thought, in hitting these, his business done. Dryden.

5. The place represented by the stage.

The king is set from London, and the scene
Is now transported to Southampton. Shakespeare. Hen. V.

6. The hanging of the theatre adapted to the play.

The alteration of scenes feeds and relieves the eye, before it be full of the same object. Bacon.

A hunted hare treads back her mazes, crosses and confounds her former track, and uses all possible methods to divert the scent. Att's Improvement of the Mind.

2. The object of smell; odour good or bad.

Belman cried upon it at the meekest loss,
And twice to-day pick'd out the dullest scent. Shakespeare.

The plague, they report, hath a scent of the smell of a melon apple. Bacon.

Good earth, newly turned up, hath a freshness and good scent. Bacon.

Good scents do purify the brain,
Awake the fancy, and the wits refine. Davies.

Partake
The season, prime for sweetest scents and airs. Milton.

Exulting, 'till he finds their nobler sense
Their disproportion'd speed does recompense;
Then curses his conspiring feet, whose scent
Betrays that safety which their swiftness lent. Denham.

Cheerful health,
His duteous handmaid, through the air improv'd,
With lavish hand diffuses scents ambrosial. Prior.

3. Chace followed by the smell.

He gained the observations of innumerable ages, and travelled upon the same scent into Ethiopia. Temple.

SCH

To SCENT. v. a. [from the noun.]
 1. To smell; to perceive by the nose.
 So scented the grim feature, and upturn'd
 His nostrils wide into the murky air,
 Sagacious of his quarry from so far. Milton's Par. Lost.
 2. To perfume; or to imbue with odour good or bad.
 Balm, from a silver box distill'd around,
 Shall all bedew the roots, and scent the sacred ground. Dryd.
 He spies
 His op'ning hounds, and now he hears their cries;
 A gen'rous pack, or to maintain the chace,
 Or snuff the vapour from the scented grafs. Addison.
 SCENTLESS. adj. [from scnt.] Inodorous; having no smell.
 SCÉPTRE. n. f. [from scptum, Latin; scptre, Fr.] The ensign of royalty born in the hand.
 Nor shall proud Lancaster usurp my right,
 Nor hold the sceptre in his childish fist. Shak. Henry VI.
 Thou sceptre's heir,
 That thus affect'st a sheephook. Shakespeare.
 How, best of kings, do'st thou a sceptre bear!
 How, best of poets, do'st thou laurel wear!
 But two things rare the fates had in their store,
 And gave thee both, to shew they could no more. B. Johnf.
 The sceptre bearers lent
 Their tree attendance. Chapman's Odyssey.
 The parliament prefented those acts which were prepared by them to the royal sceptre, in which were some laws restrain-ing the extravagant power of the nobility. Clarendon.
 The court of Rome has, in other instances, so well attested its good managery, that it is not credible crowns and sceptres are conferred gratis. Decay of Piety.
 SCÉPTRED. adj. [from sceptre.] Bearing a sceptre.
 The sceptred heralds call
 To council, in the city-gates. Milton's Paradise Lost.
 To Britain's queen the scepter'd suppliant bends,
 To her his crowns and infant race commends. Tickel.

 SCÉDULE. n. f. [from scdula, Latin; scdula, French.]
 1. A small scroll.
 The first published schedules being brought to a grave knight, he read over an unfavoury sentence or two, and delivered back the libel. Hooker.
 All ill, which all Prophets or poets spake, and all which shall B' annex'd in schedules unto this by me,
 Fall on that man. Donne.
 2. A little inventory.
 I will give out schedules of my beauty: it shall be invento-ried, and every particle and utensil label'd to my will. Shak.
 SCHEMATISM. n. f. [from σχηματισμός.] Combination of the aspects of heavenly bodies; particular form or disposition of a thing.
 Every particle of matter, whatever form or schematism it puts on, must in all conditions be equally extended, and therefore take up the same room. Creech.
 SCHEMATIST. n. f. [from scheme.] A projector; one given to forming schemes.
 SCHEMÉ. n. f. [from σχῆμα.]
 1. A plan; a combination of various things into one view, design, or purpose; a system.
 Were our senses made much quicker, the appearance and outward scheme of things would have quite another face to us, and be inconsistent with our well being. Locke.
 We shall never be able to give ourselves a satisfactory account of the divine conduct, without forming such a scheme of things as shall at once take in time and eternity. Atterbury.
 2. A project; a contrivance; a design.
 The haughty monarch was laying schemes for suppressing the ancient liberties, and removing the ancient boundaries of kingdoms. Atterbury's Sermons.
 He forms the well-concerted scheme of mischief;
 'Tis fix'd, 'tis done, and both are doom'd to death. Rowe.
 The stoical scheme of supplying our wants by lopping of our desires, is like cutting off our feet when we want shoes. Swift.
 3. A representation of the aspects of the celestial bodies; any lineal or mathematical diagram.
 It hath embroiled the endeavours of astrology in the erection of schemes, and the judgment of death and diseases.
Brown's Vulgar Errors.
 It is a scheme and face of heaven,
 As th' aspects are dispos'd this even. Hudibras.
 SCHEMER. n. f. [from scheme.] A projector; a contriver.
 SCHE'SIS. n. f. [from σχῆσις.] An habitude; state of any thing with respect to other things.
 If that mind which has exist'ing in itself from all eternity all the simple essences of things, and consequently all their possible schemes or habitudes, should ever change, there would arise a new schesis in the mind, which is contrary to the supposition. Norris.
 SCIRRHOUS. n. f. [from scirrh, French. This should be written scir- rhous, not merely because it comes from σκιρρῶς, but because it in English has before e and i the sound of f. See SKEPTICK.]

 An indurated gland.
 Any of these three may degenerate into a scirrhous, and that scirrhous into a cancer. Wise man of Tumour.
 SCIRRHOUS. adj. [from scirrhous.] Having a gland indurated.
 How they are to be treated when they are stumous, scir- rhous, or cancerous, you may see. Wise man.
 SCIRRHOUSITY. n. f. [from scirrhous.] An induration of the glands.
 The difficulty of breathing, occasioned by scirrhosities of the glands, is not to be cured. Arbuthnot on Diet.
 SCHISM. n. f. [from σχίσμα; schisme, Fr.] A separation or division in the church of God.
 Set bounds to our passions by reason, to our errors by truth, and to our schisms by charity. King Charles.
 Oppose schisms by unity, hypocritise by sober piety, and debauchery by temperance. Spratt's Sermon.
 When a schism is once spread, there grows at length a dispute which are the schismatics: in the sense of the law the schism lies on that side which opposes itself to the religion of the state. Swift.
 SCHISMATICAL. adj. [from schismaticus, Fr. from schismatic.] Implying schism; practising schism.
 By these tumults all factions, seditions, and schismatical proposals against government, ecclesiastical and civil, must be backed. King Charles.
 Here bare anathema's fall but like so many bruta fulmina upon the obdurate and schismatical, who are like to think themselves shrewdly hurt by being cut off from that body which they chuse not to be of, and so being punished into a quiet enjoyment of their beloved separation. South's Sermon.
 SCHISMATICALITY. adv. [from schismatical.] In a schismatical manner.
 SCHISMATICK. n. f. [from schism.] One who separates from the true church.
 No known heretic nor schismatic should be suffered to go into those countries. Bacon.
 Thus you behold the schismatic bravado's:
 Wild peaks in squibs, and Calamy in granado's. Bulwer.
 The schismatic united in a solemn league and covenant to alter the whole system of spiritual government. Swift.
 To SCHISMATIZE. v. a. [from schism.] To commit the crime of schism; to make a breach in the communion of the church.
 SCHOLAR. n. f. [from scholaris, Latin; ecolier, French.]
 1. One who learns of a master; a disciple.
 Many times that which defereth approbation would hardly find favour, if they which propose it were not to profess themselves scholars, and followers of the ancients. Hooker.
 The scholars of the Stagyrite,
 Who for the old opinion fight,
 Would make their modern friends confess
 The difference but from more to less. Prior.
 2. A man of letters.
 This same scholar's fate, res angusta domi, hinders the promoting of learning. Wilkins's Math. Magic.
 To watch occasions to correct others in their discourse, and not slip any opportunity of shewing their talents, scholars are most blamed for. Locke.
 3. A pedant; a man of books.
 To spend too much time in studies, is sloth; to make judgment wholly by their rules, is the humour of a scholar: they perfect nature, and are perfected by experience. Bacon.
 4. One who has a lettered education.
 My cousin William is become a good scholar: he is at Oxford still, is he not? Shakespeare. Henry VI.
 SCHOLARSHIP. n. f. [from scholar.]
 1. Learning; literature; knowledge.
 It pities my very heart to think that a man of my master's understanding, and great scholarship, who had a book of his own in print, should talk so outrageously. Pope.
 2. Literary education.
 This place should be school and university, not needing a remove to any other house of scholarship. Newton.
 3. Exhibition or maintenance for a scholar. Ainsworth.
 SCHOLASTICAL. adj. [from scholasticus, Latin.] Belonging to a scholar or school.
 SCHOLASTICALLY. adv. [from scholastic.] According to the niceties or method of the schools.
 No moralists or casuists, that treat scholastically of justice, but treat of gratitude, under that general head, as a part of
 it. South's Sermons.
 SCHOLASTICK. adj. [from schola, Latin; scholastique, French.]
 1. Pertaining to the school; practised in schools.
 I would render this intelligible to every rational man, however little versed in scholastic learning. Digby on Bodet.
Scholastic education, like a trade, does fix a man in a particular way, that he is not fit to judge of any thing that lies out of that way. Burnet's Theory of the Earth.
 2. Belonging to the school; suitable to the school; pedantic; needlessly subtle. The

SCH

The favour of proposing there, in convenient sort, whatsoever ye can object, which thing I have known them to grant of scholastic courtesy unto strangers, never hath nor ever will be denied you. Hooker.
 Sir Francis Bacon was wont to say, that those who left useful studies for useless scholastic speculations, were like the Olympick gamblers, who abstained from necessary labours, that they might be fit for such as were not so. Bacon.
 Both sides charge the other with idolatry, and that is a matter of confidence, and not a scholastic nicety. Stillingfleet.
 SCHOLAST. n. f. [from scholaste, French; scholastes, Latin.] A writer of explanatory notes.
 The title of this fadyr, in some ancient manuscripts, was the reproach of idleness; though in others of the scholastic's inscribed against the luxury of the rich. Dryden.
 What Gellius or Stobæus cook'd before,
 Or chew'd by blind o'd scholastic o'er and o'er. Dunciad.
 SCHOLION. n. f. [Latin.] A note; an explanatory observation.
 Hereunto have I added a certain gloss or scholion, for the explication of old words, and harder phrases, which manner of glossing and commenting will seem strange in our language. Spenser.
 Some cast all their metaphysical and moral learning into the method of mathematicians, and bring every thing relating to those abstracted or practical sciences under theorems, problems, postulates, scholiums, and corollaries. Watts.
 SCHOLY. n. f. [from scholæ, Fr. scholium, Latin.] An explanatory note. This word, with the verb following, is, I fancy, peculiar to the learned Hooker.
 He therefore, which made us to live, hath also taught us to pray, to the end, that speaking unto the Father in the Son's own precept form, without scholy or gloss of ours, we may be sure that we utter nothing which God will deny. Hooker.
 That scholy had need of a very favourable reader, and a tractable, that should think it plain construction, when to be commanded in the word, and grounded upon the word, are made all one. Hooker.
 To SCHOLY. v. n. [from the noun.] To write expositions.
 The preacher should want a text, whereupon to scholy. Hooker.
 SCHOOL. n. f. [from schola, Latin; ecole, French.]
 1. A house of discipline and instruction.
 Their age the fame, their inclinations too,
 And bred together in one school they grew. Dryden.
 2. A place of literary education.
 My end being private, I have not express'd my conceptions in the language of the schools. Digby.
 Writers on that subject have turned it into a composition of hard words, trifles, and subtilties, for the mere use of the schools, and that only to amuse men with empty sounds. Watts.
 3. A state of instruction.
 The calf breed to the rural trade,
 Set him betimes to school, and let him be Instructed there in rules of husbandry. Dryden.
 4. System of doctrine as delivered by particular teachers.
 No craz'd brain could ever yet propound,
 Touching the soul, so vain and fond a thought;
 But some among these matters have been found,
 Which in their schools the self-same thing had taught. Davies.
 Let no man be less confident in his faith, concerning the great blessings God designs in these divine mysteries, by reason of any difference in the several schools of Christians, concerning the consequent blessings thereof. Taylor.
 5. The age of the church, and form of theology succeeding that of the fathers.
 The first principles of Christian religion should not be farced with school points and private tenets. Sanderfon.
 A man may find an infinite number of propositions in books of metaphysics, school divinity, and natural philosophy, and know as little of God, spirits, or bodies, as he did before. Locke.
 To SCHOOL. v. a. [from the noun.]
 1. To instruct; to train.
 Una her besought to be so good
 As in her virtuous rules to school her knight. Fo. Queen.
 He's gentle, never school'd, and yet learned. Shakespeare.
 2. To teach with superiority; to tutor.
 You shall go with me;
 I have some private schooling for you both. Shakespeare.
 Cousin, school yourself; but for your husband,
 He's noble, wife, judicious. Shakespeare. Macbeth.
School your child,
 And ask why God's anointed he revild.
 If this be schooling, 'tis well for the considerer: I'll engage that no adversary of his shall in this sense ever school him. Att.
 SCHOOLBOY. n. f. [from school and boy.] A boy that is in his rudiments at school.
 Schoolboys tears take up
 The glasse of my light. Shakespeare.
 He grins, smacks, shrugs, and such an itch endures,
 As 'prentices or schoolboys, which do know
 Of some gay sport abroad, yet dare not go. Donne.

SCI

A schoolboy brought his mother a book he had stolen. L'Estr.
 Once he had heard a schoolboy tell,
 How Semel of mortal race

 SCHOOLDAY. n. f. [from school and day.] Age in which youth is sent to school.
 Is all forgot?
 All school days friendship, childhood, innocence? Shakespeare.
 SCHOOLFELLOW. n. f. [from school and fellow.] One bred at the same school.
 Thy flatter'ing method on the youth pursue;
 Join'd with his schoolfellow by two and two:
 Persuade them first to lead an empty wheel,
 In length of time produce the lab'ring yoke. Dryden.
 The emulation of schoolfellows often puts life and industry into young lads. Locke.
 SCHOOLHOUSE. n. f. [from school and house.] House of discipline and instruction.
 Fair Una 'gan Fidelia fair request,
 To have her knight unto her schoolhouse plac'd. Spenser.
 SCHOOLMAN. n. f. [from school and man.]
 1. One versed in the niceties and subtilties of academical disputation.
 The king, though no good schoolman, converted one of them by dispute. Bacon.
 Unlearn'd, he knew no schoolman's subtle art;
 No language, but the language of the heart. Pope.
 2. One skilled in the divinity of the school.
 If a man's wit be not apt to distinguish or find differences, let him study the schoolmen. Bacon.
 To schoolmen I bequeath my doubtfulness,
 My sickness to physicians. Donne.
 Men of nice palates could not relish Aristotle, as he was dress'd up by the schoolmen. Baker.
 Let subtle schoolmen teach these fiends to fight,
 More studious to divide than to unite. Pope.
 SCHOOLMASTER. n. f. [from school and master.] One who prefaces and teaches in a school.
 I, thy schoolmaster, have made thee more profit
 Than other princes can, that have more time
 For vainer hours, and tutors not so careful. Shakespeare.
 Adrian VI. was sometime schoolmaster to Charles V. Kneller.
 The ancient sophists and rhetoricians lived 'till they were an hundred years old; and so likewise did many of the grammarians and schoolmasters, as Orbilius. Bacon.
 A father may see his children taught, though he himself does not turn schoolmaster. South's Sermons.
 SCHOOLMISTRESS. n. f. [from school and mistress.] A woman who governs a school.
 Such precepts I have selected from the most considerable which we have received from nature, that exact schoolmistress.
Dryden's Duplejoy.
 My schoolmistress, like a vixen Turk,
 Maintains her lazy husband. Gay's What d'ye Call it.
 SCHREIGHT. n. f. A fish. Ainsworth.
 SCIAGRAPHY. n. f. [from sciagraphia, French; σκιαγραφία.] This should be written with a k.
 1. [In architecture.] The profile or section of a building, to shew the inside thereof. Bailey.
 2. [In astronomy.] The art of finding the hour of the day or night by the shadow of the sun, moon, or stars. Bailey.
 SCIAATHERICAL. adj. [from sciatherique, Fr. σκιαθηρικός.] Belonging to a sun-dial. DiD. This should be written sciatherical.
 There were also, from great antiquity, sciatherical or sundials, by the shadow of a stile or gnomon denoting the hours of the day; an invention ascribed unto Anaximenes by Pliny.
 SCIA'TICA. n. f. [from sciaticque, French; ischiadica passio, Latin.]
 SCIA'TICK. } The hip gout.
 Which of your hips has the most profound sciatica? Shakespeare.
 Thou cold sciatica,
 Cripple our senators, that their limbs may halt
 As lamely as their manners. Shakespeare. Timon.
 The Scythians, using continual riding, were generally mof-lested with the sciatica, or hip gout. Brown's Vulg. Err.
 Rack'd with sciatick, martyr'd with the stone,
 Will any mortal let himself alone? Pope.
 SCIA'TICAL. adj. [from sciatica.] Afflicting the hip.
 In obstinate sciatic pains, blistering and cauteries have been found effectual. Arbuthnot.
 SCIENCE. n. f. [from science, French; scientia, Latin.]
 1. Knowledge.
 If we conceive God's fight or science, before the creation of the world, to be extended to all and every part of the world, seeing every thing as it is, his prescience or foresight of any action of mine, or rather his science or fight, from all eternity, lays no necessity on any thing to come to pass, any more than my seeing the sun move hath to do in the moving of it. Hamm.
 2. Certainty grounded on demonstration.
 So you arrive at truth, though not at science. Berkley.

SCISSIBLE. adj. [from scissus, Latin.] Capable of being divided smoothly by a sharp edge.

The differences of imprefible and not imprefible, scissible and not scissible, and many other passions of matter, are plebeian notions.

SCISSILE. adj. [scissile, Fr. scissilis, Latin.] Capable of being cut or divided smoothly by a sharp edge.

Animal fat is sort of amphibious substance, scissile like a solid, and releasable by heat.

SCISSON. n. f. [scisson, French; scisso, Latin.] The act of cutting.

Nerves may be wounded by scission or puncture: the former way they are usually cut through, and wholly cease from action.

SCISSOR. n. f. [This word is variously written, as it is supposed to be derived by different writers; of whom some write cissors, from caudo, or incido; others scissors, from scindo; and some cisar, cizars, or scissars, cissans, Fr.] A small pair of sheers, or blades moveable on a pivot, and intercepting the thing to be cut.

His beard they have fing'd off with brands of fire; And ever, as it blaz'd, they threw on him Great pails of puddled mire to quench the hair: My master preaches patience to him, and the while His man with scissors nicks him for a fool.

Wanting the scissors, with these hands I'll tear, If that obstruct my flight, this load of hair.

When the lawyers and tradesmen brought extravagant bills, fir Roger wore a pair of scissors in his pocket, with which he would fainp a quarter of a yard off nicely.

SCISSURE. n. f. [scissum, Latin.] A crack; a rent; a fissure.

The breach seems like the scissures and ruptures of an earthquake, and threatens to swallow all that attempt to close it, and reserves its cure only for omnipotence.

SCLEROTICK. adj. [scleroticus, Fr. σκληρός, Gr.] Hard: an epithet of one of the coats of the eye.

The ligaments observed in the inside of the sclerotic tunics of the eye, serve inflead of a muscle, by their contraction, to alter the figure of the eye.

SCLEOTICKS. n. f. [from the adjective.] Medicines which harden and consolidate the parts they are applied to.

TO SCOT. v. a. To sap a wheel by putting a flange to.

TO SCOTCH. v. a. To cut wood under it before.

TO SCOFF. v. n. [schoppen, Dutch.] To treat with insolent ridicule; to treat with contemptuous language.

Of two noblemen of the West of England, the one was given to scoff, but kept ever royal cheer in his house; the other would alk of those that had been at his table, Tell truly, was there never a flout or dry blow given?

There is no greater argument of the high and inconsiderate perfon, than prophaneity to scoff at religion.

Such is love,

And such the laws of his fantastick empire, The wanton boy delights to bend the mighty, And scuffs at the vain wisdom of the wife.

SCOFF. n. f. [from the verb.] Contemptuous ridicule; expression of scorn; contemptuous language.

Our answer therefore to their reasons is no; to their scoff, nothing.

With scoffs and scorn, and contemptuous taunts, In open market-place produc'd they me.

How could him furrender up their reason to flattery, more abusive and reproachful than the rudest scoffs and the sharpest invectives?

Some little souls, that have got a flattering of astronomy or chemistry, for want of a due acquaintance with other sciences, make a scoff at them all, in comparison of their favourite science.

SCOFFER. n. f. [from scoff.] Insolent ridiculer; fustey scorn; contemptuous reproacher.

I must tell you friendly in your ear, Sell when you can; you are not for all markets: Cry the man mercy, love him, take his offer; Foul is most foul, being found to be a scoffer.

Divers have herded themselves amongst these profane scuffers, not that they are convinced by their reasons, but terrified by their contumelies.

Consider what the apostle tells these scuffers they were ignorant of, not that there was a deluge; but he tells them, that they were ignorant that the heavens and the earth of old were so and so confuted.

Aristotle applied this hemistick scuffling to the sycophants at Athens.

To SCOLD. v. n. [scholden, Dutch.] To quarrel clamorously and rudely.

Pardon me, 'tis the first time that ever I'm forc'd to scold.

Or scops in circling theatres the vale. Pope.

SCOOPER. n. f. [from scop.] One who scoops.

SCOPE. n. f. [scopus, Latin.]

1. Aim; intention; drift.

Your scope is as mine own,
So to inform or qualify the laws,
As to your foul feels good. Shak. Meas. for Measure.

His coming hither hath no farther scope
Than for his lineal royalties, and to beg Infranchisement immediate on his knees. Shak. R. II.

Had the whole scope of the author been answerable to his title, he would have only undertaken to prove what every man is convinced of; but the drift of the pamphlet is to stir up our compassion towards the rebels. Addison's Freeholders.

2. Thing aimed at; mark; final end.

The scope of all their pleading against man's authority is to overthrow such laws and constitutions in the church, as depending thereupon, if they should therefore be taken away, would leave neither face nor memory of church to continue long in the world. Hooker.

Now was time
To aim their counsels to the fairest scope. Hubbard's Tale.

We should impute the war to the scope at which it aimeth. Raleigh.

He, in what he counsels, and in what excels,
Mistrustful, grounds his courage on despair;
And utter dissolution, as the scope Milton's Paradise Lost.

Of all his aim.

3. Room; space; amplitude of intellectual view.

An heroic poet is not tied to a bare representation of what is true, but that he might let himself loose to visionary objects, which may give him a freer scope for imagination. Dryden.

These theorems being admitted into optics, there would be scope enough of handling that science volitionally, after a new manner; not only by teaching those things which tend to the perfection of vision, but also by determining mathematically all kinds of phenomena of colours which could be produced by refraction. Newton's Opt.

4. Liberty; freedom from restraint.

If this constrain them to grant that their axiom is not to take any place, save in those things only where the church hath larger scope, it reſteth that they search out some stronger reason. Hooker.

Ah, cut my lace aſunder,
That my pent heart may have some scope to beat,
Or else I ſwoon with this dead killing news. Shakelpeare.

5. Liberty beyond juſt limits; licence.

Sith 'twas my fault to give the people scope,
'Twould be my tyranny to ſtrike and gall them,
For what I bid them do. Shakelpeare.

Being moody, give him line and scope,
'Till that his paſſions, like a whale on ground, Confound themſelves with working. Shakelſp. Henry IV.

6. Act of riot; ſally.

As ſureſt is the father of much faſt,
So every ſcope, by the immoderate uſe,
Turns to reſtraint. Shakelpeare.

7. Extended quantity.

The ſcopes of land granted to the firſt adventurers were too large, and the liberties and royalties were too great for ſubjects. Davies on Ireland.

8. It is out of uſe, except in the three firſt ſenſes.

SCOPULOUS. adj. [scopulus, Latin.] Full of rocks. Diſc.

SCORBUICK. f. Diseased with the fever.

A perſon about forty, of a full and ſcorbutical body, having broke her ſkin, endeavour'd the curing of it; but obſerving the ulcer ſanious, I propoſed diſſection. Wiſeman.

Violent purging hurts ſcorbutick conſtitutions; lenitive ſubſtances relieve. Aſchbath.

SCORBUICALLY. adv. [from ſcorbutical.] With tendency to the fever; in the fever.

A woman of forty, ſcorbutically and hydropically affected, having a ſordid ulcer, put herſelf into my hand. Wiſeman.

SCORE. n. f. This word is uſed by Spenser for diſcourſe, or power of reaſon.

Lively vigour reſted in his mind,
And recompenſed him with a better ſcore;
Weak body well is chang'd for mind's redoubled force. F. 2.

To SCORCH. v. a. [ſcorneb, Saxon, burn.]

1. To burn ſuperficially.

Fire ſcorcheth in froſty weather. Bacon's Nat. Hiſtory.

The ladies gasp'd, and ſcarcely cou'd reſpire;
The breath they drew, no longer air, but fire;
The fainty knights were ſcorch'd. Dryden.

2. To burn.

Power was given to ſcorch men with fire. Rev. xvi. 8.

The ſmoke that left thee by the cooling ſteam,
Safe from ſun's heat; but ſcorch'd with beauty's beam. Fairf.

You

SCO

You look with such contempt on pain,
That languishing you conquer more:
So lightnings which in storms appear,
Scorch more than when the skies are clear.
The same beams that shine, scorch too.
I rave,
And, like a giddy bird in dead of night,
Fly round the fire that scorches me to death.
He from whom the nations should receive Justice and freedom, lies himself a slave;
Tortur'd by cruel change of wild desires,
Lash'd by mad rage, and scorch'd by brutal fires.
To SCORCH. v. n. To be burnt superficially; to be dried up.
To see the chariot of the sun
So near the scorching country run.
The love was made in Autumn, and the hunting followed properly, when the heats of that scorching country were declining.
Scatter a little mungy straw or fern amongst your feedings, to prevent the roots from scorching, and to receive the moisture that falls.

tally: thou hast caused printing to be used. Shaksp. Henry VI.
2. A line drawn.
3. An account, which, when writing was less common, was kept by marks on tallies, or by lines of chalk.
He's worth no more:
They say he parted well, and paid his score. Shaksp. Macb.
Does not the air feed the flame? And does not the flame warm and enlighten the air? Does not the earth quit scores with all the elements, in the fruits that issue from it. South.
4. Account kept of something past.
Universal deluges have swept all away, except two or three persons who begun the world again upon a new score. Tillotson.
5. Debt imputed.
That thou do'st love her, strikes some scores away
From the great compt. Shaksp. All's well that ends well.
He can win widows and pay scores,
Out-flatter favourites, or out-lie either Jovius or Surlus, or both together. Donne.
6. Reason; motive.
The knight, upon the fore-nam'd score,
In quest of Sidrophel advancing,
Was now in prospect of the mansion. Hudibras.
He had been prentice to a brewer,
But left the trade, as many more
Have lately done on the same score. Hudibras.
A lion, that had got a polittick fit of sickness, wrote the fox word how glad he should be of his company, upon the score of ancient friendship. L'Estrange.
If your terms are moderate, we'll never break off upon that score. Collier on Pride.
7. Sake; account; reason referred to some one.
You act your kindness on Cydaria's score. Dryden.
Kings in Greece were depoted by their people upon the score of their arbitrary proceedings. Swift.

1. To set down as a debt.
Madam, I know when Instead of five you scor'd me ten. Swift.
2. To impute; to charge.
Your follies and debauches change
With such a whirl, the poets of your age
Are tir'd, and cannot score 'em on the stage;
Unless each vice in short-hand they indite,
Ev'n as notches prentices whole sermons write. Dryden.
3. To mark by a line.
Hast thou appointed where the moon should rise,
And with her purple light adorn the skies?
Scor'd out the bounded fun's oblique ways,
That he on all might spread his equal rays? Sandys.
SCORIA. n. f. [Latin.] Dross; recrement.
The scoria, or vitrified part, which most metals, when heated or melted, do continually protrude to the surface, and which, by covering the metals in form of a thin glassy skin, causes these colours, is much denser than water. Newt. Opt.
SCORIOUS. adj. [from scoria, Lat.] Drossy; recrementitious.
By the fire they emit many drossy and scorious parts. Brown.

God. Job xvi. 20.
To SCORN. v. n. To scoff.
He said mine eyes were black, and my hair black;
And now, I am remember'd, scorn'd at me. Shaksp. Lear.
Our foul is filled with the scorning of those that are at ease, and with the contempt of the proud. Pf. cxliii. 4.
I've seen the morning's lovely ray
Hover o'er the new-born day,
With rosy wings so richly bright,
As if he scorn'd to think of night.
Fame, that delights around the world to stray, Scorns not to take our Argos in her way. Pope's Statius.
SCORN. n. f. [from schern, old Fr. from the verb.] Contempt; scoff; slight; act of contumely.
If he do fully prove himself the honest shepherd Menalcas his brother and heir, I know no reason why you should think scorn of him. Sidney.
Unto thee will I cry, O Lord: think no scorn of me, lest if thou make as tho' thou hearest not, I become like them that go down into the pit. Pf. xxviii. 1.
We were better parch in Africk's sun,
Than in the pride and salt scorn of his eyes. Shaksp. Lear.
Why should you think that I should woo in scorn?
Scorn and derision never come in tears. Shaksp. Lear.
If we draw her not unto us, she will laugh us to scorn. Yd.
Diogenes was asked in scorn, what was the matter that philosophers haunted rich men, and not rich men philosophers?
He answered, because the one knew what they wanted, the others did not.
Whoever hath any thing in his person that induces contempt, hath also a perpetual spur to rescue himself from scorn:
therefore all deformed persons are bold, as being on their own defence as exposed to scorn. Bacon.
Every frown and bitter scorn,
But fann'd the fuel that too fast did burn. Dryden.
Is it not a most horrid ingratitude, thus to make a scorn of him that made us? Tillotson.
Numidia's grown a scorn among the nations
For breach of publick vows. Adijon's Cat.

'Twas time to counterfeit, or that hot termagant Scot had paid me scot and lot too. Shaksp. Henry IV.
Protogenes, historians note,
Liv'd there a burgess, scot and lot. Prior.

SCO

The chief point that has puzzled the freeholders, as well as those that pay scot and lot, for about these six months, is, whether they would rather be governed by a prince that is obliged by law to be good, or by one who, if he pleases, may plunder or imprison. Addison.
To SCOTCH. v. a. To cut with shallow incisions.
He was too hard for him directly: before Coriolani, he scotcht and notcht him like a carbonado. Shaksp. Coriolanus.
SCOTCH. n. f. [from the verb.] A slight cut; a shallow incision.
We'll beat 'em into bench-holes: I have yet room for fix scotches more. Shaksp. Ant. and Cleopatra.

sweeping an oven; a maulkin. Ans. and Bailey.
SCOTUNDEL. n. f. [from scotunelo, Italian, a hider. Skinner.] A mean rascal; a low petty villain.
Now to be baff'd by a scoundrel,
An upstart scold, and a mungrel. Hudibras.
Scoundrels as these wretched Ombites be,
Canops they exceed in luxury. Tate.
Go, if your ancient but ignoble blood
Has crept through scoundrels ever since the flood,
Go, and pretend your family is young;
Nor own your fathers have been fools so long. Pope.
To SCOUR. v. a. [from scure, Danish; schuere, Dutch.]
1. To rub hard with any thing rough, in order to clean the surface.
I were better to be eaten to death with a rust, than to be scour'd to nothing with perpetual motion. Shaksp. Hen. IV.
By dint of sword his crown he shall increase,
And scour his armour from the rust of peace. Dryden's An.
Part scour the rusty shields with seam, and part
New grind the blunted ax, and point the dart. Dryden.
Some blamed Mrs. Bull for grudging a quarter of a pound of soap and sand to scour the rooms. Arbutnot.
Poor Vadius, long with learned spleen devour'd,
Can taste no pleasure since his shield was scour'd. Pope.
2. To purge violently.
To cleanse; to bleach; to whiten; to blanch.
In some lakes the water is so nitrous, as, if foul clothes be put into it, it scours them of itself; and, if they stay, they moulder away. Bacon's Natural History.
A garden-worm should be well scour'd eight days in mols, before you fish with him. Walton's Angler.
Beneath the lamp her tawdry ribbons glare,
The new scour'd manteau, and the flatter air. Gay.
4. To remove by scouring.
Never came reformation in a flood
With such a heady current, scouring faults;
Nor ever hydra-headed wilfulness
So soon did lose his seat, and all at once,
As in this king. Shaksp. Henry V.
I will wear a garment all of blood,
And stain my favour in a bloody mask,
Which, wash'd away, shall scour my shame with it. Shak.
Then, in the clemency of upward air,
We'll scour our spots, and the dire thunder's scar. Dryden.
5. To range in order to catch or drive away something; to clear away.
The kings of Lacedemon having fet out some galleys, under the charge of one of their nephews, to scour the sea of the pyrates, they met us. Sidney.
Divers are kept continually to scour these seas, infested greatly by pirates. Sandys.
If with thy guards thou scour'st the streets by night,
And do'st in murders, rapes, and spoils delight,
Please not thyself the flatter crowd to hear,
'Tis fulsome stuff. Dryden's Pers.
6. To pass swiftly over.
Sometimes
He scours the right hand coast, sometimes the left. Milton.
Not half the number in their seats are found,
But men and steeds lie grov'ling on the ground;
The points of spears are stuck within the shield,
The steeds without their riders scour the field,
The knights unhors'd. Dryden.

SCO

When Ajax strives some rock's vast weight to throw,
The line too labours, and the words move slow;
Not so when swift Camilla scours the plain,
Flies o'er th' unbending corn, and skims along the main. Pope's Essay on Criticism.
To SCOUR. v. n.
1. To perform the office of cleaning domestick utensils.
I keep his house, and was to wring, brew, bake, scour, dress meat, and make the beds. Shaksp. Lear.
2. To clean.
Warm water is softer than cold; for it scours better. Bac.
3. To be purged or lax.
Some apothecaries, upon stamping colicoquintida, have been put into a great scouring by the vapour only. Bacon.
Convulsion and scouring, they say, do often cause one another. Graunt's Bills of Mortality.
If you turn sheep into wheat or rye to feed, let it not be too rank, lest it make them scour. Mortimer's Husbandry.

Who after her as hastily 'gan to scour. Fairy Queen.
I saw men scour on their way: I ey'd them Even to their ships. Shaksp. Winter's Tale.
Word was brought him, in the middle of his schemes, that his house was robbed; and so away he scours to learn the truth. L'Estrange.
If they be men of fraud, they'll scour off themselves, and leave those that trust them to pay the reckoning. L'Estrange.
So four fierce couriers, starting to the race,
Scour through the plain, and lengthen ev'ry pace;
Nor reins, nor curbs, nor threatening cries they fear,
But force along the trembling charioteer. Dryden.
As soon as any foreign object presses upon the sense, those spirits, which are posted upon the out-wards, immediately take the alarm, and scour off to the brain, which is the head quarters. Collier.
Swift at her call her husband scour'd away,
To wreak his hunger on the destin'd prey. Pope.
SCOURER. n. f. [from scure.]

 Are not the speedy scouts return'd again,
 That dogg'd the mighty army of the dauphin? Shakespeare.
 As when a scout,
 Through dark and desert ways with peril gone
 All night, at last, by break of cheerful dawn, Obtains the brow of some high-climbing hill. Milton.
 This great vessel may have lesser cabins, wherein scouts may be lodged for the taking of observations. Wilkins.
 The scouts to feral parts divide their way,
 To learn the natives names, their towns, explore The coasts. Dryden's Æn.
 To SCOUT. v. n. [from the noun.] To go out in order to observe the motions of an enemy privily.
 Oft on the bordering deep Encamp their legions; or with obscure wing Scout far and wide into the realm of night, Scorning surprise. Milton.
 As a hunted panther casts about
 Her glaring eyes, and pricks her list'ning ears to scout,
 So she, to thum his toils, her cares employ'd. Dryden.
 Command a party out,
 With a strict charge not to engage, but scout. Dryden.
 To SCOWL. v. n. [from scowl, Saxon; scwela, to look four, Icelandic.] To frown; to pout; to look angry, sour, or fullen.
 Miss, having now her authority increased, came with scowling eyes to deliver a flustering good-morrow to the two ladies. Sidney.
 With bent louting brows, as she would threat,
 She scowl'd and frowned with froward countenance. F. & J.
 Even so, or with much more contempt, mens eyes
 Did scowl on Richard. Shakespeare's Richard II.
 Not a courtier,
 Although they wear their faces to the bent
 Of the king's look, but hath a heart that is Glad at the thing they scowl at. Shakespeare's Cymbeline.
 The dusky clouds o'erspread
 Heaven's cheerful face, the low'ring element Scowls o'er the darken'd landscape snow or show'r. Milton.
 Fly, fly, prophane fogs! far hence fly away,
 With your dull influence; it is for you
 To sit and scowl upon night's heavy brow. Craftaw.
 In useful gaze
 The cattle stand, and on the scowling heavens Cast a deploring eye. Thompson's Summer.
SCOWL. n. f. [from the verb.] Look of fullness or discontent; gloom.
 I've seen the morning's lovely ray
 Hover o'er the new-born day,
 With rosy wings so richly bright,
 As if he scorn'd to think of night;
 When a ruddy storm, whose scowl
 Made heaven's radiant face look foul,
 Call'd for an untimely night,
 To blot the newly-blossom'd light. Craftaw.
SCOWLINGLY. adv. [from scowl.] With a frowning and fullen look.
 To SCRA'BBLE. v. n. [strabellen, scrabellen, to scrape or scratch, Dutch.] To paw with the hands.

 Grate on their scrann pipes of wretched straw. Milton.
SCRAP. n. f. [from scrape, a thing scraped or rubbed off.]
 1. A small particle; a little piece; a fragment.
 It is an unaccountable vanity to spend all our time raking into the scraps and imperfect remains of former ages, and neglecting the clearer notices of our own. Glow.
 Trencher squires spend their time in hopping from one great man's table to another's, only to pick up scraps and intelligence. L'Estrange.
 Languages are to be learned only by reading and talking,
 and not by scraps of authors got by heart. Lact.
 No rag, no scrap, of all the beau, or wit,
 That once so flutter'd, and that once so writ.
 I can never have too many of your letters: I am angry at every scrap of paper lost. Pope.
 2. Crumb; small particles of meat left at the table.
 The contract you pretend with that base wretch,
 One bred of alms, and foster'd with cold dishes,
 With scraps o' th' court, is no contract. Shakespeare's Cymbeline.
 The attendants puff a court up beyond her bounds, for their own scraps and advantage. Bacon.
 On bones, on scraps of dogs let me be fed,
 My limbs uncover'd, and expos'd my head
 To bleakst colds. Grave.
 What has he else to bait his traps,
 Or bring his vermin in, but scraps?
 The offals of a church distress,
 A hungry vicarage. Swift.
 3. A small piece of paper. This is properly scrip.
 Pregnant with thousands flits the scrap unseen,
 And silent sells a kings, or buys a queen. Pope.

 How can I tell but that his talons may Yet scratch my son, or rend his tender hand. Fa. Queen.
 I should have scratch'd out your unseeing eyes,
 To make my master out of love with thee. Shakespeare.
 I had rather hear my dog bark at a crow, than a man swear he loves me.
 —Keep your ladyship still in that mind! so some gentleman or other shall 'scape a predetermine scratch face.
 —Scratching could not make it worse, an 'twere such a face as yours were. Shakespeare's Much Ado about Nothing.
 Scots are like witches: do but whet your pen,
 Scratch 'till the blood come, they'll not hurt you then. Cleora.
 To wish that there were nothing but such dull tame things in the world, that will neither bite nor scratch, is as childlike as to wish there were no fire in nature. More.
 Unhand me, or I'll scratch your face;
 Let go, for shame. Dryden.
 3. To wound slightly.
 4. To hurt slightly with any thing pointed or keen.
 Daphne, roaming through a thorny wood,
Scratching her legs, that one shall swear she bleeds. Shakespeare.

 desire no wit, style, or argument. Swift.
SCRATCH. n. f. [from the verb.]
 1. An incision ragged and shallow.
 The coarse file cuts deep, and makes deep scratches in the work; and before you can take out those deep scratches with your finer cut files, those places where the filings were when your work was forged, may become dents to your hammer dents. Moxon's Mech. Exerc.
 The smaller the particles of those substances are, the smaller will be the scratches, by which they continually fret and wear away the glass until it be polished; but be they never so small, they can wear away the glass no otherwise than by grating and scratching it, and breaking the protuberances: and therefore polish it no otherwise than by bringing its roughness to a very fine grain, so that the scratches and frettings of the surface become too small to become visible. Newton's Opt.
 2. Laceration with the nails.
 These nails with scratches shall deform my breast,
 Left by my look or colour be express'd
 The mark of aught high-born, or ever better dress'd. Prior.
 3. A slight wound.
 The valiant beast turning on her with open jaws, she gave him such a thrust through his breast, that all the lion could do was with his open paw to tear off the mantle and sleeve of Zelmene, with a little scratch rather than a wound. Sidney.
 Heav'n forbid a shallow scratch should drive
 The prince of Wales from such a field as this. Shakespeare's H. IV.

 To make a shrill or hoarse noise. Bailey.
 1. To cry out shrilly, as in terror or agony.
 Soon a whirlwind rose around,
 And from afar he heard a screeching sound,
 As of a dame distress'd, who cry'd for aid,
 And fill'd with loud laments the secret shade. Dryden.
 The fearful matrons raise a screeching cry,
 Old feeble men with fainter groans reply;
 A jarring sound results, and mingles in the sky. Dryden.
 If chance a mouse creeps in her light,
 Can finely counterfeit a fright;
 So sweetly screeches, if it comes near her,
 She ravishes all hearts to hear her. Swift.
 2. To cry shrilly.
 I heard the owl screech, and the crickets cry. Shakespeare.
SCREAM. n. f. [from the verb.] A shrill quick loud cry of terror or pain.

SCREECH. n. f. [from the verb.]
 1. Cry of horror and anguish.
 2. Harsh horrid cry.
 The birds obscene, that nightly flock'd to taste,
 With hollow screeches fled from the dire repast;
 And ravenous dogs, allur'd by scented blood,
 And starving wolves, ran howling to the wood. Pope.
SCREECHOWL. n. f. [screech and owl.] An owl that hoots in the night, and whose voice is supposed to betoken danger, misery, or death.
 Deep night,
 The time of night when Troy was set on fire,
 The time when screechowls cry, and bandogs howl. Shakespeare.
 Let him, that will a screechowl ay be call'd,
 Go into Troy, and lay there, Hector's dead. Shakespeare.
 By the screechowl's dismal note,
 By the black night raven's throat,
 I charge thee, Hob.
 Jupiter, though he had hung the balance, and given it a jog to weigh down Turnus, sent the screechowl to discourage him. Dryden.
 O, that screechowl at the window! we shall be pursued immediately. Dryden's Don Sebastian.
 Sooner shall screechowls bark in sunny day,
 Than I forget my shepherd's wonted love. Gay.
SCREEN. n. f. [ecran, French.]
 1. Any thing that affords shelter or concealment.
 Now near enough: your leavy screens throw down,
 And show like those you are. Shakespeare's Macbeth.
 Some ambitious men seem as screens to princes in matters of danger and envy. Bacon.
 Our

Our people, who transport themselves, are settled in those interjacent tracts, as a screen against the insults of the savages. Swift.

Cycle and epicycle, orb in orb. Milton's Paradise Lost.

2. To write without use or elegance.
To SCRIBBLE. v. n. To write without care or beauty.

If a man should affirm, that an ape casually meeting with pen, ink and paper, and falling to scribble, did happen to write exactly the Leviathan of Hobbes, would an atheist believe such a story? And yet he can easily digest things as incredible as that. Bentley.

If Mævius scribble in Apollo's spite,
There are, who judge still worse than he can write. Pope.

Leave flattery to fulsome dedicators,
Whom, when they praise, the world believes no more.

Than when they promise to give scribbling o'er. Pope.

SCRIBBLE. n. f. [from the verb.] Worthless writing.
By solemnly endeavouring to countenance my conjectures, I might be thought dogmatical in a hasty scribble. Boyle.

If it struck the present taste, it was soon transferred into the plays and current scribbles of the week, and became an addition to our language. Swift.

SCRIBBLER. n. f. [from scribble.] A petty author; a writer without worth.

The most copious writers are the arrantest scribblers, and in so much talking the tongue runs before the wit. L'Estrange.

The actors represent such things as they are capable of, by which they and the scribbler may get their living. Dryden.

The scribbler, pinch'd with hunger, writes to dine,
And to your genius must conform his line. Grav.

To affirm he had cause to apprehend the same treatment with his father, is an improbable scandal slung upon the nation by a few bigotted French scribblers. Swift.

No body was concerned or surpris'd, if this or that scribbler was proved a dunce. Letter to Pope's Dancid.

SCRIBE. n. f. [from scribo, French; scriba, Latin.]

English consumptions generally proceed from a scrofulous disposition. Arbutnot.

What would become of the race of men in the next age, if we had nothing to trust to, beside the scrofulous consumptive production furnished by our men of wit and pleasure? Swift.

SCROLL. n. f. [Supposed by Minshaw to be corrupted from roll; by Skinner derived from esrouelle, a shrimp given by the heralds: whence parchment, wrapped up into a resembling form, has the same name. It may be observed, that a gaoler's list of prisoners is esroue.] A writing wrapped up.

His chamber all was hanged about with rolls,
And old records from ancient times deriv'd;
Some made in books, some in long parchment scrolls,
That were all worm-eaten, and full of canker holes. Spens.

Accept this scroll,
Which, in right of Richard Plantagenet,
We do exhibit to your majesty. Shaksp. H. VI.

See't thou this letter, take it up,
And give the king this fatal plotted scroll. Shaksp. Tit. Andr.

We'll add a royal number to the dead,
Gracing the scroll, that tells of this war's loss,
With slaughter coupled to the name of kings. Shaksp. Henry.

Here is the scroll of every man's name, which is thought fit through all Athens to play in our interlude. Shaksp. A Midsummer Night's Dream.

A Numidian priest, bellowing out certain superstitious charms, cast divers scrolls of paper on each side the way, wherein he cursed and banned the Christians. Knolles.

He drew forth a scroll of parchment, and delivered it to our foremost man. Bacon.

Such follow him, as shall be register'd;
Part good, part bad: of bad the longer scroll. Milton.

With this epistolary scroll,
Receive the partner of my inmost soul. Prior.

Yet if he wills, may change or spoil the whole;
May take yon beauteous, myrtick, stary roll,
And burn it, like an useless parchment scroll. Prior.

SCROYLE. n. f. [This word I remember only in Shaksp. Henry: it seems derived from esrouelle, French, a scrofulous swelling; as he calls a mean fellow a scab from his itch, or a patch from his raggedness.] A mean fellow; a rascal; a wretch.

The scroyles of Angiers flout you kings,
And stand securely on their battlements,
As in a theatre. Shaksp. Henry.

To SCRUB. v. a. [from scruben, Dutch.] To rub hard with something coarse and rough.

Such wrinkles as a skilful hand would draw
For an old grandam ape, when, with a grace,
She sits at squat, and scrubs her leathern face. Dryden.

She never would lay aside the use of brooms and scrubbing brushes. Arbutnot.

Now Moll had whirl'd her mop with dextrous airs, Prepar'd to scrub the entry and the stairs. Swift.

SCRUB. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. A mean fellow, either as he is supposed to scrub himself for the itch, or as he is employed in the mean offices of scouring away dirt.

2. Any thing mean or despicable.
With a dozen large vessels my vault shall be stor'd;
No little scrub joint shall come on my board. Swift.

3. A worn out broom. Swift.

SCRUBBED. adj. [from scrub.] Mean; vile; worthless. Swift.

SCRUBBY. adj. [from scrub.] Mean; vile; worthless. Swift.

I gave it to a youth,
A kind of boy, a little scrubbed boy,
No higher than thyself. Shak. Merchant of Venice.

The scrubbiest cur in all the pack,
Can set the mastiff on your back.
The scene a wood, produc'd no more Than a few scrubby trees before. Swift.

SCRUFF. n. f. The same, I suppose, with scruf, by a metaphorical use in pronunciation. Swift.

SCRUTATOR. n. f. [from scrutator, Fr. from scrutator, Lat.] Enquirer; searcher; examiner. Swift.

SCRUPLE. n. f. [from scrupule, French; scrupulus, Latin.]

1. Doubt; difficulty of determination; perplexity: generally about minute things.

Macduff, this noble passion,
Child of integrity, hath from my soul
Wip'd the black scruples, reconcil'd my thoughts
To your good truth. Shaksp. Macbeth.

Nothing did more fill foreign nations with admiration of his succession, than the content of all estates of England for the receiving of the king without the least scruple, pause, or question. Bacon.

For the matter of your confession, let it be severe and serious; but yet so as it may be without any inordinate anxiety, and unnecessary scruples, which only intangle the soul. Taylor.

Men make no scruple to conclude, that those propositions, of whose knowledge they can find in themselves no original, were certainly the impress of God and nature upon their minds, and not taught them by any one else. Locke.

2. Twenty grains; the third part of a dram.
Milk one ounce, oil of vitriol a scruple, doth coagulate;
the milk at the bottom, where the vitriol goeth. Bacon.

3. Proverbially, any small quantity.
Nature never lends
The smallest scruple of her excellence,
But, like a thrifty goddess, she determines Herself the glory of a creditor. Shaksp. Measure for Measure.

To SCRUPLE. v. n. [from the noun.] To doubt; to hesitate.
He scrupled not to eat

Against his better knowledge; not deceiv'd,
But fondly overcome with female charms. Milt. Par. Lost.

SCRUPLER. n. f. [from scruple.] A doubter; one who has scruples.

The scruples which many publick ministers would make of the worthiness of parents to have their children baptised, forced such questioned parents, who did not believe the necessity of having their children baptised by such scruplers, to carry their children unto other ministers. Gravatt's Bills of Mortality.

SCRUPULOSITY. n. f. [from scrupulosus.]

1. Doubt; minute and nice doubtfulness.

Amongst ourselves there was some question mov'd, by reason of a few mens scrupulosity touching certain things. Hickier.

The one sort they warn'd to take heed, that scrupulosity did not make them rigorous in giving unadvised sentence against their brethren which were free; the other, that they did not become scandalous, by abusing their liberty and freedom to the offence of their weak brethren, which were scrupulous. Hick.

So careful, even to scrupulosity, were they to keep their sabbath, that they must not only have a time to prepare them for that, but a further time also to prepare them for their very preparations. South.

2. Fear of acting in any manner; tenderness of conscience.
The first sacrifice is looked on with some horror; but when they have once made the breach, their scrupulosity soon retires. Decay of Piety.

SCRUPULOUS. adj. [from scrupulosus, French; scrupulosus, Latin; from scruple.]

1. Nicely doubtful; hard to satisfy in determinations of conscience.

They warn'd them that they did not become scandalous, by abusing their liberty, to the offence of their weak brethren which were scrupulous. Hickier.

Some birds, inhabitants of the waters, whose blood is cold as fishes, and their flesh is so like in taste, that the scrupulous are allowed them on fish-days. Locke.

2. Given to objections; captious.
Equality of two domestick pow'rs Breeds scrupulous faction. Shaksp. Ant. and Cleopatra.

3. Nice; doubtful.
As the cause of a war ought to be just, so the justice of that cause ought to be evident; not obscure, not scrupulous. Bacon's Holy War.

4. Careful; vigilant; cautious.
I have been the more scrupulous and wary, in regard the inferences drawn from these observations are of some importance. Woodward.

SCRUPULOUSLY. adv. [from scrupulosus.] Carefully; nicely; anxiously.

The duty consists not scrupulously in minutes and half hours.
Henry V. manifestly derived his courage from his piety, and was scrupulously careful not to ascribe the success of it to himself. Addison's Freeholder.

SCRUPULOUSNESS. n. f. [from scrupulosus.] The state of being scrupulous.

SCRUTABLE. adj. [from scrutator, Latin.] Discoverable by inquiry.

Shall we think God so scrutable, or ourselves so penetrating, that none of his secrets can escape us? Decay of Piety.

SCRUTATION. n. f. [from scrutator, Latin.] Search; examination; inquiry. Diels.

SCRUTATOR. n. f. [from scrutator, Fr. from scrutator, Lat.] Enquirer; searcher; examiner. Swift.

SCRUTATOR. n. f. [from scrutator, Fr. from scrutator, Lat.] Enquirer; searcher; examiner. Swift.

SCRUTATOR. n. f. [from scrutator, Fr. from scrutator, Lat.] Enquirer; searcher; examiner. Swift.

In process of time, from being a simple scrutator, an arch-deacon became to have jurisdiction more amply; scrutator. adj. [from scrutator.] Capacious; full of inquiries. A word little used.

Age is froward, uneasy, scrutinous, adj. Denham.
Hard to be pleas'd, and parcimonious.
SCRUTINY. n. f. [scrutinium, Latin.] Enquiry; search; examination with nicety.

In the scrutinies for righteousness and judgment, when it is inquired whether such a person be a good man or no; the meaning is not, what does he believe or hope, but what he loves. Taylor's Rule of Living holy.

I thought thee worth my nearer view
And narrower scrutiny, that I might learn
In what degree or meaning thou art call'd
The son of God. Milton's Paradise Regain'd.
They that have designed exactness and deep scrutiny, have taken some one part of nature. Hale.

Their difference to measure, and to reach,
Reason well rectify'd must nature teach;
And these high scrutinies are subjects fit
For man's all-searching and enquiring wit. Denham.
We are admonish'd of want of charity towards others, and want of a Christian scrutiny and examination into ourselves. L'Estrange.

When any argument of great importance is managed with that warmth, which a serious conviction of it generally inspires, somewhat may easily escape, even from a wary pen, which will not bear the test of a severe scrutiny. Atterbury.

These, coming not within the scrutiny of human senses, cannot be examined by them, or attested by any body. Lacta.
TO SCRUTINIZE. v. a. [from scrutiny.] To search; to examine. mine.

The compromissarii should chuse according to the votes of such, whose votes they were obliged to scrutinize. Hyssie.
SCRUTOIRE. n. f. [for scrutaire, or scrutaire.] A case of drawers for writings.

I locked up these papers in my scrutoire, and my scrutoire came to be unlocked. Prior.

TO SCRUTINE. v. a. [Perhaps from scruto.] This word, though now disused by writers, is still preserved, at least in its corruption, to scrutene, in the London jargon. To squeeze; to compress.

Though up he caught him 'twixt his puissant hands,
And having scrutened out of his cartion corse
The loathful life, now loos'd from sinful bands,
Upon his shoulders carried him. Fairy Queen.

TO SCUD. v. n. [scutire, Italian; scutta, Swedish; scutur, Swedish; scutur, Swedish.] To fly; to run away with precipitation. The vote was no sooner pass'd, but away they scudded to the next lake. L'Estrange.

The frighted fawns, that in woods delight,
Now into plains with prick'd-up ears take flight;
And scudding thence, while they their horn-feet ply,
About their fires the little sylvars cry. Dryden.

Away the frighted speckle scuds,
And leaves my lady in the fuds. Swift.

TO SCUDGLE. v. n. [from scud.] To run with a kind of affected halte or precipitation. A low word.

SCUFFLE. n. f. [This word is derived by Skinner from scuffle.] A confused quarrel; a tumultuous broil.

His captain's heart,
In the scuffles of great fights hath burst
The buckles on his breast. Shakespeare. Ant. and Cleopatra.

Avowed atheists, placing themselves in the seat of the scorner, take much pleasing diversion, by deriding our eager scuffles about that which they think nothing. Decay of Piety.

The dog leaps upon the serpent, and tears it to pieces; but in the scuffle the cradle happened to be overturned. L'Estrange.

Popish missionaries mix themselves in these dark scuffles, and animate the mob to such outrages and insults. Addison.

TO SCUFFLE. v. n. [from the noun.] To fight confusedly and tumultuously.

I must confess I've seen, in former days,
The best knights in the world, and scuffled in some frays. Dryden.

A gallant man had rather fight to great disadvantages in the field, in an orderly way, than scuffle with an undisciplined rabble. King Charles.

TO SCULK. v. n. [sculke, Danish.] To lurk in hiding places; to lie close.

It has struck on a sudden into such a reputation, that it scorns any longer to sculk, but owns itself publicly. Gov. of Tongue.

Fearing to be seen, within a bed
Of cowworts he conceal'd his wily head;
There sculk'd 'till afternoon, and watch'd his time. Dryden.

My prophets and my sophists finish'd here
Their civil efforts of the verbal war;
Not so my rabbins and logicians yield;
Retiring still they combat; from the field
Of open arms unwilling they depart,
And sculk behind the subterfuge of art. Prior.

No news of Phyl! the bridegroom came,
And thought his bride had sculk'd for shame;
Because her father us'd to say
The girl had such a bashful way.

The immediate publishers thereof lay sculking under the wings of an act of parliament. Letter to Publisher of the Dance.
SCULKER. n. f. [from sculk.] A lurker; one that hides himself for shame or mischief.

SCULL. n. f. [It is derived by Skinner from shell, in some provinces called shell; as testa and teste, or teste, signify the head. Mr. Lye observes more satisfactorily, that sho'a is in Islandick the skull of an animal.]

1. The bone which incases and defends the brain; the arched bone of the head.

Fractures of the scull are at all times very dangerous, as the brain becomes affected from the pressure. Sharp.

2. A small boat; a cockboat. [See SCULLER.]

3. One who rows a cockboat.
Like catiff vile, that for mildred Rides with his face to rump of fleed;
Or rowing scull, he's fain to love,
Look one way and another move. Hudibras.

4. [Seele, Saxon, an assembly.] In Milton's style, a shoal or vast multitude of fish.

Each bay
With fry innumerable swarms, and shoals
Of fish, that with their fins and shining scales
Glide under the green wave, in sculls that oar Bunk the mid sea. Milton.

SCULLCAP. n. f. [scull and cap.]
1. A headpiece.
2. A nightcap.

SCULLER. n. f. [Of this word I know not the etymology. Skida is in Islandick a vessel, and scuelle in French a dish.]

1. A cockboat; a boat in which there is but one rower.
Her soul already was consign'd to fate,
And thiv'ring in the leaky sculler fate. Dryden.

They hire the sculler, and, when once aboard,
Grow lick, and damn the climate like a lord. Pope.

2. One that rows a cockboat.

SCULLERY. n. f. [from skida, a vessel, Islandick; or scuelle, French, a dish.] The place where common utensils, as kettles or dishes, are cleaned and kept.

Pyreicus was famous for counterfeiting base things, as pitchers, a scullery, and setting rogues together by the ears. Pope.

SCULLION. n. f. [from scuelle, French, a dish.] The lowest domestic servant, that washes the kettles and the dishes in the kitchen.

I must, like a whore, unpack my heart with words,
And fall a scurling like a very drab.
A scullion, fye upon't! foh! about my brain. Shak. Hamlet.

If the gentleman hath lain there, get the cook, the stablemen, and the scullion, to stand in his way.

TO SCULP. v. a. [sculpo, Latin; sculps, Fr.] To carve; to engrave. A word not in use.

Oh, that the tenor of my just complaint
Were sculp with steel on rocks of adamant! Shaks.

SCULPTILE. adj. [sculptilis, Latin.] Made by carving. In a silver medal is upon one side Moses horned, and on the reverse the commandment against sculptile images. Brown.

SCULPTOR. n. f. [sculptor, Latin; sculpteur, Fr.] A carver; one who cuts wood or stone into images.

Thy shape's in every part
So clean, as might instruct the sculptor's art. Dryden.

The Latin poets give the epithets of iridium and iridulum to the thunderbolt, from the sculptors and painters that lived before them, that had given it three forks. Addison.

SCULPTURE. n. f. [sculptura, Latin; sculpture, French.]

1. The art of carving wood, or hewing stone into images. Then sculpture and her sister arts revive;
Stones leap'd to form, and rocks began to live. Pope.

2. Carved work.
Nor did there want
Cornice or freeze with bolly sculptures graven. Milton.

There too, in living sculpture, might be seen
The mad affection of the Cretan queen. Dryden.

3. The art of engraving.
TO SCULPTURE. v. a. [from the noun.] To cut; to engrave.

Gold, silver, ivory vases sculptur'd high,
There are who have not. Pope.

SCUM. n. f. [scume, French; schiuma, Italian; scum, Danish; schym, Dutch.]

1. That which rises to the top of any liquor.
The rest had several offices assign'd;
Some to remove the scum as it did rise.
Others to bear the same away did mind;
And others it to use according to his kind. Fairy Queen.

The salt part of the water doth partly rise into a scum on the top, and partly goeth into a sediment in the bottom.
Gather'd like scum, and lett'd to itself,
Self-fed and self-consum'd. Milton.

Away, ye scum,
That still rise upmost when the nation boils. Dryden.

They mix a med'cine to foment their limbs,
With scum that on the molten silver swims. Dryden.

2. The dross; the refuse; the recrement; that part which is to be thrown away.

There flock'd unto him all the scum of the Irish out of all places, that e're long he had a mighty army. Spenser.

Some forty gentlemen excepted, had we the very scum of the world, such as their friends thought it an exceeding good gain to be discharged. Raleigh's Essays.

I told thee what would come
Of all thy vapouring, base scum. Hudibras.

The Scythian and Egyptian scum
Had almost ruin'd Rome. Roscommon.

You'll find, in these hereditary tales,
Your ancestors the scum of broken jays. Dryden's Juven.

The great and innocent are insulted by the scum and refuse of the people. Addison's Freeholder.

TO SCUM. v. a. [from the noun.] To clear off the scum. Commonly written and spoken skim.

A second multitude
Severing each kind, and scum'd the bullion dross. Milton.

Hear, ye fullen powers below;
Hear, ye taskers of the dead;
You that boiling cauldrons blow,
You that scum the molten lead. Dryd. and Let's Oedipus.

What corn swim upon the top of the brine, scum off. Mort.
SCUMMER. n. f. [scumoir, French.] A vessel with which liquor is scummed, commonly called a skimmer.

SCUPPER. n. f. [schopen, Dutch, to draw off.] In a ship, small holes on the deck, through which water is carried into the sea. The leathers over those holes are called scupper leathers, and the nails with which they are fastened scupper nails. Bailey.

SCURF. n. f. scurf, Saxon; skurfa, Islandick; skurfs, Danish; skurf, Swedish; schersit, Dutch.]

1. A kind of dry milinary scab.
Her crafty head was altogether bald,
And, as in hate of honourable eld,
Was overgrown with scurf and filthy scald. Fairy Queen.

The virtue of his hands
Was lost among Pactolus' sands,
Against whose torrent while he swims,
The golden scurf peels off his limbs. Swift.

2. A soil or stain adherent.
Then are they happy, when by length of time
The scurf is worn away of each committed crime,
No speck is left. Dryden.

3. Any thing sticking on the surface.
There stood a hill, whose grisly top Shone with a glossy scurf. Milton.

Upon throwing in a stone the water boils; and at the same time are seen little flakes of scurf rising up. Addison.

SCURFINESS. n. f. [from scurf.] The state of being scurfy.
SCURFILL. adj. [scurill, Latin.] Low; mean; grossly opprobrious; loudly jocular.

With him, Patroclus
Upon a lazy bed, the live-long day
Breaks scurf and scurf. Shakspeare. Troilus and Cressida.

Nothing conduces more to letters than to examine the writings of the ancients, provided the plagues of judging and pronouncing against them be away; such as envy, bitterness, precipitation, impudence, and scurf scoffing. Ben. Johnson.

Thou mov'st me more by barely naming him,
Than all thy foul unmanner'd scurf railments. Dryden.

SCURFILITY. n. f. [scurillitas, Fr. scurillitas, Lat.] Grovelness of reproach; loudness of jocularly; mean buffoonery.

Good master Holofernes, purge; so it shall please you to abrogate *scurf*ility. Shakspeare.

Banish *scurf*ility and profaneness, and restrain the licentious insolence of poets. Dryden.

SCURFIOUS. adj. [scurillus, Latin.] Grossly opprobrious; using such language as only the license of a buffoon can warrant; loudly jocular; vile; low.

Yet is not their goodness so intolerable, as, on the contrary side, the *scurf*ious and more than satirical immodesty of Martinism. Hooter.

Let him approach singing.
Forewarn him that he use no *scurf*ious words in's tunes. Shakspeare's Winter's Tale.

How often is a person, whose intentions are to do good by the works he publishes, treated in as *scurf*ious a manner as if he were an enemy to mankind? Addison's Freeholder.

Their characters have been often treated with the utmost barbarity and injustice by *scurf*ious and enraged orators. Swift.

SCURFIOUSLY. adv. [from scurf.] With gross reproach; with low buffoonery; with lewd merriment.

Such men there are, who have written *scurf*iously against me, without any provocation. Dryden.

It is barbarous incivility *scurf*iously to sport with that which others count religion. Milton.

SEAVILY. adv. [from seury.] Vilely; basely; coarsely. It is seldom used but in a ludicrous sense.

Look i' your glass now,
And see how seavily that countenance shews;
You would be loth to own it. Ben. Jahn's Catiline.

This alters the whole complexion of an action, that would otherwise look but very seavily, and makes it perfect. Soub.

The clergy were never more learned, or so seavily treated. Swift.

SEAVY. n. f. [from seurf.] This word was, I believe, originally an adjective.

The seavy is a distemper of the inhabitants of cold countries, and amongst those such as inhabit marthy, fat, low, moist soils, near stagnating water, fresh or salt; invading chiefly in the Winter such as are sedentary, or live upon salted or smoked flesh and fish, or quantities of unfermented farinaceous vegetables, and drink bad water. Arbuthnot.

SEAVY. adj. [from seurf, seurfy, seury.]

1. Scabbed; covered with scabs; diseased with the seavy.
Whatever man be seavy or scabbed. Leu. xxi. 20.

2. Vile; bad; forry; worthless; contemptible; offensive.
I know him for a man divine and holy;
Not seavy, nor a temporary meddler. Shakspeare.

This is a very seavy tune to sing to a man's funeral. Shaks.
He spoke seavy and provoking terms
Against your honour. Shakspeare.

A crane, which is but seavy meat, lays but two eggs. Cher.
It would be convenient to prevent the excess of drink, with that seavy custom of taking tobacco. Swift.

SEAVYGRASS. n. f. [seury and grass.] The spoonwort. A plant.

The flower consists of four leaves, which are disposed in form of a cross: from the flower-cup arises the pointal, which becomes an almost globular fruit, divided into two cells by an intermediate partition, to which the valves adhere on both sides, and are furnished with many round seeds. Milton.

SEAVES. For excuses.
I shifted him away,
And laid good seaves on your exstasy. Shakspeare. Othello.

SEAV. n. f. [seav, Islandick.] The tail of those animals whose tails are very short, as a hare.

In the hare it is averily seated, and in its distention inclines unto the coxix or seav. Brown's Vulgar Errours.

He fled to earth, but first it cost him dear,
He left his seav behind, and half an ear. Swift.

SEAVTHEON. n. f. [seucime, Italian, from seutum, Lat.] The shield represented in heraldry; the ensigns armorial of a family. See ESCHUTCHEON.

And thereto had the that seavtheon of her desires, supported by certain badly diligent ministers. Sidney.

Your seavtheons, and your signs of conquest, shall Hang in what place you please. Shak. Ant. and Cleopatra.

Honour is a meer seavtheon. Shakspeare. Henry IV.

The chiefs about their necks the seavtheons wore,
With orient pearls and jewels powder'd o'er. Dryden.

SEAVTHEATED. adj. [seutel a, Lat.] Divided into small surfaces. It seems part of the seavtheated bone of a surgeon, being flat, of a porous or cellular constitution. Walsward.

SEAVTHEIFORM. adj. [seavtheiform, Latin.] Shaped like a shield.
SEAVTHE. n. f. [seavthea, Latin; seavthe, Celt. Alf. sw.]

1. A wide shallow basket, so named from a dish or platter which it resembles in form.

A seavthe or skrein to rid soil fro' the corn.
The earth and stones they are fain to carry from under their feet in seavthes and baskets. Hakewill on Providence.

2. A small grate.
To the hole in the door have a small seavthe, to keep in what mice are there. Mortimer's Husbandry.

3. [From seav.] A quick pace; a short run; a pace of affected precipitation.

She went with an easy seavthe out of the shop. Spektator.

TO SEAVTHE. v. n. [from seav or seavthe.] To run with affected precipitation.

The old fellow seavthed out of the room. Arbuthnot.

TO SEAVTHE. v. a. [Spenser. Seavtheare, Ital. Milton, for disdain.] Lifted up to high.

I seavth'd subjection.
SEAVTHEFUL. adj. Contracted for disdainful.
They now, put up with *seavthe*ful insolence,
Despite the brood of blessed sapience. Spenser.

SEA. n. f. [see, Saxon; see, or zee, Dutch.]

1. The ocean; the water opposed to the land.
Will all great Neptune's ocean wash this blood Clean from my hand? No, this my hand will rather Thy multitudinous sea incarnadine, Making the green one red. Shakspeare. Macbeth.

The rivers run into the sea. Corew.
He made the sea, and all that is therein. Ex. xx. 11.

So working sea settle and purge the air,
Amphibious between sea and land
The river horse. Milton.

SEA

Some leviathan,
Haply flum'ring on the Norway foam,
The pilot of some small night-founder'd stiff Deeming some island, oft as seamen tell,
With fixed anchor in his scaly rind,
Moors by his side under the lee, while night
Invests the sea.
Small fragments of shells, broken by storms on some shores, are used for manuring of sea land.
They put to sea with a fleet of three hundred sail. Arbutnot.
Sea racing dolphins are train'd for our motion,
Moony tides swelling to roll us ashore. Dryden's Albion.
But like a rock unmov'd, a rock that braves
The raging tempest, and the rising waves,
Prop'd on himself he stands: his solid side
Walk off the sea weeds, and the founding tides.
The sea could not be much narrower than it is, without a great loss to the world.
So when the first bold vessel dar'd the sea,
High on the stern the Thracian rais'd his strain,
While Argo saw her kindred trees
Descend from Pelion to the main.
2. A collection of water; a lake. Pope.
Jesus walking by the sea of Galilee, saw two brethren.
Mat. iv. 18.
3. Proverbially for any large quantity.
That sea of blood which hath in Ireland been barbarously shed, is enough to drown in eternal infamy and misery the malicious author and instigator of its effusion. King Charles.
4. Any thing rough and tempestuous.
To sorrow abandon'd, but worse felt within,
And in a troubled sea of passion tost. Milton.
5. Half seas over. Half drunk.
The whole magistracy was pretty well disguised before I gave 'em the slip: our friend the alderman was half seas over before the bonfire was out. Speator.
SEA is often used in composition, as will appear in the following examples.
SEABEAT. [sea and beat.] Dashed by the waves of the sea.
The sovereign of the seas he blames in vain,
That once seabeat will to sea again. Spenser's Pastoral.
Darkness cover'd o'er
The face of things: along the seabeat shore Satiate we slept. Pope's Odyssey.
SEABOAT. n. f. [sea and boat.] Vessel capable to bear the
sea.
Shipwrecks were occasioned by their ships being bad seaboats, and themselves but indifferent seamen. Arbutnot.
SEABORN. adj. [sea and born.] Born of the sea; produced by the sea.
Like Neptune and his seaborn niece, shall be
The shining glories of the land and sea.
All these in order march, and marching sing
The warlike actions of their seaborn king. Dryden.
SEABOY. n. f. [sea and boy.] Boy employed on shipboard.
Can't thou, O partial sleep, give thy repose
To the wet seaboy in an hour so rude,
And in the calmest and the stillest night
Deny it to a king? Shakespeare.
SEABREACH. n. f. [sea and breach.] Irruption of the sea by breaking the banks.
To an impetuous woman, tempests and seabreaches are nothing. L'Estrange.
SEABREEZE. n. f. [sea and breeze.] Wind blowing from the sea.
Hedges, in most places, would be of great advantage to shelter the grass from the seabreeze. Mortimer.
SEABUILT. adj. [sea and built.] Built for the sea.
Borne each by other in a distant line,
The seabuilt forts in dreadful order move. Dryden.
SEACABBAGE. n. f. [searabbe, Latin.] Seacolewort. A plant.
It hath fleshy leaves like those of the cabbage. Miller.
SEAHOLLY. n. f. [eryngium, Latin.] A plant.
The species are, seaholly, or eryngo. Common eryngo, &c. The roots of the first are candied, and sent to London for medicinal use, being the true eryngo.
SEACALF. n. f. [sea and calf.] The seal.
The seacalf, or seal, is so called from the noise he makes like a calf: his head comparatively not big, shaped rather like an otter's, with teeth like a dog's, and multachies like those of a cat: his body long, and all over hairy: his forefeet, with fingers clawed, but not divided, yet fit for going: his hinder feet, more properly fins, and fitter for swimming, as being an amphibious animal. The female gives suck, as the porpoise, and other viviparous fishes. Grew's Museum.
SEACAP. n. f. [sea and cap.] Cap made to be worn on shipboard.
I know your favour well,
Though now you have no seacap on your head. Shakesp.
SEACHART. n. f. [sea and chart.] Map on which only the coasts are delineated.

SEA

The situation of the parts of the earth are better learned by a map or seachart, than reading the description. Watts.
SEACOA'L. n. f. [sea and coal.] Coal, so called not because found in the sea, but because brought to London by sea; pit-coal.
We'll have a posset soon at the latter end of a seacal fire. Shakespeare.
Seacal lasts longer than charcoal.
This pulmonique indispotion of the air is very much heightened, where a great quantity of seacal is burnt. Haro.
SEACOA'ST. n. f. [sea and coast.] Shore; edge of the sea.
The venturous mariner that way,
Learning his ship from those white rocks to save,
Which all along the fouthern seacoast lay;
For safety's sake that fame his seacraft made,
And nam'd it Albion. Fairy Queen.
Upon the seacoast are many parcels of land, that would pay well for the taking in. Mortimer's Husbandry.
SEACOMPASS. n. f. [sea and compass.] The card and needle of mariners.
The needle in the seacompass still moving but to the north-point only, with moveor immotus, notified the respective constancy of the gentleman to one only. Camden's Remains.
SEACOW. n. f. [sea and cow.] The manatee.
The seacow is a very bulky animal, of the cetaceous kind.
It grows to fifteen feet long, and to seven or eight in circumference: its head is like that of a hog, but longer, and more cylindrick: its eyes are small, and it has no external ears, but only two little apertures in the place of them; yet its sense of hearing is very quick. Its lips are thick, and it has two long tufts standing out. It has two fins, which stand forward on the breast like hands, whence the Spaniards first called it ma-natee. The female has two round breasts placed between the pectoral fins. The skin is very thick and hard, and not scaly, but hairy. This creature lives principally about the mouths of the large rivers in Africa, the East Indies, and America, and feeds upon vegetables. Its flesh is white like veal, and very well tasted. The lapis manati, which is of a fine clean white colour, and bony texture, is properly the os petriolum of this animal. This stone has been supposed to be a powerful amulet, but is now neglected. Hill's Mat. Med.
SEADOG. n. f. [sea and dog.] Perhaps the shark.
Pierce seadogs devour the mang'd friends. Rosterman.
When, stung with hunger, the embryos the flood,
The seadog and the dolphin are her food. Pope's Odyssey.
SEAFARER. n. f. [sea and fare.] A traveller by sea; a mariner.
They flitly refused to vail their bonnets by the fummions of those towns, which is reckoned intolerable contempt by the better enabled seafarers. Carew.
A wand'ring merchant, he frequents the main,
Some mean seafarer in pursuit of gain;
Studious of freight, in naval trade well skill'd;
But dreads th' athletic labours of the field. Pope.
SEAFARING. adj. [sea and fare.] Travelling by sea.
My wife fasten'd him unto a small spare mast,
Such as seafaring men provide for storms. Shakespeare.
It was death to divert the ships of seafaring people, against their will, to other uses than they were appointed. Arbutnot.
SEAFENNEL. The same with SAMPHIRE, which see.
SEAFIGHT. n. f. [sea and fight.] Battle of ships; battle on the sea.
Seafights have been often fatal to the war; but this is when princes set up their rest upon the battles. Bacon.
They were full of drink at the time of their seafights.
Wisehead's Surgery.
If our sense of hearing were a thousand times quicker than it is, we should, in the quietest retirement, be less able to sleep than in the middle of a seafight. Locke.
This fleet they recruited with two hundred sail, whereof they lost ninety-three in a seafight. Arbutnot on Cann.
SEAFOWL. n. f. [sea and fowl.] Birds that live at sea.
The bills of curlews, and many other seafowl, are very long, to enable them to hunt for the worms. Dirham.
A seafowl properly represents the passage of a deity over the seas. Broom's Notes to the Odyssey.
A length of ocean and unbounded sky,
Which scarce the seafowl in a year o'er fly. Pope.
SEAGIRT. adj. [sea and girt.] Girded or incircled by the sea.
Neptune, besides the sway
Of every salt flood and each ebbing stream,
Took in by lot, 'twixt high and nether Jove, Imperial rule of all the seagirt isles. Milton.
Telemachus, the blooming heir
Of seagirt Ithaca, demands my care:
'Tis mine to form his green unpractis'd years
In sage debates. Pope.
SEAGULL. n. f. [sea and gull.] A water fowl.
Seagulls, when they flock together from the sea towards the shores, forebode rain and wind. Bacon's Nat. History.
Bittern.

SEA

SEAGULL. n. f. A sea bird. Arbutnot.
SEAHEDGEHOG. n. f. [seas, hedge, and hog.] A kind of sea shell-fish.
The seahedgehog is inclosed in a round shell, fashioned as a loaf of bread, wrought and pinched, and guarded by an outer skin full of prickles, as the land urchin. Carew.
SEAHOG. n. f. [sea and hog.] The porpus.
SEAHOLM. n. f. [sea and holm.]
1. A small uninhabited island.
2. Seaholly. A kind of sea weed.
Cornwall bringeth forth greater store of seaholm and samphire than any other county. Carew.
SEAHORSE. n. f. [sea and horse.]
1. The seahorse is a fish of a very singular form, as we see it dried, and of the needlefish kind. It is about four or five inches in length, and nearly half an inch in diameter in the broadest part. Its colour, as we see it dried, is a deep reddish brown; and its tail is turned round under the belly. It is found about the Mediterranean, and has been celebrated for medicinal virtues; but is at present wholly neglected. Hill's Materia Med.
2. The morie.
Part of a large tooth, round and tapering: a tuft of the morie, or waltons, called by some the seahorse. Woodward.
3. The medical and the poetical seahorse seem very different. By the seahorse Dryden means probably the hippopotamus.
By 'em
Seahorses, flound'ring in the slimy mud, Tost'd up their heads, and dast'd the ooze about 'em. Dry.
SEAMAD. n. f. [sea and maid.] Mermaid.
Certain fars shot from their spheres,
To hear the seamads music. Shakespeare.
SEAMAN. n. f. [sea and man.]
1. A sailor; a navigator; a mariner.

Beholds the fleet, and hears the seamen shout. Denham.
Seamen, through dismal storms, are wont
To pass the oyster-breeding Hellespont. Evelyn.
The whole poem was first written, and now sent you from a place where I have not so much as the converse of any seaman.
Dryden.
Aeneas order'd
A stately tomb, whose top a trumpet bore,
A soldier's faction, and a seaman's oar;
Thus was his friend interr'd. Dryden.
By undergoing the hazards of the sea, and the company of common seamen, you make it evident you will refuse no opportunity of rendering yourself useful. Dryden.
Had they applied themselves to the increase of their strength by sea, they might have had the greatest fleet and the most seamen of any state in Europe. Adams.
2. Merman; the male of the mermaid.
Seals live at land and at sea, and porpoises have the warm blood and intrails of a hog, not to mention mermaids, or seamen.
Locke.
SEAMARK. n. f. [sea and mark.] Point or conspicuous place distinguished at sea, and serving the mariners as directions of their course.
Those white rocks,
Which all along the fouthern seacoast lay,
Threat'ning unheedy wreck and rash decay,
For safety's sake his seamark made,
And nam'd it Albion. Fairy Queen.
Though you do see me weapon'd,
Here is my journey's end, here is my butt,
The very seamark of my utmost sail. Shakespeare. Othello.
They were executed at divers places upon the seacoast, for coast. Bacon's Henry VII.
They are remembered with a brand of infamy fixt upon them, and set as seamarks for those who observe them to avoid. Dryden.
The fault of others sway,
He set as seamarks for himself to shun. Dryden.

water* upon the wells of Alexandria. Bacon's Nat. History.
I took off the dressings, and bathed the member with seawater. Wisehead.
Seawater has many gross, rough, and earthy particles in it, as appears from its saltness; whereas fresh water is more pure and unmixt. Broom's Notes on the Odyssey.
SEAL. n. f. [seol, yele, Saxon; seel, Danish] The seacalf.
See SEACALF.
The seal or foyle is in make and growth not unlike a pig, ugly faced, and footed like a moldwarp; he delighteth in muck, or any loud noise, and thereby is trained to shew himself above water: they also come on land. Carew.

SEA

- An inland salt and bare,
The haunt of seals and orcs, and seamaws clang. Milton.
SEAL. n. f. [ryzel, Saxon; sigillum, Latin.]
1. A stamp engraved with a particular impression, which is fixed upon the wax that closes letters, or affixed as a testimony.
The king commands you
To render up the great seal. Shaksp. Henry VIII.
If the organs of perception, like wax overharden with cold, will not receive the impression of the seal; or, like wax of a temper too soft, will not hold it; or else supposing the wax of a temper fit, but the seal not applied with a sufficient force to make a clear impression; in any of these cases the print left by the seal will be obscure. Locke.
The same
His grandfire wore about his neck
In three seal rings, which after, melted down, Form'd a vast buckle for his widow's gown. Pope.
2. The impression made in wax.
'Till thou canst rail the seal from off my bond,
Thou hast offend'd thy lungs to speak so loud. Shaksp.
Solyman shewed him his own letters, asking him if he knew not that hand, and if he knew not that seal. Knolles.
He saw his monkey picking the seal wax from a letter. Arb.
3. Any act of confirmation.
They their fill of love
Took largely, of their mutual guilt the seal. Milton.
TO SEAL. v. a. [from the noun.]
1. To fasten with a seal.
He that brings this love to thee,
Little knows this love in me;
And by him seal up thy mind. Shaksp. As you like it.
I have seen her rise from her bed, take forth paper, fold it, write upon't, and afterwards seal it. Shaksp. Lear.
2. To confirm or attest by a seal.
God join'd my heart to Romeo's; thou our hands;
And ere this hand, by thee to Romeo seal'd,
Shall be the label to another deed.
Or my true heart with treacherous revolt
Turn to another, this shall slay them both. Shaksp. Romeo.
3. To confirm; to ratify; to settle.
My soul is purg'd from grudging hate,
And with my hand I seal our true hearts love. Shak. R. III.

Nor did my search of liberty begin,
'Till my black hairs were chang'd upon my chin. Dryden.
SEARCHER. n. f. [from search.]
1. Examiner; inquirer; trier.
The Agarenes that seek wisdom upon earth, the authors of fables, and searchers out of understanding. Bar. iii. 23.
The searchers found a marvellous difference between the Anaks and themselves. Raleigh.
Religion has given us a more just idea of the divine nature: he whom we appeal to is truth itself, the great searcher of hearts, who will not let fraud go unpunished, or hold him guiltless that taketh his name in vain. Addison.
In vain we lift up our presumptuous eyes
To what our Maker to their ken denies:
The searcher follows fast; the object flies. Prior.
Avoid the man who practices any thing unbecoming a free and open searcher after truth. Watts.
2. Officer in London appointed to examine the bodies of the dead, and report the cause of death.
The searchers, who are ancient matrons sworn to their office, repair to the place where the dead corps lies, and by view of the same, and by other inquiries, examine by what disease the corps died. Graunt's Bills of Mortality.
SEASON. n. f. [saison, French.]
1. One of the four parts of the year, Spring, Summer, Autumn, Winter.
The fairest flowers o' th' season
Are our carnations and streak'd gillyflowers. Shaksp. As you like it.
Then Summer, Autumn, Winter did appear;
And Spring was but a season of the year. Dryden.
We saw, in six days travelling, the several seasons of the year in their beauty. Addison on Italy.
2. A time as distinguished from others.
He's noble, wise, judicious, and best knows
The fits o' th' season. Shak. Macbeth.
The season prime for sweetest scents and airs. Milton.
3. A fit time; an opportune concurrence.
At season fit let her with thee partake.
All business should be done betimes; and there's as little trouble of doing it in season too, as out of season. L'Estrange.
For active sports, for pleasing rest,
This is the time to be posses'd;
The best is but in season best. Dryden.
I would indulge the gladness of my heart!
Let us retire: her grief is out of season. Philips.
There is no season to which such thoughts as these are more suitable. Aitkenbury.
The season when to come, and when to go,
To sing, or cease to sing, we never know. Pope.
4. A time not very long.
We'll ship you for a season, but our jealousy Do's yet depend. Shaksp. Cymbeline.
5. [From the verb.] That which gives a high relish.
You lack the season of all natures, sleep. Shak. Macbeth.
TO SEASON. v. a. [saisonner, French.]
1. To mix with food any thing that gives a high relish.
Every oblation of thy meat-offering shalt thou season with salt. Lev. ii. 13.
They seasoned every sacrifice, whereof a greater part was eaten by the priests. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

SEA

- what is praiseworthy to the greatest advantage, and to expose the vices and follies of men. Tilletson.
3. To qualify by admixture of another ingredient.
Mercy is above this scepter'd sway;
It is an attribute to God himself;
And earthly pow'r does then the least God's,
When mercy seasons justice. Shak. Merchant of Venice.
Season your admiration but a while,
With an attentive ear, 'till I deliver This marvel to you. Shak. Hamlet.
4. To imbue; to tinge or taint.
Whatever thing
The scythe of time mows down, devour unspar'd,
'Till I, in man residing, through the race
His thoughts, his looks, words, actions, all infect,
And season him thy last and sweetest prey. Milton's Pa. Lost.
Secure their religion, season their younger years with prudent and pious principles. Taylor.
Sin, taken into the soul, is like a liquor poured into a vessel; so much of it as it fills, it also seasons: the touch and tincture go together. South.
5. To fit for any use by time or habit; to mature.
The crow doth sing as sweetly as the lark,
When neither is attended; and, I think,
The nightingale, if she should sing by day,
When every goose is cackling, would be thought
No better a musician than the wren:
How many things by season'd time are done,
To their right praise and true perfection. Shaksp. As you like it.
Who in want a hollow friend doth try,
Directly seasons him his enemy. Shaksp. As you like it.
We charge you, that you have contriv'd to take
From Rome all season'd office, and to wind Yourself unto a power tyrannical. Shaksp. Coriolanus.
The archers of his guard shot two arrows every man together against an inch board of well season'd timber. Hayward.
His plenteous stores do season'd timber send;
Thither the brawny carpenters repair. Dryden.

SEASONABLE. adj. [saison, French.] Opportune; happening or done at a proper time; proper as to time.
Mercy is seasonable in the time of affliction, as clouds of rain in the time of drought. Exclus. v. 2.
If ever it was seasonable to preach courage in the despised abused cause of Christ, it is now, when his truths are reformed into nothing, when the hands and hearts of his faithful ministers are weakened. South's Sermons.
SEASONABLENESS. n. f. [from seasonable.] Opportuneness of time; propriety with regard to time.
A British freeholder would very ill discharge his part, if he did not acknowledge the excellency and seasonableness of those laws by which his country has been recovered out of its confusions. Addison's Freeholder.
SEASONABLY. adv. [from seasonable.] Properly with respect to time.
This is that to which I would most earnestly, most seasonably advise you all. Spratt's Sermons.
SEASONER. n. f. [from to season.] He who seasons or gives a relish to any thing.
SEASONING. n. f. [from season.] That which is added to any thing to give it a relish.
Breads we have of several grains, with divers kinds of leavenings and seasonings; so that some do extremely move appetites, and some do nourish so as divers do live of them alone. Bacon.
Some abound with words, without any seasoning or taste of matter. Ben. Johnson.
A foundation of good sense, and a cultivation of learning, are required to give a seasoning to retirement, and make us taste the blessing. Dryden.
Political speculations are of so dry and austere a nature, that they will not go down with the publick without frequent seasonings. Addison's Freeholder.
The publick accept a paper which has in it none of those seasonings that recommend the writings which are in vogue among us. Addison's Spectator.
Many vegetable substances are used by mankind as seasonings, which abound with a highly exalted aromatick oil; as thyme and fennel. Arbutnot on Aliments.
SEAT. n. f. [sedes, Latin; selt, old German.] Skinner.
1. A chair, bench, or any thing on which one may sit.
The fons of light
Hasted, resorting to the fummons high,
And took their seats. Milton's Paradise Lost.
The lady of the leaf ordain'd a feast,
And made the lady of the flow'r her guest;
When, lo, a bow'r ascended on the plain,
With sudden seats ordain'd, and large for either train. Dryd.
2. Chair

SEC

2. Chair of state; throne; post of authority; tribunal.
With due observance of thy goodly seat,
Great Agamemnon, Nestor shall supply Thy latest words. Shakep. Troilus and Cressida.
Thus we debate
The nature of our seats, and make the rabble
Call our cares fears. Shak. Coriolanus.
Whatever be the manner of the world's end, most certain it is an end it shall have, and as certain that then we shall appear before the judgment seat of Christ, that every man may receive according to that which he hath done in his body, whether it be good or evil. Hakewill on Providence.
3. Mansion; residence; dwelling; abode.
It were enough in reason to succour with victuals, and other helps, a vast multitude, compelled by necessity to seek a new seat, or to direct them unto a country able to receive them. Raleigh.
O earth, how like to heav'n! if not prefer'd
Most justly, seat worthier of gods, as built
With second thoughts, reforming what was old! Milton.
In Alba he shall fix his royal seat;
And, born a king, a race of kings beget.
Has Winter caus'd thee, friend, to change thy seat,
And seek in Sabine air a warm retreat? Dryden.
The promis'd seat of empire shall again
Cover the mountain, and command the plain. Prior.
4. Situation; site.
The fittest and the easiest to be drawn
To our society, and to aid the war,
The rather for their seat, being next borderers
On Italy. Ben. Johnson's Catiline.
He that builds a fair house upon an ill seat, committeth himself to prison. Bacon.
A church by Strand-bridge, and two bishops heaves, were pulled down to make a seat for his new building. Hayward.
It followeth now that we find out the seat of Eden; for in it was Paradise by God planted. Raleigh.
1. To place on seats; to cause to sit down.
The guests were no sooner seated but they entered into a warm debate. Arbutnot.
2. To place in a post of authority, or place of distinction.
Thus high was king Richard seated. Shak. R. III.
Not Babylon,
Nor great Alcairo, such magnificence
Equal'd in all their glories to insurine
Belus or Serapis their gods, or seat
Their kings. Milton.
A spirit of envy or opposition makes mankind uneasy to see others of the same species seated above them in a sort of perfection. Pope.
3. To fix in any particular place or situation; to settle.
Should one family or one thousand hold possession of all the southern undiscovered continent, because they had seated themselves in Nova Guiana. Raleigh.
By no means build too near a great neighbour, which were, in truth, to be as unfortunately seated on the earth as Mercury is in the heavens; for the most part ever in combustion, or obscurity, under brighter beams than his own. Watson.
4. To fix; to place firm.
Why do I yield to that suggestion,
Whose horrid image doth upfix my hair,
And make my seated heart knock at my ribs,
Against the use of nature. Shak. Macbeth.
From their foundations loosening to and fro,
They pluck'd the seated hills. Milton.
The rock rush'd seaward with impetuous roar,
Ingulf'd, and to th' abyss the boaster bore. Pope.
SE'WARD. adv. [from sear, Saxon.] Towards the sea.
The rock rush'd seaward with impetuous roar,
Ingulf'd, and to th' abyss the boaster bore. Pope.
SE'WARD. n. f. [from sear, Latin; sear, Fr.] In geometry, the

- SE'CLE. n. f. [from seculo, French; seculum, Latin.] A century.
Of a man's age, part he lives in his father's life-time, and part after his son's birth; and thereupon it is wont to be said that three generations make one seculo, or hundred years in the genealogies. Hammond's Pract. Catech.
To SE'CLUDE. v. a. [from secludere, Latin.] To confine from; to shut up apart; to exclude.
None is secluded from that function of any degree, state, or calling.
Some parts of knowledge God has thought fit to seclude from us, to fence them not only, as he did the interdicted tree, by precept and commination, but with difficulties and impossibi-lities. Decay of Piet.
The number of birds described may be near five hundred, and the number of fishes, secluding shell-fish, as many; but if the shell-fish be taken in, more than six times the number.
Inclosure your tender plants in your conservatory, secluding
all entrance of cold. Dryden's
Let eastern tyrants from the light of heaven
Seclude their bosom slaves. Thomson.
SE'COND. n. f. [from secundus, French; secundus, Latin.] It is ob-servable that the English have no ordinal of two, as the Latins and the nations deriving from them have none of two. What the Latins call secundus, from sequi, the Saxons term oþer, or ætweþra.
1. The next in order to the first; the ordinal of two.
Sunk were their hearts with horror of the crime,
Not needed to be warn'd a second time,
But bore each other back. Dryden.
2. Next in value or dignity; inferior.
I shall not speak superlatively of them, lest I be suspected of partiality; but this I may truly say, they are second to none in the Christian world. Bacon's Advice to Villiers.
None I know
Second to me, or like; equal much less. Milton.
My eyes are still the same; each glance, each grace,
Keep their first lustre, and maintain their place,
Not second yet to any other face. Dryden.
Not these huge bolts, by which the giants slain,
Lay overthrown on the Phlegrean plain;
'Twas of a lesser mould and lighter weight;
They call it thunder of a second rate. Adisson.
By a sad train of miseries alone
Distinguish'd long, and second now to none, Pope.
Persons of second rate merit in their own country, like birds of passage, thrive here, and fly off when their employments are at an end. Swift.
SE'COND-HAND. n. f. Possession received from the first possessor.
SE'COND-HAND is sometimes used adjectively. Not original;
not primary.
Some men build so much upon authorities, they have but a second-hand or imputed knowledge. Locke.
They are too proud to cringe to second-hand favourites in a great family. Swift to Gay.
A SE'COND-HAND. In imitation; in the second place of order;
by transmission; not primarily; not originally.
They pelted them with satyrs and epigrams, which perhaps had been taken up at first only to make their court, and at second-hand to flatter those who had flattered their king. Temple.
In imitation of preachers at second-hand, I shall transcribe from Bruyere a piece of railery. Latour.
Spurious virtue in a maid;
A virtue but at second-hand. Swift.
SE'COND. n. f. [from secundus, French; from the adjective.]
1. One who accompanies another in a duel to direct or defend him.
Their seconds minister an oath,
Which was indifferent to them both,
That on their knightly faith and troth
No magic them supplied;
And fought them that they had no charms,
Wherewith to work each other's harms,
But came with simple open arms
To have their causes tried. Drayton's Nymphid.
Their first encounters were very furious, till after some toll and bloodshed they were parted by the seconds. Adisson.
Personal brawls come in as seconds to finish the dispute of opinion. Watson.
2. One who supports or maintains; a supporter; a maintainer.
He propounded the duke as a main cause of divers infirmities in the state, being sure enough of seconds after the first onset. Watson.
Courage, when it is only a second to injustice, and falls on without provocation, is a disadvantage to a character. Celtius.
3. A second minute, the second division of an hour by sixty; the sixtieth part of a minute.
Four flames of an equal magnitude will be kept alive the space of sixteen second minutes, though one of these flames alone, in the same vessel, will not last above twenty-five or at most thirty seconds. Wilkins's Math. Magic.

SEC

- Sounds move above 1140 English feet in a second minute of time, and in seven or eight minutes of time about 100 English miles. Locke.
To SE'COND. v. a. [from secundus, Fr. secundo, Lat. from the noun.]
1. To support; to forward; to assist; to come in after the act as a maintainer.
The authors of the former opinion were perfectly seconded by other wittier and better learned, who being loth that the form of church polity, which they fought to bring in, should be otherwise than in the highest degree accounted of, took first an exception against the difference between church polity and matters of necessity to salvation. Hooker.
Though we here fall down,
We have supplies to second our attempt;
If they miscarry, theirs shall second them. Shak. Henry VI.
I to be the power of Israel's God
Avow, and challenge Dag-n to the test,
Offering to combat thee his champion bold,
With th' utmost of his godhead seconded. Milton.
Familiar Ovid tender thoughts inspires,
And nature second all his soft desires. Reynolds.
If in company you offer something for a jest, and no body second you in your laughter, you may condemn their taste;
but in the mean time, you make a very indifferent figure. Swift.
In human works, though labour'd on with pain,
A thousand movements scarce one purpose gain;
In God's, one single can its ends produce;
Yet serves to second too many other ills. Pope.
2. To follow in the next place.
You some permit
To second ills with ills. Shakespeare.
Having formerly discours'd of a marital voyage, I think it not impertinent to second the same with some necessary relations concerning the royal navy. Raleigh.
He saw his guileful act
By Eve, though all unwitting, seconded
Upon her husband. Milton's Paradise Lost.
Sin is usually seconded with sin; and a man seldom commits one sin to please, but he commits another to defend himself.
South's Sermons.
SE'COND Sight. n. f. The power of seeing things future, or things distant: supposed inherent in some of the Scottish islanders.
As he was going out to steal a sheep, he was seized with a fit of second sight: the face of the country presented him with a wide prospect of new scenes, which he had never seen before. Adisson's Freindler.
SE'COND sighted. adj. [from second sight.] Having the second sight.
Sawney was descended of an ancient family, renowned for their skill in prognosticks: most of his ancestors were second sighted, and his mother but narrowly escaped for a witch. Add.
SE'CONDARILY. adv. [from secondarily.] In the second degree; in the second order; not primarily; not originally; not in the first intention.
These atoms make the wind primarily tend downwards, though other accidental causes impel them secondarily to a floping motion. Digby.
He confesses that temples are erected, and festivals kept, to the honour of saints, at least secondarily. Stillingfleet.
It is primarily generated out of the effusion of melancolick blood, or secondarily out of the drugs and remainder of a phlegmonous or cedematous tumour. Harvey.
SE'CONDARINESS. n. f. [from secondarily.] The state of being secondary.
That which is peculiar and discriminative, must be taken from the primariness and secondariness of the perception. Narr.
SE'CONDARY. adj. [from secondarily, Latin.]
1. Not primary; not of the first intention; not of the first rate; next to the first.
Two are the radical differences: the secondary differences are as four. Bacon's Natural History.
Wherefore there is moral right on the one hand, no secondary right can discharge it. L'Estrange.
Gravitation is the powerful cement which holds together this magnificent structure of the world, which stretcheth the North over the empty space, and banteth the earth upon nothing, to transfer the words of Job from the first and real cause to the secondary. Bentley.
If the system had been fortuitously formed by the convening matter of a chaos, how is it conceivable that all the planets, both primary and secondary, should revolve the same way from the West to the East, and that in the same plane? Bentl.
2. Acting by transmission or deputation.
That we were form'd then, say'st thou? and the work
Of secondary hands, by talk transfer'd
From father to his son? Milton's Paradise Lost, b. v.
As in a watch's fine machine,
Though many artful springs are seen,
The added movements which declare
How full the moon, how old the year,
Derive their secondary pow'r
From that which simply points the hour. Prior.

him, who think fortitude the first virtue in a hero. Dryden.
SE'CRECY. n. f. [from secretus.]
1. Privacy; state of being hidden.
That's not suddenly to be perform'd,
But with advice and silent secrecy. Shak. Henry VI.
The lady Anne,
Whom the king hath in secrecy long married,
This day was view'd in open as his queen. Shak. H. VIII.
in nature's book of infinite secrecy,
A little can I read. Shak. Ant. and Cleopatra.
2. Solitude; retirement.
Thou in thy secrecy, although alone,
Best with thyself accompany'd, seek'st not Social communication. Milton's Parad. Lost.
There is no such thing as perfect secrecy, to encourage a rational mind to the perpetration of any base action; for a man must first extinguish and put out the great light within him, his conscience; he must get away from himself, and shake off the thousand witnesses which he always carries about him, before he can be alone. South's Sermons.
3. Forbearance of discovery.
It is not with publick as with private prayer: in this rather secrecy is commanded than outward shew; whereas that being the publick act of a whole society, requireth accordingly more care to be had of external appearance. Hooker.
4. Fidelity to a secret; taciturnity inviolate; close silence.
SE'CRET. adj. [from secretus, French; secretus, Latin.]
1. Kept hidden; not revealed; concealed; private.

 Of our unbitted lusts, I take this that you call love to be a sect or cion. Shakesp. Othello.
SECTARISM. n. f. [from secta.] Disposition to petty sects in opposition to things established.
 Nothing hath more marks of schism and sectarism than this presbyterian way. King Charles.
SECTARY. n. f. [sectaire, French; from secta.]
 1. One who divides from publick establishment, and joins with those distinguished by some particular whims.
 My lord, you are a sectary,
 That's the plain truth. Shakesp.
 Romish catholic tenets are inconsistent, on the one hand, with the truth of religion professed and protected by the church of England, whence we are called protestants; and the anabaptists, and separatists, and sectaries, on the other hand, whose tenets are full of schism, and inconsistent with monarchy. Bac.
 The number of sectaries does not concern the clergy in point of interest or conscience. Swift.
 2. A follower; a pupil.
 The sectaries of my celestial skill,
 That want to be the world's chief ornament,
 And learned imps that wont to shoot up still,
 They under keep. Spenser.
SECTATOR. n. f. [sectateur, Fr. sectator, Latin.] A follower; an imitator; a disciple.
 Hereof the wiser fort and the best learned philosophers were not ignorant, as Cicero witnesseth, gathering the opinion of Aristotle and his sectators. Raleigh.
SECTION. n. f. [section, French; sectio, Latin.]
 1. The act of cutting or dividing.
 In the section of bodies, man, of all sensible creatures, has the fullest brain to his proportion. Watson.
 2. A part divided from the rest.
 3. A small and distinct part of a writing or book.
 Instead of their law, which they might not read openly, they read of the prophets, that which in likeness of matter came nearest to each section of their law. Hooker.
 The production of volatile salts I reserve 'till I mention them in another section. Boyle.
 Without breaking in upon the connection of his language, it is hardly possible to give a distinct view of his several arguments in distinct sections. Locke.
SECTOR. n. f. [secteur, French.] In geometry.
Sector is an instrument made of wood or metal, with a joint, and sometimes a piece to turn out to make a true square, with lines of sines, tangents, secants, equal parts, rhumbs, polygons, hours, latitudes, metals and solids. It is generally useful in all the practical parts of the mathematics, and particularly contrived for navigation, surveying, astronomy, dialling, and projection of the sphere. All the lines of the sector can be accommodated to any radius, which is done by taking off all divisions parallelwise, and not lengthwise; the ground of which practice is this, that parallels to the base of any plain triangle, bear the same proportion to it as the parts of the legs above the parallel do to the whole legs. Harriot.

SECULAR. adj. [secularis, Latin; seculier, French.]
 1. Not spiritual; relating to affairs of the present world; not holy; worldly.
 This in every several man's actions of common life, appertaineth unto moral; in publick and politick secular affairs, unto civil wisdom. Hooker.
 Then shall they seek 't' avail themselves of names,
 Places, and titles; and with these to join Secular pow'r, though feigning still to act
 By spiritual. Milton's Paradise Lost.
 2. [In the church of Rome.] Not bound by monastick rules.
 Those northern nations easily embraced the religion of those they subdued, and by their devotion gave great authority and reverence, and thereby ease to the clergy both secular and regular. Temple.
 In France vast numbers of ecclesiasticks, secular and religious, live upon the labours of others. Addison.
 3. [Seculaire, Fr.] Happening or coming once in a secl or century.
 The secular year was kept but once in a century. Addison.
SECULARITY. n. f. [from secular.] Worldliness; attention to the things of the present life.
 Littleless and secularity of spirit is the greatest enemy to contemplation. Burnet's Theory of the Earth.
 To SECULARIZE. v. a. [seculariser, Fr. from secular.]
 1. To convert from spiritual appropriations to common use.
 2. To make worldly.
SECULARLY. adv. [from secular.] In a worldly manner.
SECULARNESS. n. f. [from secular.] Worldliness.
SECUNDINE. n. f. [secundines, secundes, Fr. secundae, viz. partu quod nascentem infantem sequuntur. Ainsw.] The membrane in which the embryo is wrapped; the after-birth.
 The casting of the skin is by the ancients compared to the breaking of the secundine, or cawl, but not rightly; for the secundine is but a general cover, not shaped according to the parts, but the skin is. Bacon's Nat. History.
 Future ages lie
 Wrapp'd in their sacred secundine asleep. Cowley.
 If the fetus be taken out of the womb inclosed in the secundine, it will continue to live, and the blood to circulate. Ray.
SECURE. adj. [securus, Latin.]
 1. Free from fear; exempt from terror; easy; assured.
 Confidence then bore thee on secure
 To meet no danger. Milton.
 One maid she had, belov'd above the rest;
Secure of her, the secret she confest. Dryden.
 In Lethe's lake souls long oblivion taste;
 Of future life secure, forgetful of the past. Dryden.
 But thou, secure of soul, unbent with woes;
 The more thy fortune frowns, the more oppose. Dryden.
 We live and act as if we were perfectly secure of the final event of things, however we may behave ourselves. Atterbury.
 The portion of their wealth they design for the uses of the poor, they may throw into one of these publick repositories, secure that it will be well employed. Atterbury.
 It concerns the most secure of his strength, to pray to God not to expose him to an enemy. Roger.
 2. Careless; wanting caution; wanting vigilance.
 3. Free from danger; safe.
 Let us not then suspect our happy state,
 As not secure to single or combin'd. Milton.
 Messapus next,
Secure of steel, and fated from the fire, Dryden.
 In pomp appears.
 4. It has sometimes of before the object in all its senses; but more properly from before evil, or the cause of evil.
 Happly too secure of our discharge Milton.
 From penalty.
Secure from fortune's blows,
Secure of what I cannot lose,
 In my small pinnacle I can sail. Dryden's Horat.
 To SECURE. v. a. [from the adjective.]
 1. To make certain; to put out of hazard; to ascertain.
 Nothing left
 That might his happy state secure, Milton.
Secure from outward force.
 I spread a cloud before the victor's sight, Sustain'd the vanquish'd, and secure his flight;
 Ev'n then secure d him, when I fought with joy
 The vow'd destruction of ungrateful Troy. Dryden.
 Actions have their preference, not according to the transient pleasure or pain that accompanies or follows them here, but as they serve to secure that perfect durable happiness hereafter. Locke.
 Truth

SED

Truth and certainty are not secured by innate principles; but men are in the same uncertain floating estate with as without them. Locke.
 That prince who shall be so wise as by established laws of liberty to secure protection to the honest industry of mankind, against the oppression of power, will quickly be too hard for his neighbours. Locke.
 Deeper to wound, she shuns the fight;
 She drops her arms to gain the field:
Secure her conquest by her flight,
 And triumphs when she seems to yield. Prior.
 Nothing can be more artful than the address of Ulysses: he secures himself of a powerful advocate, by paying an ingenuous and laudable deference to his friend. Broom.
 2. To protect; to make safe.
 Where two or three sciences are pursued at the same time, if one of them be dry, as logic, let another be more entertaining, to secure the mind from weariness. Watts.
 3. To insure.
 4. To make fast.
SECURELY. adv. [from secure.] Without fear; carelessly; without danger; safely.
 Love, that had now long time securely slept
 In Venus' lap, unarm'd then and naked,
 'Gan rear his head, by Clotho being wak'd. Spenser.
 'Tis done like Hector, but securely done,
 A little proudly, and great deal misprizing
 The knight oppos'd. Shakesp. Troilus and Cressida.
 His daring foe securely him defy'd. Milton.
 A foul that can securely death defy,
 And count it nature's privilege to die. Dryden's Juven.
 We upon our globe's last verge shall go,
 And view the ocean leaning on the sky;
 From thence our rolling neighbours we shall know,
 And on the lunar world securely pry. Dryden.
 Whether any of the reasonings are inconsistent, I securely leave to the judgment of the reader. Atterbury.
SECUREMENT. n. f. [from secure.] The cause of safety; protection; defence.
 They, like Judas, desire death; Cain, on the contrary, grew afraid thereof, and obtained a securement from it. Brown.
SECURITY. n. f. [securitas, Fr. securitas, Lat. from securus.]
 1. Carelessness; freedom from fear.
 Marvellous security is always dangerous, when men will not believe any bees to be in a hive, until they have a sharp sense of their stings. Hayward.
 2. Vicious carelessness; confidence; want of vigilance.
 There is scarce truth enough alive to make societies secure; but security enough to make friendships accurst. Shakesppeare.
 How senseless then, and dead a soul hath he,
 Which thinks his soul doth with his body die;
 Or thinks not so, but so would have it be,
 That he might sin with more security. Davies.
 3. Protection; defence.
 If the providence of God be taken away, what security have we against those innumerable dangers to which human nature is continually exposed? Tillotson.
 4. Any thing given as a pledge or caution; insurance; assurance for any thing.
 When they had taken security of Jason, they let them go. Acts xvii 9.
 It is possible for a man, who hath the appearance of religion, to be wicked and an hypocrite; but it is impossible for a man, who openly declares against religion, to give any reasonable security that he will not be false and cruel. Swift.
 Exchequer bills have been generally reckoned the surest and most sacred of all securities. Swift's Examiner.
 The Romans do not seem to have known the secret of paper credit, and securities upon mortgages. Arbutnot on Coins.
 5. Safety; certainty.
 Some, who gave their advice for entering into a war, alleged that we should have no security for our trade, while Spain was subject to a prince of the Bourbon family. Swift.
SEDA'N. n. f. [from sedes, Latin.] A kind of portable coach; a chair.
 Some beg for absent persons, feign them sick,
 Close mew'd in their sedans for want of air,
 And for their wives produce an empty chair. Dryden.
 By a tax of Cato's it was provided, that women's wearing cloaths, ornament and sedan, exceeding 12 l. 1 s. 10 d. half-penny, should pay 30 s. in the hundred pound value. Arbutnot.
SEDATE. adj. [sedatus, Latin.] Calm; quiet; still; unruffled; undisturbed; serene.
 With countenance calm and soul sedate,
 Thus Turnus.
 Disputation carries away the mind from that calm and sedate temper which is so necessary to contemplate truth. Watts.
SEDATELY. adv. [from sedate.] Calmly; without disturbance.
 That has most weight with them that appears sedately to come from their parents reason. Locke.
SEDATENESS. n. f. [from sedate.] Calmness; tranquillity; serenity; freedom from disturbance.

SED

There is a particular sedateness in their conversation and behaviour that qualifies them for council, with a great intrepidity that fits them for action. Addison on the War.
SEDENTARINESS. n. f. [from sedentary.] The state of being sedentary; inactivity.
SEDENTARY. adj. [sedentaire, French; sedentarius, Italian; sedentarius, from sedes, Latin.]
 1. Passed in sitting still; wanting motion or action.
 A sedentary life, appropriate to all students, crushes the bowels; and, for want of stirring the body, suffers the spirits to lie dormant. Harvey on Consumptions.
 The blood of labouring people is more dense and heavy than of those who live a sedentary life. Arbutnot.
 2. Torpid; inactive; sluggish; motionless.
 The sedentary earth,
 That better might with far less compass move,
 Serv'd by more noble than herself, attains
 Her end without least motion. Milton.
 'Till length of years
 And sedentary numbness, craze my limbs
 To a contemptible old age obscure. Milton's Agonistes.
 The soul, considered abstractedly from its passions, is of a remiss sedentary nature, slow in its resolves, and languishing in its executions. Addison's Spectator.
SEDGE. n. f. [træcs, Saxon; whence, in the provinces, a narrow flag is called a sag or seg.] A growth of narrow flags; a narrow flag.
 'T'one layeth for turf and for sedge. Tusser.
 The current, that with gentle murmur glides,
 Thou know'st, being stopp'd, impatiently doth rage;
 But when his fair course is not hindered,
 He makes sweet music with th' enamel'd stones,
 Giving a gentle kiss to every sedge
 He overtaketh in his pilgrimage;
 And so by many winding nooks he strays,
 With willing sport, to the wild ocean. Shakesppeare.
 Adonis, painted by a running brook,
 And Cytherea all in sedges hid;
 Which seem to move and wanton with her breath,
 Even as the waving sedes play with wind. Shakesppeare.
 In hotter countries a fly called lucciole, that shineth as the glow-worm, is chiefly upon fens and marshes; yet is not seen but in the height of summer, and sedge or other green of the fens give as good shade as bushes. Bacon.
 He hid himself in the sedges adjoining. Sandys.
 My bonds I brake,
 Fled from my guards, and in a muddy lake,
 Amongst the sedges, all the night lay hid. Denham.
 Niphates, with inverted urn,
 And drooping sedes, shall his Armenia mourn. Dryden.
SEBGY. adj. [from sedge.] Overgrown with narrow flags.
 On the gentle Severn's sed bank,
 In single opposition, hand to hand,
 He did confound the best part of an hour,
 In changing hardiment with great Glendower. Shak. H. IV.
 Old father Thames rais'd up his reverend head,
 But fear'd the fate of Simois would return:
 Deep in his ooze he sought his sedge bed,
 And thrunk his waters back into his urn. Dryden.
SEDIMENT. n. f. [sediment, French; sedimentum, Lat.] That which subsides or settles at the bottom.
 The salt water rises into a kind of scum on the top, and partly goeth into a sediment in the bottom, and so is rather a separation than an evaporation. Bacon's Nat. History.
 It is not bare agitation, but the sediment at the bottom, that troubles and defiles the water. South's Sermons.
 That matter sunk not down 'till last of all, settling at the surface of the sediment, and covering all the rest. Woodward.
SEDITION. n. f. [sedition, Fr. seditio, Latin.] A tumult; an insurrection; a popular commotion; an uproar.
 That sunshine brew'd a show'r for him,
 And heap'd sedition on his crown at home. Shak. H. VI.
 In soothing them we nourish, 'gainst our senate,
 The cockle of rebellion, insolence, sedition. Shak. Coriolan.
SEDITIONARY. adj. [seditionaire, Fr. seditionarius, Latin.] Factious with tumult; turbulent.
 The cause, why I have brought this army hither,
 Is to remove proud Somerset from the king,
Seditious to his grace and to the state. Shakesp. H. VI.
 Very many of the nobility in Edenborough, at that time, did not appear yet in this seditious behaviour. Clarendon.
 Thou return'st
 From flight, seditious angel.
 But if she has deform'd this earthly life
 With murd'rous rapine and seditious strife,
 In everlasting darkness must she lie;
 Still more unhappy that she cannot die. Prior.
SEDITIONARILY. adv. [from seditionary.] Tumultuously; with factious turbulence.
SEDITIONOUSNESS. n. f. [from seditionary.] Turbulence; disposition to sedition.

SED

To SEDUCE v. a. [seduce, Latin; seduire, French.] To draw aside from the right; to tempt; to corrupt; to deprave; to mislead; to deceive.

'Tis meet
That noble minds keep ever with their likes;
For who so firm that cannot be seduc'd? Shakeſp. Jul. Cæſ.
Me the gold of France did not seduce,
Although I did admit it as a motive,
The ſooner to effect what I intended. Shakeſp. H. V.
A beauty-waining and diſtreſſed widow,
Seduc'd the pitch and height of all his thoughts
To baſe declenſion. Shakeſp. R. III.
In the latter times ſome ſhall depart from the faith, giving heed to ſeducing ſpirits. 1 Tim. iv. 1.
I ſhall never gratify the ſpightfulneſs of a few with any ſmaller thoughts of all their allegiance, whom pious frauds have ſeduc'd. King Charles.
Subtle he needs muſt be who could ſeduc'e Angels. Milton.
Nor let falſe friends ſeduc'e thy mind to fame,
By arrogating Johnſon's hoſtile name;
Let father Flecknoe fire thy mind with praife,
And uncle Ogleby thy envy raiſe. Dryden.
SEDUCEMENT. n. ſ. [from ſeduc'e.] Practice of ſeduction; art or means uſed in order to ſeduc'e.
To ſeaſon them, and win them early to the love of virtue and true labour, ere any flattering ſeducement or vain principle ſeize them wandering, ſome eaſy and delightful book of education ſhould be read to them. Milton on Education.
Her hero's dangers touch'd the pitying pow'r,
The nymph's ſeductions, and the magick bow'r. Pope.
SEDUCER. n. ſ. [from ſeduc'e.] One who draws aſide from the right; a tempter; a corrupter.
Grant it me, O king; otherwiſe a ſeducer flouriſhes, and a poor maid is undone. Shakeſp. Lear.
There is a teaching by reſtraining ſeducers, and to removing the hindrances of knowledge. Saut.
The ſoft ſeducer, with enticing looks,
The bellowing rivals to the fight provokes. Dryden.
He whoſe firm faith no reaſon could remove,
Will melt before that ſoft ſeducer, love. Dryden.
SEDUCIBLE. adj. [from ſeduc'e.] Corruptible; capable of being drawn aſide.
The vicious example of ages paſt poisons the curioſity of theſe preſent, affording a hint of ſin unto ſeducible ſpirits.
Brown's Vulg. Errors.
We owe much of our error to the power which our affections have over our ſo eaſy ſeducible underſtandings. Glauv.
SEDUCTION. n. ſ. [ſeduction, Fr. ſeducere, Latin.] The act of ſeducing; the act of drawing aſide.
Whatever ſins were faith, patience, or perſeverance were, any remarkable indulgence to this ſin, the ſeduction of Balaam, were ſure to bring judgments. Hammond.
To procure the miſeries of others in thoſe extremities, wherein we hold an hope to have no ſociety ourſelves, is a ſtrain above Lucifer, and a project beyond the primary ſedu-ction of hell. Brown's Vulg. Errors.
Whereby is evident the eaſy ſeduction of men, neither inquiring into the verity of the ſubſtance, nor reforming upon repugnance of circumſtances. Brown's Vulg. Err.
The deceiver ſoon found out this ſoft place of Adam's, and innocency itſelf did not ſecure him from this way of ſedu-ction. Glauv. Sceps.
Helen aſcribes her ſeduction to Venus, and mentions nothing of Paris. Pope.
A woman who is above flattery, and deſpises all praife, but that which flows from the approbation of her own heart, is morally ſpeaking, out of reach of ſeduction. Clariffa.
SEDULITY. n. ſ. [ſedulitas, Latin.] Diligent aſſiduity; laboriouſneſs; induſtry; application; intenſeneſs of endeavour.
Man oftentimes purſues, with great ſedulity and earneſtneſs, that which cannot ſtand him in any ſtead for vital purpoſe. Hooker.
Let there be but the ſame propenſity and bent of will to religion, and there will be the ſame ſedulity and indefatigable indultry in mens enquiries into it. Saut.
SEDULOUS. adj. [ſedulus, Latin.] Aſſiduous; induſtrious; laborious; diligent; painful.
Not ſedulous by nature to indite
Wars, hitherto the only argument
Heroick deem'd. Milton's Paraſite Loſt.
What ſignifies the ſound of words in prayer, without the affection of the heart, and a ſedulous application of the proper means that may naturally lead us to ſuch an end. L'Eſtrange.
The goat, now bright amidſt her fellow flars,
Kind Amalthæa reach'd her teat, diſtint
With milky, thy early food; the ſedulous bee Diſtill'd her honey on thy purple lips. Prior.
The bare majority of a few representatives is often procured by great induſtry and application, wherein thoſe who engage in the purſuits of malice are much more ſedulous than ſuch as would prevent them. Swift.

SEE

SEE. interjection. [Originally the imperative of the verb ſee.] Lo; look; obſerve; behold.

See, ſee! upon the banks of Boyne he ſtands,
By his own view adjusting his commands. Halfax.
See! the ſole bliſs heav'n could on all beſtow,
Which who but feels can taſte, but thinks can know? Pope.
See what it is to have a poet in your houſe. Pope.
SEED. n. ſ. [ſæb, Saxon; ſeed, Daniſh; ſaad, Dutch.]
1. The organized particle produced by plants and animals, from which new plants and animals are generated.
If you can look into the ſeeds of time,
And ſay which grain will grow and which will not,
Speak then to me. Shakeſp. Macbeth.
Seed of a year old is the beſt, though ſome ſeed and grains
laſt better than others. Bacon's Nat. Hiſtory.
That every plant has its ſeed is an evident ſign of divine providence. More.
Did they ever ſee any herbs, except thoſe of the graſs-leaved tribe, come up without two ſeed leaves; which to me is an argument that they came all of ſeed, there being no reaſon elſe why they ſhould produce two ſeed leaves different from the ſubſequent. Ray.
Juſt gods! all other things their like produce;
The vine ariſes from her mother's juice:
When feeble plants or tender flow'rs decay,
They to their ſeed their images convey. Prior.
In the fourth part of Staffordſhire they go to the north for ſeed corn. Mortimer.
2. Firſt principle; original.
The ſeed of whatever perfect virtue groweth from us, is a right opinion touching things divine. Hooker.
3. Principle of production.
Praiſe of great acts he ſcatters as a ſeed,
Which may be like in coming ages bred. Waller.
4. Progeny; offspring; deſcendants.
Next him king Lear in happy peace long reign'd;
But had no iſſue male him to ſucceed,
But three fair daughters, which were well uptrain'd
In all that ſeemed fit for kingly ſeed. Fairy Queen.
The thing doth touch
The main of all your ſtates, your blood, your ſeed. Daniel.
When God gave Canaan to Abraham, he thought fit to put his ſeed into the grant too. Locke.
5. Race; generation; birth.
Of mortal ſeed they were not held,
Which other mortals ſo excel'd;
And beauty too in ſuch exceſs,
As your's, Zelinda! claims no leſs. Waller.
TO SEED. v. n. [from the noun.] To grow to perfect maturity ſo as to ſeed the ſeed.
Whatever I plant, like corn on barren earth,
By an equivocal birth,
Seds and runs up to poetry. Swift.
They pick up all the roots, except what they deſign for ſeed, which they let ſtand to ſeed the next year. Mortimer.
SEEDCAKE. n. ſ. [ſeed and cake.] A ſweet cake interperſed with warm aromatick ſeeds.
Remember, wife,
The ſeedcake, the paſties, and fermenty pot. Tuſſer.

SEE'ING that. } more grammatically written, as in French,
ſeen that, or provided that. } Since; ſith; it being ſo that.
Why ſhould not they be as well victualled for ſo long time, as the ſhips are uſually for a year, ſeeing it is eaſier to keep victuals on land than water? Spenser on Ireland.
How ſhall they have any trial of his doctrine, learnings,
and ability to preach, ſeeing that he may not publicly either teach or exhort, becauſe he is not yet called to the mi-niſtry? Whitgift.
Seeing every nation affords not experience and tradition enough for all kind of learning, therefore we are taught the languages of thoſe people who have been moſt induſtrious after wiſdom. Milton on Education.
Seeing they explained the phenomena of viſion, imagination, and thought, by certain thin fleeces of atoms that flow from the ſurfaces of bodies, and by their ſubtlety penetrate any obſtacle, and yet retain the exact lineaments of the ſeveral bodies from which they proceed: in conſequence of this hypo-theſis they maintained, that we could have no phantaſy of any thing, but what did really ſubſiſt either intire or in its ſeveral parts. Bentley's Sermons.
TO SEEK. v. a. pret. I ſought; part. paſſ. ſought. [ſecan, Sax.
ſeeken, Dutch.]
1. To look for; to ſearch for.

I have a venturesome ſeek, that ſhall ſeek
The ſquirrel's hoard, and fetch thee thence new nuts. Shak.
Becaule of the money returned in our ſacks, are we brought in, that he may ſeek occaſion againſt us, and take us for bond-
men. Gen. xliii. 18.
He ſeeketh unto him a cunning workman, to prepare a graven image. Jſ. xl. 20.
Seek thee a man which may go with thee. Jſ. v. 3.
The king meant not to ſeek out nor to decline fighting with them, if they put themſelves in his way. Clarendon.
Sweet peace, where doſt thou dwell?
I humbly crave,
Let me once know;
I ſought thee in a ſecret cave,
And aſk'd if peace were there. Herbert.
So fatal 'twas to ſeek temptations out!
Moſt confidence has ſtill moſt cauſe to doubt. Dryden.
We muſt ſeek out ſome other original of power for the government of politics than this of Adam, or elſe there will be none at all in the world. Locke.
2. To ſolicit; to endeavour to gain.
Others tempting him, ſought of him a ſign. Lu. xi. 16.
The young lions roar after their prey, and ſeek their meat from God. Pſ. civ. 21.
God hath bid dwell far off all anxious cares,
And not moleſt us, unleſs we ourſelves
Seek them with wandering thoughts. Milton.
Oft our alliance other lands deſir'd,
And what we ſeek of you, of us requir'd. Dryden.
3. To go to find.
Let us ſeek death, or, he not found, ſupply
His office. Milton.
Dardanus, though born
On Latian plains, yet ſought the Phrygian ſhore.
Like fury ſeiz'd the reſt; the progreſs known,
All ſeek the mountains, and forſake the town.
Since great Ulyſſes ſought the Phrygian plains,
Within theſe walls inglorious ſilence reigns. Pope.
Indulge one labour more,
And ſeek Atreides on the Spartan ſhore. Pope.
4. To purſue by ſecret machinations.
I had a ſon,
Now outlaw'd from my blood; he ſought my life. Shakeſp.

SEE. interjection. [Originally the imperative of the verb ſee.] Lo; look; obſerve; behold.

See, ſee! upon the banks of Boyne he ſtands,
By his own view adjusting his commands. Halfax.
See! the ſole bliſs heav'n could on all beſtow,
Which who but feels can taſte, but thinks can know? Pope.
See what it is to have a poet in your houſe. Pope.
SEED. n. ſ. [ſæb, Saxon; ſeed, Daniſh; ſaad, Dutch.]
1. The organized particle produced by plants and animals, from which new plants and animals are generated.
If you can look into the ſeeds of time,
And ſay which grain will grow and which will not,
Speak then to me. Shakeſp. Macbeth.
Seed of a year old is the beſt, though ſome ſeed and grains
laſt better than others. Bacon's Nat. Hiſtory.
That every plant has its ſeed is an evident ſign of divine providence. More.
Did they ever ſee any herbs, except thoſe of the graſs-
leaved tribe, come up without two ſeed leaves; which to me is an argument that they came all of ſeed, there being no reaſon elſe why they ſhould produce two ſeed leaves different from the ſubſequent. Ray.
Juſt gods! all other things their like produce;
The vine ariſes from her mother's juice:
When feeble plants or tender flow'rs decay,
They to their ſeed their images convey. Prior.
In the fourth part of Staffordſhire they go to the north for
ſeed corn. Mortimer.
2. Firſt principle; original.
The ſeed of whatever perfect virtue groweth from us, is a right opinion touching things divine. Hooker.
3. Principle of production.
Praiſe of great acts he ſcatters as a ſeed,
Which may be like in coming ages bred. Waller.
4. Progeny; offspring; deſcendants.
Next him king Lear in happy peace long reign'd;
But had no iſſue male him to ſucceed,
But three fair daughters, which were well uptrain'd
In all that ſeemed fit for kingly ſeed. Fairy Queen.
The thing doth touch
The main of all your ſtates, your blood, your ſeed. Daniel.
When God gave Canaan to Abraham, he thought fit to put his ſeed into the grant too. Locke.
5. Race; generation; birth.
Of mortal ſeed they were not held,
Which other mortals ſo excel'd;
And beauty too in ſuch exceſs,
As your's, Zelinda! claims no leſs. Waller.
TO SEED. v. n. [from the noun.] To grow to perfect maturity ſo as to ſeed the ſeed.
Whatever I plant, like corn on barren earth,
By an equivocal birth,
Seds and runs up to poetry. Swift.
They pick up all the roots, except what they deſign for ſeed, which they let ſtand to ſeed the next year. Mortimer.
SEEDCAKE. n. ſ. [ſeed and cake.] A ſweet cake interperſed with warm aromatick ſeeds.
Remember, wife,
The ſeedcake, the paſties, and fermenty pot. Tuſſer.
SEEDLING. n. ſ. [from ſeed.] A young plant juſt riſen from the ſeed.
Carry into the ſhade ſuch ſeedlings or plants as are for their choiceneſs reſerved in pots. Evelyn's Kalendar.
SEEDNESS. n. ſ. [from ſeed.] Seedtime; the time of ſowing, Bloſſoming time
From the ſeeds the bare fallow brings To teeming ſoylon. Shakeſp. Measure for Measure.
SEEDSMAN. n. ſ. [ſeed and man.] The ſower; he that ſcatters the ſeed.
The higher Nilus ſwells
The more it promiſes: as it ebbs, the ſeedſman
Upon the ſlime and ooze ſcatters his grain,
And ſhortly comes to harveſt. Shak. Ant. and Cleopatra.
SEEDY. adj. [from ſeed.] Abounding with ſeed.
SEE'ING. n. ſ. [from ſee.] Sight; viſion.
Love adds a precious ſeeing to the eye. Shakeſp. Lear.
SEE'ING. v. a. [ſee, French; from ſee.] It would be SEE'ING that. } more grammatically written, as in French,
ſeen that, or provided that. } Since; ſith; it being ſo that.
Why ſhould not they be as well victualled for ſo long time,
as the ſhips are uſually for a year, ſeeing it is eaſier to keep victuals on land than water? Spenser on Ireland.
How ſhall they have any trial of his doctrine, learnings,
and ability to preach, ſeeing that he may not publicly either teach or exhort, becauſe he is not yet called to the mi-niſtry? Whitgift.
Seeing every nation affords not experience and tradition
enough for all kind of learning, therefore we are taught the languages of thoſe people who have been moſt induſtrious after wiſdom. Milton on Education.
Seeing they explained the phenomena of viſion, imagination, and thought, by certain thin fleeces of atoms that flow
from the ſurfaces of bodies, and by their ſubtlety penetrate
any obſtacle, and yet retain the exact lineaments of the ſeveral bodies from which they proceed: in conſequence of this hypo-
theſis they maintained, that we could have no phantaſy of any thing, but what did really ſubſiſt either intire or in its ſeveral parts. Bentley's Sermons.
TO SEEK. v. a. pret. I ſought; part. paſſ. ſought. [ſecan, Sax.
ſeeken, Dutch.]
1. To look for; to ſearch for.
He did range the town to ſeek me out. Shakeſp. Lear.
I have a venturesome ſeek, that ſhall ſeek
The ſquirrel's hoard, and fetch thee thence new nuts. Shak.
Becaule of the money returned in our ſacks, are we brought in, that he may ſeek occaſion againſt us, and take us for bond-
men. Gen. xliii. 18.
He ſeeketh unto him a cunning workman, to prepare a graven image. Jſ. xl. 20.
Seek thee a man which may go with thee. Jſ. v. 3.
The king meant not to ſeek out nor to decline fighting with them, if they put themſelves in his way. Clarendon.
Sweet peace, where doſt thou dwell?
I humbly crave,
Let me once know;
I ſought thee in a ſecret cave,
And aſk'd if peace were there. Herbert.
So fatal 'twas to ſeek temptations out!
Moſt confidence has ſtill moſt cauſe to doubt. Dryden.
We muſt ſeek out ſome other original of power for the government of politics than this of Adam, or elſe there will be none at all in the world. Locke.
2. To ſolicit; to endeavour to gain.
Others tempting him, ſought of him a ſign. Lu. xi. 16.
The young lions roar after their prey, and ſeek their meat
from God. Pſ. civ. 21.
God hath bid dwell far off all anxious cares,
And not moleſt us, unleſs we ourſelves
Seek them with wandering thoughts. Milton.
Oft our alliance other lands deſir'd,
And what we ſeek of you, of us requir'd. Dryden.
3. To go to find.
Let us ſeek death, or, he not found, ſupply
His office. Milton.
Dardanus, though born
On Latian plains, yet ſought the Phrygian ſhore.
Like fury ſeiz'd the reſt; the progreſs known,
All ſeek the mountains, and forſake the town.
Since great Ulyſſes ſought the Phrygian plains,
Within theſe walls inglorious ſilence reigns. Pope.
Indulge one labour more,
And ſeek Atreides on the Spartan ſhore. Pope.
4. To purſue by ſecret machinations.
I had a ſon,
Now outlaw'd from my blood; he ſought my life. Shakeſp.
David ſaw that Saul was come out to ſeek his life. 1 Sa. xxiii.
TO SEEK. v. n.
1. To make ſearch; to make inquiry; to endeavour.
Seek ye out of the book of the Lord, and read. Jſ. xxxiv.
Why ſhould he mean me ill, or ſeek to harm? Milton.

SEE

- Ask not what pains, nor further seek to know.
Their process, or the forms of law below. Dryden.
I have been forced to relinquish that opinion, and have endeavoured to seek after some better reason. Addison's Spectator.
2. To make pursuit.
Violent men have sought after my soul. Pf. lxxxvi. 14.
If thy brother's ox or sheep go astray, it shall be with thee until thy brother seek after it. Deut. xxii. 2.
3. To apply to; to use solicitation.
All the earth sought to Solomon, to hear his wisdom. 1 K.
Unto his habitation shall ye seek, and thither thou shalt come. Deut. xii. 5.
4. To endeavour after.
Being a man of experience, he wished by wisdom to order that which the young prince sought for by war. Knolles.
To SEEK. [An adverbial mode of speech.] At a loss; without measures, knowledge, or experience.
Being brought and transferred from other services abroad, though they be of good experience in those, yet in these they will be new to seek; and before they have gathered experience, they shall buy it with great loss to his majesty. Spenser.
Unpractis'd, unprepar'd, and still to seek. Addison.
But they misplace them all;
And are as much to seek in other things,
As he that only can design a tree,
Would be to draw a shipwreck. Recommon.
SEEKER. n. f. [from seek.] One that seeks; an inquirer.
Though I confess that in philosophy I'm a seeker, yet cannot believe that a peepick in philosophy must be one in divinity. Glauco.
A language of a very witty volatile people, seekers after novelty, and abounding with variety of notions. Locke.
SEEK-SROW. n. f. [seek and sorrow.] One who contrives to give himself vexation.
Afield they go, where many lookers be,
And thou seeker to, Klaus, them among:
Indeed thou saidst it was thy friend to see,
Strephon, whose absence seem'd unto thee long. Sidney.
To SEEK. v. a. [secker, to seal, French.] To close the eyes.
A term of falconry, the eyes of a wild or haggard hawk being for a time seeled or closed.
Now she brought them to see a seeled dove, who the blinder she was, the higher she strave. Sidney.
As gentle hind, whose sides with cruel steel
Through lanced, her bleeding life does rain;
While the sad pang approaching she does feel,
Brays out her latest breath, and up her eyes doth feel. F. 2.
Mine eyes no more on vanity shall feed,
But seeled up with death shall have their deadly meed. F. 2.
Come, seeling night,
Scarf up the tender eye of pitiful day. Shakespeare. Macbeth.
Some ambitious men seem as screens to princes in matters of danger and envy; for no man will take such parts, unless he be like the seeled dove, that mounts and mounts, because he cannot see about him. Bacon.
Since, blinded with ambition, he did soar
Like a seeled dove, his crime shall be his punishment,
To be depriv'd of sight. Denham's Sophy.
To SEEL. v. n. [ryllan, Saxon.] To lean on one side.
When a ship seels or rows in foul weather, the breaking loose of ordinance is a thing very dangerous. Raleigh.
SEELY. adj. [from seel, lucky time, Saxon.]
1. Lucky; happy.
My seely sheep like well below,
For they been hale enough and trow,
And liken their abode. Spenser.
2. Silly; foolish; simple. Spenser.
Peacock and turkie, that nibbles off top,
Are very ill neighbours to seely poor hop. Tusser.
To SEEM. v. n. [sembler, French; unless it has a Teutonic original, as seemly certainly has.]
1. To appear; to make a show; to have semblance.
My lord, you've lost a friend, indeed;
And I dare swear, you borrow not that face
Of seeming sorrow; it is sure your own. Shakespeare. H. IV.
Speak: we will not trust our eyes
Without our ears: thou art not what thou seem'st. Shakespeare.
So spake th' Omnipotent; and with his words
All seem'd well pleas'd; all seem'd, but were not all. Milton.
In holy nuptials ty'd;
A seeming widow, and a secret bride. Dryden.
Observe the youth
Already seems to snuff the vital air. Dryden's A. n.
2. To have the appearance of truth.
It seems to me, that the true reason why we have so few versions which are tolerable, is because there are so few who have all the talents requisite for translation. Dryden.
3. In Shakespeare, to seem, perhaps signifies to be beautiful.
Sir, there she stands:
If aught within that little seeming substance
May fitly like your grace,
She's there, and she is your's. Shakespeare. King Lear.

SEER

4. It SEEMS. A phrase hard to be explained. It sometimes signifies that there is an appearance, though no reality; but generally it is used ironically to condemn the thing mentioned; like the Latin scilicet, or the old English forsooth. Id. milt datur negotii scilicet. This, it seems, is to be my task.
The earth by these, 'tis said,
This single crop of men and women bred;
Who, grown adult, so chance, it seems, enjoin'd,
Did male and female propagate. Blackmore's Creation.
5. It is sometimes a slight affirmation.
A prince of Italy, it seems, entertained his mistress upon a great lake. Addison's Guardian.
The raven, urg'd by such impertinence,
Grew passionate, it seems, and took offence. Addison.
He had been a chief magistrate; and had, it seems, executed that high office justly and honourably. Atterbury.
It seems that when first I was discovered sleeping on the ground, the emperor had early notice. Gulliver.
6. It appears to be.
Here's another discontented paper,
Found in his pocket too; and this, it seems,
Rodorigo meant t' have sent. Shakespeare. Othello.
It seems the camel's hair is taken by painters for the skin with the hair on. Brown's Vulgar Errors.
SEEMER. n. f. [from seem.] One that carries an appearance.
Angelo scarce confesses
That his blood flows, or that his appetite
Is more to bread than stone: hence shall we see,
If pow'r change purpose, what our seemers be. Shakespeare. Measure for Measure.
SEEMING. n. f. [from seem.]
1. Appearance; show; semblance.
All good seeming,
By thy revolt, oh husband, shall be thought
Put on for villainy. Shakespeare. Cymbeline.
Give him heedful note;
And, after, we will both our judgments join
In censure of his seeming. Shakespeare. Hamlet.
2. Fair appearance.
For you there's rosemary and rue; these keep Seeming and favour all the Winter long. Shakespeare. Twelfth Night.
3. Opinion.
Nothing more clear unto their seeming, than that a new Jerusalem, being often spoken of in Scripture, they undoubtedly were themselves that new Jerusalem. Hucker.
His persuasive words impregn'd
With reason to her seeming. Milton.
SEEMINGLY. adv. [from seeming.] In appearance; in show;
in semblance.
To this her mother's plot,
She, seemingly obedient, likewise hath Made promise to the doctor. Shakespeare. Merry Wives of Windsor.
They to their viands fell, not seemingly
The angels, nor in mist. Milton.
I have touched upon them, though seemingly collateral to my scope; and yet I think they are more than seemingly so, since they pertinently illustrate my design. Glauco. Scylla.
The city dame was so well bred, as seemingly to take all in good part. L'Estrange.
The king and haughty empress, to our wonder,
If not aton'd, yet seemingly at peace. Dryden.
This the father seemingly complied with; but afterwards refusing, the son was likewise set aside. Addison's Freeholder.
They depend often on remote and seemingly disproportioned causes. Atterbury.
SEEMINGNESS. n. f. [from seeming.] Plausibility; fair appearance.
The seemingness of those reasons persuades us on the other side. Digby.
SEEMLINESS. n. f. [from seemly.] Decency; handfomness;
comeliness; grace; beauty.
When substantialness combineth with delightfulness, seemli-ness with portliness, and currentness with staydness, how can the language sound other than full of sweetness? Camden.
SEEMLY. adj. [seemly, Danish, from seem, Islandick, honour or decency.] Decent; becoming; proper; fit.
Suffrage of judgment and exercise of charity were safer and seemlier for Christian men, than the hot pursuit of these controversies. Hucker.
I am a woman, lacking wit
To make a seemly answer to such persons. Shakespeare. H. VIII.
The wife safest and seemly by her husband stays. Milton.
May we enjoy
Our humid products, and with seemly draughts
Enkindle mirth and hospitable love. Philips.
SEEMLY. adv. [from the adjective.] In a decent manner; in a proper manner.
There, seemly rang'd in peaceful order, flood Ulysses' arms, now long diffus'd to blood. Pope.
SEEN. adj. [from see.] Skilled; versed.
Petruchio shall offer me, disguis'd in fober robes,
To old Baptista as a schoolmaster. Shakespeare. Taming of the Shrew.
Well seen in mischief. Noble.

SEIZ

- Noble Boyle, not less in nature seem,
Than his great brother read in flates and men. Dryden.
SEIZ. n. f. [from see.]
1. One who sees.
We are in hopes that you may prove a dreamer of dreams, and a seer of visions. Addison's Spectator.
2. A prophet; one who foresees future events.
How soon hath thy prediction, seer blest!
Measur'd this transient world the race of time,
'Till time stand fix'd? Milton's Paradise Lost, b. xii.
By day your frighted seers
Shall call for fountains to express their tears,
And with their eyes were floods: by night from dreams
Of opening gulphs, black storms, and raging flames,
Starting amaz'd, shall to the people show
Emblems of heav'nly wrath and mystick types of woe. Pri.
SEERWOOD. n. f. See SEARWOOD. Dry wood.
Caught, like dry stubble fir'd, or like seerwood;
Yet from the wound enflam'd no purple flood,
But look'd a bubbling mass of frying blood. Dryden.
SEESAW. n. f. [from sew.] A reciprocating motion.
His wit all seesaw, between that and this;
Now high, now low, now master up, now miss,
And he himself one vile antithesis. Pope.
To SEESAW. v. n. [from sew.] To move with a reciprocating motion.
Sometimes they were like to pull John over, then it went all of a sudden again on John's side; so they went seesawing up and down, from one end of the room to the other. Arbut.
To SEETH. v. a. preterite I sed or seethed, part. pass. sedden.
[secan, Saxon; sedden, Dutch.] To boil; to decoct in hot liquor.
The Scythians used to seeth the flesh in the hide, and so do the northern Irish. Spenser.
Go, suck the subtle blood o' th' grape,
'Till the high fever seeth your blood to froth,
And fo'ceape hanging. Shakespeare's Timon.
Set on the great pot, and seeth pottage for the sons of the prophets. 2 Kings iv.
To SEETH. v. n. To be in a state of ebullition; to be hot.
The boiling baths at Caibadon,
Which seeth with secret fire eternally,
And in their entrails, full of quick brimston,
Nourish the flames, which they are warm'd upon. Fa. Qu.
I will make a complimentary assault upon him; for my buliness seeth. Shakespeare. Troilus and Cressida.
Lovers and madmen have their seething brains,
Such shaping fantasies, that apprehend
More than cool reason ever comprehends. Shakespeare.
The priest's servant came, while the flesh was in seething, with a flesh-hook, and fluck it into the pan. 1 Sa. ii. 13.
SEETH. n. f. [from seeth.] A boiler; a pot.
The fire thus form'd, the fets the kettle on;
Like burnish'd gold the little seether shone. Dryden.
SEGMENT. n. f. [segment, French; segmentum, Lat.] A figure contained between a chord and an arch of the circle, or so much of the circle as is cut off by that chord.
Even unto a parallel sphere, and such as live under the poles for half a year, some segments may appear at any time, and under any quarter, the sun not setting, but walking round.
Their segments, or arcs, which appeared to numerous, for the most part exceeded not the third part of a circle. Newton.
SEGMENT. n. f. [from segment, Latin.] Sluggishness; inactivity. Ditt.
To SEGREGATE. v. a. [segregate, Latin; segregare, French.]
To set apart; to separate from others.
SEGREGATION. n. f. [segregation, Fr. from segregate.] Separation from others.
What shall we hear of this?
—A segregation of the Irish fleet;
For do but stand upon the foaming shore,
The chiding billows seem to pelt the clouds. Shakespeare. Othello.
SEIGNORIAL. adj. [from seignior.] Invested with large powers; independent.
Those lands were seigniorial. Temple.
SEIGNIOR. n. f. [from seignior, Latin; seigneur, Fr.] A lord.
The title of honour given by Italians.
SEIGNIORE. n. f. [seigneurie, Fr. from seignior.] A lordship;
a territory.
O'Neal never had any seignior over that country, but what by incroachment he got upon the English. Spenser.
Were you not reitor'd?
To all the duke of Norfolk's seigniories? Shakespeare. H. IV.
Hofea, in the person of God, sayeth of the Jews, they have reigned, but not by me; they have set a seignior over themselves; which place proveth plainly, that there are governments which God doth not avow. Bacon.
William Marshal, earl of Pembroke, being lord of all Leinster, had royal jurisdiction throughout that province, and every one of his five sons enjoyed that seignior successively.
Darvies on Ireland.

SEL

- SEIGNORAGE*. n. f. [seigneurage, Fr. from seignior.] Authority; acknowledgment of power.
They brought work to the mint, and a part of the money coined to the crown for seignorage. Locke.
To SEIGNORISE. v. a. [from seignior.] To lord over.
As fair he was as Cytherea's make,
As proud as he that seignioriseth hell. Fairfax.
SEINE. n. f. [sejne, Saxon; seine, seune, seme, French.] A net used in fishing.
They have cock-boats for passengers, and seine boats for taking of pilchards. Carow.
SEINER. n. f. [from seine.] A fisher with nets.
Seiners complain with open mouth, that these drovers work much prejudice to the commonwealth of fishermen, and reap small gain to themselves. Carow's Survey of Cornwall.
To SEIZE. v. a. [saizer, French.]
1. To take possession of; to grasp; to lay hold on; to fasten on:
In her sad breast the prince's fortunes rowl,
And hope and doubt alternate seize her soul. Pope.
2. To take forcible possession of by law.
An escheator of London had arrested a clothier that was outlawed, and seized his goods. Camden.
It was judged by the highest kind of judgment, that he should be banished, and his whole estate confiscated and seized, and his houses pulled down. Bacon.
3. To make possessed.
So th' one for wrong, the other strives for right:
As when a griffin, seized of his prey,
A dragon fierce encount'reth in his flight,
Through wildest air making his idle way. Fa. Queen.
So Pluto, seiz'd of Proserpine, convey'd
To hell's tremendous gloom th' affrighted maid,
There grimly smil'd, pleas'd with the beauteous prize,
Nor envy'd Jove his sunshine and his skies. Addison. Cato.
To SEIZE. v. n. To fix the grasp or the power on any thing.
Fairst Cordelia,
Thee and thy virtues here I seize upon:
Be't lawful I take up what's cast away? Shakespeare. K. Lear.
Where there is a design of supplanting, that necessarily requires another of accusing: even Jezebel projects not to seize on Naboth's vineyard without a precedent charge. Dec. of Piety.
SEIZIN. n. f. [seisine, French.]
1. [In law.] Is of two sorts: seisin in fact, and seisin in law:
Seisin in fact, is when a corporal possession is taken: seisin in law, is when something is done which the law accounteth a seisin, as an enrolment. This is as much as a right to lands and tenements, though the owner be by wrong dispossessed of them. Cowel.
2. The act of taking possession.
Every indulg'd sin gives Satan livery and seisin of his heart, and a power to dispose of it as he pleases. Decay of Piety.
Seisin is the same in the canon law as livery and seisin at the common law. Aspliff's Parergon.
3. The things possessed.
Many recoveries were had as well by heirs as successors of the seizin of their predecessors. Hale.
SEIZURE. n. f. [from seize.]
1. The act of seizing.
2. The thing seized.
Sufficient that thy pray'rs are heard, and death,
Then due by sentence when thou did'st transgress,
Defeated of his seizure, many days
Giv'n thee of grace. Milton's Paradise Lost.
3. The act of taking forcible possession.
Thy lands, and all things that thou do'st call thine,
Worth seizure, do we seize into our hands. Shakespeare.
In the general town he maintained a seizure, and possession of the whole. Watson.
Henry continued to burn protestants, after he had cast off the pope; and his seizure of ecclesiastical revenues cannot be reckoned as a mark of the church's liberty. Swift.
4. Gripe; possession.
And shall these hands, so lately purg'd of blood,
Unyoke this seizure, and this kind regret? Shakespeare.
Make o'er thy honour by a deed of trust,
And give me seizure of the mighty wealth. Dryden.
5. Catch.
Let there be no sudden seizure of a lapsed syllable to play upon it. Watts.
SELCOUTH. adj. [selb, rare, Sax. and couth, known.] Uncommon. Spenser. The same with uncouth.
SELDOM. adv. [selban, rarely; selbon, more rarely; sel-bon, most rarely. Selban is supposed to be contracted from selben, or selb, rare, and paenne, when, Saxon. Selden, Dutch; seltan, German.] Rarely; not often; not frequently.
Wisdom and youth are seldom joined in one; and the ordinary course of the world is more according to Job's observation, who giveth men advice to seek wisdom amongst the ancients, and in the length of days understanding. Hooker.
There is true joy conveyed to the heart by preventing grace, which pardoning grace seldom gives. South's Sermons.
Where

SEL

Where the flight of fancy is managed with good judgment, the self is it is seen it is the more valuable. Grew.
SELDOMNESS. n. f. [from selfdom.] Uncommonness; infrequency; rareness; rarity. Little used.
 Degrees of well-doing there could be none, except perhaps in the selfdomness and oftentimes of doing well. Hooker.
SELDSHOWN. adj. [self and shown.] Seldom exhibited to view.

Selfshown flames
 Do press among the popular throngs. Shaksp. Coriolanus.
 To SELECT. v. a. [selectus, Latin.] To chuse in preference to others rejected.

The footmen, selected out of all the provinces, were greatly diminished, being now scarce eight thousand strong. Knolles.
 The pious chief
 A hundred youths from all his train selected. Dryden.
SELECT. adj. [from the verb.] Nicely chosen; choice; culled out on account of superiour excellence.

To the nuptial bow'r
 I led her, blushing like the morn: all heav'n,
 And happy confessions, on that hour Shed their selectest influence. Milton's Parad. Lost.
Select from vulgar herds, with garlands gay,
 A hundred bulls ascend the sacred way. Prior.

SELECTION. n. f. [selectio, Lat. from select.] The act of culling or chusing; choice.

While we single out several dishes, and reject others, the selection seems but arbitrary. Brown's Vulgar Errors.
SELECTNESS. n. f. [from select.] The state of being select.

SELECTOR. n. f. [from select.] He who selects.
SELENOGRAPHICAL. adj. [selenographique, Fr. from selenogra-
SELENOGRAPHICK. adj. [selenographia, Gr. σεληνη and γραφω.] Belonging to selenography.

SELENOGRAPHY. n. f. [selenographia, Gr. σεληνη and γραφω.] A description of the moon.
 Hevelius, in his accurate selenography, or description of the moon, hath well translated the known appellations of regions, seas, and mountains, unto the parts of that luminary. Brown.

SELF. pronoun. plur. selves. [silba, Gothick; ýlf, ýlfa, Sax. self, selve, Dutch.]

1. Its primary signification seems to be that of an adjective: very; particular; this above others; sometimes, one's own.

Shoot another arrow that self way
 Which you did shoot the first. Shaksp. Merch. of Ven.
 The cruel ministers, by self and violent hands, Took off her life. Shaksp. Lear.
 On these self hills the air is so thin, that it is not sufficient to bear up the body of a bird. Raleigh.
 At that self moment enters Palamon
 The gate of Venus. Dryden.

2. It is united both to the personal pronouns, and to the neutral pronoun it, and is always added when they are used reciprocally, or return upon themselves: as, I did not hurt him, he hurt himself; the people hiss me, but I clap myself; thou lovest thyself, though the world loves thee.

Self is that conscious thinking thing, which is sensible or conscious of pleasure and pain, capable of happiness and misery, and so is concerned for itself, as far as that consciousness extends. Locke.

3. It is sometimes used emphatically in the nominative case: as, myself will decide it; I myself will come; himself shall revenge it. This use of self, thus compounded, without the pronoun personal, is chiefly poetical.

4. Compounded with him, a pronoun substantive, self is in appearance an adjective; joined to my, thy, our, your, pronoun adjectives, it seems a substantive. Even when compounded with him it is at last found to be a substantive, by its variation in the plural, contrary to the nature of English adjectives, as himself, themselves.

5. Myself, himself, themselves, and the rest, may, contrary to the analogy of my, him, them, be used as nominatives.

6. It often adds only emphasis and force to the pronoun with which it is compounded.

Next to the knowledge of God, this knowledge of our selves seems most worthy of our endeavour. Hale.
 The fondness we have for self, and the relation which other things have to our selves, furnishes another long rank of prejudices. Watts.

7. It signifies the individual, as subject to his own contemplation or action.

The spark of noble courage now awake,
 And strive your excellent self to excel. Fairy Queen.
 Since consciousness always accompanies thinking, and it is that that makes every one to be what he calls self, and thereby distinguishes himself from all other thinking things; in this alone consists personal identity, i. e. the sameness of a rational being. Locke.
 It is by the consciousness it has of its present thoughts and actions, that it is self to it self now, and so will be the same self, as far as the same consciousness can extend to actions past or to come. Locke.

8. It is much used in composition, which it is proper to explain

by a train of examples. It is to be observed, that its composition in Shakspere is often harsh.

Then held she her tongue, and cast down a self accusing look, finding that in her self she had shot out of the bow of her affection a more quick opening of her mind, than she minded to have done. Sidney.

Alas! while we are wrapt in foggy mist
 Of our self-love, so passions do deceive,
 We think they hurt when most they do assist. Sidney.
 'Till Stephon's plaining voice him nearer drew,
 Where by his words his self-like case he knew. Sidney.

Ah! where was first that cruel cunning found,
 To frame of earth a vessel of the mind,
 Where it should be to self-destruction bound? Sidney.
 Before the door sat self-consuming care,
 Day and night keeping wary watch and ward. Fa. Queen.

My strange and self-abuse,
 Is the initiate fear that wants hard use. Shaksp. Macbeth.
 I have heard so much,
 And with Demetrius thought I have spoke thereof;
 And being over-full of self-affairs,
 My mind did lose it. Shaksp. Midsum. Night's Dream.

Nor know I aught
 By me that's said or done amidst this night,
 Unless self-charity be sometimes a vice,
 And to defend ourselves it be a sin,
 When violence affails us. Shakspere's Othello.
 He walks, and that self-chain about his neck,
 Which he forswore. Shakspere.

It is in my power, in one self-born hour,
 To plant and o'erwhelm custom. Shaksp. Winter's Tale.
 His treasons will fit blushing in his face,
 Not able to endure the sight of day,
 But self-affrighted tremble at his sin. Shak. Rich. II.

The stars above us govern our conditions;
 Else one self-mate and mate could not beget
 Such different issues. Shakspere.
 I'm made of that self-metal as my sister,
 And prize me at her worth. Shak. King Lear.

In my school-days, when I had lost one shaft,
 I shot his fellow of the self-same flight
 The self-same way, with more advised watch,
 To find the other forth. Shakspere.

He may do some good on her:
 A peevish self-will'd harlotry it is. Shak. Romeo and Juliet.
 But left myself be guilty of self-wrong,
 I'll stop mine ears against the mermaid's song. Shakspere.
 He conjunct and flatter'd his displeasure,
 Tript me behind: being down, insulted, rail'd,
 Got praises of the king. Shakspere.

For him attempting who was self-subdu'd.
 The Everlasting fixt
 His canon 'gainst self-slaughter. Shak. Hamlet.
 Know if his last purpose hold,
 Or whether since he is advis'd by aught
 To change the course? He's full of alteration, And self-reproving. Shaksp. King Lear.

More or less to others paying,
 Than by self-offences weighing;
 Shame to him whose cruel striking,
 Kills for faults of his own liking! Shakspere.

Bellona's bridegroom, lapt in proof,
 Confronted him with self-caparisons,
 Point against point rebellious, arm 'gainst arm,
 Curbing his lavish spirit. Shak. Macbeth.

Self-love, my liege, is not so vile a sin
 As self-neglecting. Shaksp. Henry V.
 Anger is like
 A full hot horse, who, being allow'd his way,
Self-mettle tires him. Shakspere.

His lords desire him to have borne
 His bruised helmet and his bended sword
 Before him through the city; he forbids it,
 Being free from vainness and self-glorious pride. Shaksp.

You promis'd
 To lay aside self-harming heaviness,
 And entertain a cheerful disposition. Shaksp. Rich. III.

In their anger they slew a man, and in their self-will they digged down a wall. Gen. xlix. 6.
 The most ordinary cause of a single life is liberty, especially in certain self-pleasing and humorous minds, which are so sensible of every restraint as to think their girdles and garters to be bonds and shackles. Bacon.

Hast thou set up nothing in competition with God; no pride, pleasure, profit, self-love, or self-interest of thy own? Dugdale.

Up through the spacious palace passed she,
 To where the king's proudly repol'd head,
 If any can be soft to tyranny,
 And self-to-menting sin, had a soft bed. Croft.

SEL

With a joyful willingness these self-loving reformers took possession of all vacant preferments, and with reluctance others parted with their beloved colleges and subsistence. Walton.

Repent the sin; but if the punishment
 Thou can't avoid, self-preservation bids. Milton.
 Him fast sleeping soon he found,
 In labyrinth of many a round self-roll'd. Milton.

Oft times nothing profits more Than self-esteem, grounded on just and right, Well manag'd. Milton's Paradise Lost.

Self-knowing, and from thence Magnanimous, to correspond with heav'n. Milton.
 So virtue giv'n for lost,
 Depress'd and overthrown, as seem'd,
 Like that self-begotten bird,
 In th' Arabian woods emboss'd,
 That no second knows nor third,
 And lay ere while a holocaust,
 From out her airy womb new teem'd. Milton's Agonist.

He sorrows now, repents, and prays contrite,
 My motions in him: longer than they move,
 His heart I know how variable and vain,
Self-left. Milton.

Seneca approves this self-homicide.
 Thyself from flatter'd self-conceit defend,
 Nor what thou do'st not know, to know pretend. Denham.

Man's that savage beast, whose mind,
 From reason to self-love declin'd,
 Delights to prey upon his kind. Denham.

Farewell, my tears;
 And my just anger be no more confin'd
 To vain complaints, or self-devouring silence. Denham.
 They are yet more mad to think that men may go to rest by death, though they die in self-murder, the greatest sin.

Are not these strange self-delusions, and yet attested by common experience? South's Sermons.
 If the image of God is only sovereignty, certainly we have been hitherto much mistaken, and hereafter are to beware of making ourselves unlike God, by too much self-denial and humility. South's Sermons.

If a man would have a devout, humble, fin-abhorring, self- denying frame of spirit, he cannot take a more efficacious course to attain it than by praying himself into it. South.

Let a man apply himself to the difficult work of self-examination by a strict scrutiny into the whole estate of his soul. South's Sermons.

A fatal self-impotence, such as defeats the design, and destroys the force of all religion. South's Sermons.
 When he intends to bereave the world of an illustrious person, he may cast him upon a bold self-opinioned physician, worse than his dissembler, who shall make a shift to cure him into his grave. South's Sermons.

Neglect of friends can never be proved rational, till we prove the person using it omnipotent and self-sufficient, and such as can never need any mortal assistance. South.

By all human laws, as well as divine, self-murder has ever been agreed on as the greatest crime. Temple.
 A self-conceited pop will swallow any thing. L'Estrange.
 From Atreus though your ancient lineage came;
 Yet my self-conscious worth, your high renown,
 Your virtue, through the neighbouring nations blown. Dryden.
 He has given you all the commendation which his self- sufficiency could afford to any. Dryden.

Below yon sphere
 There hangs the ball of earth and water mixt, Self-center'd and unmov'd. Dryden's State of Innocence.
 All these receive their birth from other things,
 But from himself the phoenix only springs;
Self-born, begotten by the parent flame
 In which he burn'd, another and the same. Dryden.

The burning fire that thence so bright,
 Flew off all sudden with extinguish'd light,
 And left one altar dark, a little space;
 Which turn'd self-kindled, and renew'd the blaze. Dryden.

Thou first, O king! relate the rights of sway;
 Pow'r's self-restrain'd, the people best obey. Dryden.
 Eighteen and nineteen are equal to thirty-seven, by the same self-evidence that one and two are equal to three. Locke.

A contradiction of what has been said, is a mark of yet greater pride and self-conceit, when we take upon us to set another right in his story. Locke.

I am as justly accountable for any action done many years since, appropriated to me now by this self-consciousness, as I am for what I did the last moment. Locke.

Each intermediate idea agreeing on each side with those two, it is immediately placed between: the ideas of men and self- determination appear to be connected. Locke.

This self-existent being hath the power of perfection, as well as of existence in himself; for he that is above, or existeth without, any cause, that is, hath the power of existence in himself, cannot be without the power of any possible existence.

Body cannot be self-existent, because it is not self-moving;
 for motion is not of the essence of body, because we may have a definitive conception of body, abstracted from that of motion: wherefore motion is something else besides body, and something without which a body may be conceived to exist.

Confidence, as opposed to modesty, and distinguished from decent assurance, proceeds from self-opinion, occasioned by ignorance or flattery. Collier of Confidence.

Bewilder'd I, my author cannot find,
 'Till some first cause, some self-existent mind,
 Who form'd, and rules all nature, is assign'd. Blackm.

If a first body may to any place
 Be not determin'd in the boundless space,
 'Tis plain it then may absent be from all,
 Who then will this a self-existence call? Blackmore.

Self-preservation fall by her own hand? Graville.
 Low nonsense is the talent of a cold phlegmatick temper:
 a writer of this complexion gropes his way softly amongst self-contradiction, and grovels in absurdities. Addison.

This fatal hypocrisy and self-deceit is taken notice of in these words, Who can understand his errors? Cleanse thou me from secret faults. Addison's Spectator.

The guilt of perjury is so self-evident, that it was always reckoned amongst the greatest crimes, by those who were only governed by the light of reason. Addison.

Self-sufficiency proceeds from inexperience. Addison.
 Men had better own their ignorance than advance doctrines which are self-contradictory. Spectator.

Light, which of all bodies is nearest allied to spirit, is also most diffusive and self-communicative. Norris.
 Thus we see in bodies, the more of kin they are to spirit in subtilty and refinement, the more spreading are they and self- diffusive. Norris.

God, who is an absolute spiritual act, and who is such a pure light as in which there is no darkness, must needs be infinitely self-impacting and communicative. Norris.

Every animal is conscious of some individual, self-moving, self-determining principle. Pope and Arbuthn. Mart. Scrib.
 Nick does not pretend to be a gentleman: he is a tradesman, a self-seeking wretch. Arbuthn. John Bull.

By the blast of self-opinion mov'd,
 We wish to charm, and seek to be belov'd. Prior.
 Living and understanding substances do most clearly demonstrate to philosophical inquirers the necessary self- existence, power, wisdom, and beneficence of their maker.

If it can intrinsically stir itself, and either commence or alter its course, it must have a principle of self-activity, which is life and sense. Bentley's Sermons.

This desire of existence is a natural affection of the soul;
 'tis self-preservation in the highest and truest meaning. Bentley.
 The philosophers, and even the Epicureans, maintained the self-sufficiency of the Godhead, and seldom or never sacrificed

The religion of Jesus, with all its self-denials, virtues, and devotions, is very practicable. Watts.
 I heard in Crete, this island's name;
 For 'twas in Crete, my native soil, I came. Pope's Odyssey.

Self-banish'd thence. Pope's Odyssey.
 Achilles's courage is furious and untractable; that of Ajax is heavy and self-confiding. Pope.

I doom, to fix the gallant ship,
 A mark of vengeance on the sable deep;
 To warn the thoughtless self-confiding train, Pope.
 No more unlicens'd thus to brave the main. Pope.

What is loose love? a transient guilt,
 A vapour fed from wild desire,
 A wand'ring self-consuming fire. Pope.
 In dubious thought the king awaits,
 And self-considering, as he stands, debates. Pope.

By mighty Jove's command,
 Unwilling have I trod this pleasing land;
 For who self-mov'd with weary wing would sweep
 Such length of ocean? Pope.

They who reach Parnassus' lofty crown,
Employ their pains to spurn some others down;
And while self-love each jealous writer rules,
Contending wits become the sport of fools. Pope.
It may be thought that Ulysses here is too ostentatious, and that he dwells more than modestly allows upon his own accomplishments; but self-praise is sometimes no fault. Brown.
No wonder such a spirit, in such a situation, is provoked beyond the regards of religion or self-conviction. Swift.
SELFHEAL. n. f. [brunella, Latin.] A plant. The same with SANICLE, which see.
SELFISH. adj. [from self.] Attentive only to one's own interest; void of regard for others.
What could the most aspiring selfish man desire more, were he to form the notion of a being to whom he would recommend himself, than such a knowledge as can discover the least appearance of perfection, and such a goodness as will proportion a reward to it? Addison's Spectator.
Passions, though selfish, if their means be fair,
Lift under reason, and deserve her care;
Those that imparted court a nobler aim,
Exalt their kind, and take some virtue's name. Pope.
SELFISHNESS. n. f. [from selfish.] Attention to his own interest, without any regard to others; self-love.
This sublimer love, being, by an intimate conjunction with its object, thoroughly refined from all base dross of selfishness and interest, nobly begets a perfect submission of our wills to the will of God. Boyle's Seraphick Love.
SELFISHLY. adv. [from selfish.] With regard only to his own interest; without love of others.
He can your merit selfishly approve,
And thence the sense of it without the love. Pope.
SELFISNESS. adj. [from self and same.] Numerically the same.
I have no great cause to look for other than the self-same portion and lot, which your manner hath been hitherto to lay on them that concur not in opinion with you. Hooker, Pref.
Flight pursu'd one way the self-same hour. Milton.
I have been base,
Base ev'n to him from whom I did receive
All that a son could to a parent give;
Behold me punish'd in the self-same kind;
Th' ungrateful does a more ungrateful find. Dryden.
SELL. n. f. [sello, low Latin.] A ridge of land. Ainsw.
SELL. pronom. [for self.] Sell is retained in Scotland for self,
and sells in the plural for selves.
They turn round like griddle-stones,
Which they dig out fro' the dells,
For their bairns bread, wives and sells. Ben. Johnson.
SELL. n. f. [sello, French; sello, Latin.] A saddle.
Turning to that place, in which
He left his lofty steed with golden sells,
And goodly gorgeous barbes, him found not there. F. Qu.
SELL. v. a. [sellan, Saxon; selo, Icelandic.] To give for a price; the word correlative to buy; to vend.
The Midianites sold him unto Egypt, unto Potiphar. Gen.
Let us sell him to the Ishmaelites. Gen. xxxvii. 27.
The first tenth part I gave to the sons of Aaron, and another
I sold away. Tob. i. 7.
All the inns and publick houses are obliged to furnish themselves with corn, which is sold out at a much dearer rate than it is bought up. Addison on Italy.
You have made an order that ale should be sold for three half-pence a quart. Swift.
TO SELL. v. n. To have commerce or traffick with one.
I will buy with you, sell with you; but I will not eat with you. Shakspeare. Merchant of Venice.
Consult not with a buyer of selling. Ecclesi. xxxvii. 11.
SELLANDER. n. f. A dry scab in a horse's hough or pastern. Ainsworth.
SELLER. n. f. [from sell.] The person that sells; vender.
To things of sale a seller's praise belongs. Shakspeare.
The name of the agent, of the seller, notary, and witnesses, are in both instruments. Addison on Italy.
SELVAGE. n. f. [Of this word I know not the etymology.
Skinner thinks selvage is said as salvage, from its saving the cloth.] The edge of cloth where it is closed by complicating the threads.
Make loops of blue upon the edge of the one curtain from the selvage in the coupling. Ex. xxvi. 4.
SELVES. The plural of self.
Consciousness being interrupted, and we losing sight of our past selves, doubts are raised whether we are the same. Locke.
SEMBLABLE. adj. [semblable, French.] Like; resembling.
Then be abhor'd
All feasts, societies, and throngs of men!
His semblable, yea himself, Timon disdains. Shakspeare.
With semblable reason we might expect a regularity in the winds. Brown's Vulgar Errors.
SEMBLABLY. adv. [from semblable.] With resemblance.
A gallant knight he was, his name was Blunt; Semblably furnish'd like the king himself. Shakspeare. H. IV.

SEMBLANCE. n. f. [semblance, Fr. from semblant.]
1. Likeness; resemblance; similitude; representation.
Solicit Henry with her wondrous praise;
Bethink thee on her virtues, that surmount
Her natural graces, that extinguish art:
Repeat their semblance often. Shakspeare.
She's but the sign and semblance of her honour:
Behold how like a maid she blushes here!
O, what authority and shew of truth
Can cunning sin cover itself withal! Shakspeare.
He with high words, that bore
Semblance of worth, not substance, gently rais'd
Their fainting courage, and dispell'd their fears. Milton.
This last effort brought forth the opinion, that these bodies are not what they seem to be; that they are no shells, but mere sportings of active nature, and only semblances or imitations of shells. Woodward.
It is not his meaning that we put on the outward face and semblance of virtue, only to conceal and disguise our vice. Reg.
2. Appearance; show; figure.
Be you the soldier; for you likest are,
For many semblance and for skill in war. Spenser.
Their semblance kind, and mild their gestures were,
Peace in their hands, and friendship in their face. Fairfax.
All that fair and good in thy divine Semblance, and in thy beauty's heav'nly ray, United I behold. Milt. Par. Lost.
SEMBLANT. adj. [semblant, French.] Like; resembling; having the appearance of anything. Little used.
In despite of age, of impious flame,
And eating time, thy picture, like thy fame,
Entire may last; that as their eyes survey
The semblant shade, men yet unborn may say,
Thus great, thus gracious look'd Britannia's queen;
Her brow thus smooth, her look thus serene. Prior.
SEMBLANT. n. f. Show; figure; resemblance; representation. Not in use.
Her purpose was not such as she did feign,
Ne yet her person such as it was seen;
But under simple shew, and semblant plain,
Lurks false Duella, secretly unseen. Fairy Queen.
Full lively is the semblant, tho' the substance dead. Spens.
SEMBLATIVE. adj. [from semblant.] Suitable; accommodate;
fit; resembling.
Diana's lip
Is not more smooth and ruby; thy small pipe
Is as the maiden's organ, shrill and sound;
And all is semblative a woman's part. Shak. Twelfth Night.
TO SEMBLE. v. n. [sembler, French.] To represent; to make a likeness. Little used.
Let Europe, sav'd, the column high erect,
Than Trajan's higher, or than Antonine's,
Where sembling art may carve the fair effect,
And full achievement of thy great designs. Prior.
SEMI. n. f. [Latin.] A word which, used in composition, signifies half: as semicircle, half a circle.
SEMIANNULAR. adj. [semi and annulus, a ring.] Half round.
Another boar tusk, somewhat slenderer, and of a semiannu- lar figure. Gray's Moseum.
SEMI-BREVE. n. f. [semibreve, French.]
Semibreve is a note in music relating to time, and is the last in augmentation. It is commonly called the master-note, or measure-note, or time-note, as being of a certain determinate measure or length of time by itself; and all the other notes of augmentation and diminution are adjusted to its value. Harris.
He takes my hand, and as a still which stays
A semibreve, 'twixt each drop, he niggardly,
As loth to enrich me, fo' tells many a ye. Down.
SEMICIRCLE. n. f. [semicirculus, Lat. semi and circle.] A half round; part of a circle divided by the diameter.
Black brows
Become some women best, fo they be in a semicircle,
Or a half-moon, made with a pen. Shakspeare.
Has he given the lie
In circle, or oblique, or semicircle,
Or direct parallel? Shakspeare.
The chains that held my left leg gave me the liberty of walking backwards and forwards in a semicircle. Swift.
SEMICIRCLED. adj. [semi and circular.] Half round.
SEMICIRCULAR. adj. [semi and circular.] Half round.
The firm fixure of thy foot would give an excellent motion to thy gait, in a semicircled farthingale. Shakspeare.
The rainbow is caused by the rays of the sun falling upon a roird and opposite cloud, whereof some reflected, others re-fracted, beget the semicircular variety we call the rainbow.
The seas are inclosed between the two semicircular moles that surround it. Addison on Italy.
SEMICOLON. n. f. [semi and colon.] Half a colon; a point made thus [;] to note a greater pause than that of a comma.

SEMDIA'METER.

SEMDIA'METER. n. f. [semi and diameter.] Half the line which, drawn through the centre of a circle, divides it into two equal parts; a straight line drawn from the circumference to the centre of a circle.
Their difference is as little considerable as a semidiameter of the earth in two measures of the highest heaven, the one taken from the surface of the earth, the other from its centre:
the disproportion is just nothing. More.
The force of this instrument consists in the disproportion of distance betwixt the semidiameter of the cylinder and the semidiameter of the bundle of the spokes. Wilkins.
SEMDIAPHANEITY. n. f. [semi and diaphaneity.] Half transparency; imperfect transparency.
The transparency or semidiaphaneity of the superficial corpuscles of bigger bodies may have an interest in the production of their colours. Boyle on Colours.
SEMDIAPHANOUS. adj. [semi and diaphanous.] Half transparent; imperfectly transparent.
Another plate, finely variegated with a semidiaphanous grey or sky, yellow and brown. Woodward on Fossils.
SEMDIOUBLE. n. f. [semi and double.] In the Romish breviary, such offices and feast-as are celebrated with less solemnity than the double ones, but yet with more than the single ones. Boyle.
SEMDIOSCULOUS. adj. [semi and sculus, Latin.] Having a semilobed.
SEMDIORET. n. f. [semi and foret.] Among florists, an half flourish, which is tubulous at the beginning like a foret, and afterwards expanded in the form of a tongue. Bailey.
SEMDIOLID. adj. [semi and fluid.] Imperfectly fluid.
Phlegm, or petuise, is a sort of semifluid, it being so far solid that one part draws along several other parts adhering to it, which do not happen in a perfect fluid, and yet no part will draw the whole mass, as happens in a perfect solid. Art.
SEMDIOLAR. adj. [semidiolus, Fr. semi and luna, Latin.]
SEMDIOLARY. n. f. Resembling in form a half moon.
The eyes are guarded with a semidiolus ridge. Gray.
SEMDIMETAL. n. f. [semi and metal.] Half metal; imperfect metal.
Semimetals are metallick fossils, heavy, opaque, of a bright glittering surface, and not malleable under the hammer; such as quicksilver, antimony, cobalt, with the arsenicks, bismuth, zink, with its ore calamine: to these may be added the semi-metallick recrements, such as tutty and pampholyx. Hill.
SEMINALITY. n. f. [from semen, Latin.]
1. The nature of seed.
As though there were a seminality in urine, or that, like the seed, it carried with it the idea of every part, they foolishly conceive we visibly behold therein the anatomy of every particle. Brown's Vulgar Errors.
2. The power of being produced.
In the seeds of wheat there lieth obscurely the seminality of darnel. Brown's Vulgar Errors.
SEMINAL. adj. [seminalis, French; seminis, Latin.]
1. Belonging to seed.
2. Contained in the seed; radical.
Had our senses never presented us with those obvious seminal principles of apparent generations, we should never have suspected that a plant or animal would have proceeded from such unlikely materials. Clayton, Scept.
Though we cannot prolong the period of a commonwealth beyond the decree of heaven, or the date of its nature, any more than human life beyond the strength of the seminat virtue, yet we may manage a sickly constitution, and preserve a strong one. Swift.
SEMINARY. n. f. [seminaire, Fr. seminarium from seminis, Lat.]
1. The ground where any thing is sown to be afterwards transplanted.
Some, at the first transplanting trees out of their seminaries, cut them off about an inch from the ground, and plant them like quickset.
2. The place or original stock whence any thing is brought.
This stratum is still expanded at top of all, serving for a common integument, and being the seminary or promptuary that furnisheth forth matter for the formation and increment of animal and vegetable bodies. Woodward.
3. Seminal state.
The hand of God, who first created the earth, hath wisely contrived them in their proper seminaries, and where they best maintain the intention of their species. Brown's Vulgar Errors.
4. Original; first principles.
Nothing subministrates apter matter to be converted into pellucid seminaries, sooner than streams of nasty folks and beggars. Harvey on the Plague.
5. Breeding place; place of education, from whence scholars are transplanted into life.
It was the seat of the greatest monarchy, and the seminary of the greatest men of the world, whilst it was heathen. Bacon.
The inns of court must be the worst instituted seminaries in any Christian country. Swift.

SEMINATILIS. n. f. [from seminis, Latin.] The act of sowing.
SEMINIFICAL. adj. [semen and facio, Latin.] Productive of SEMINIFICK. } seed.
We are made to believe, that in the fourteenth year males are seminifical and pubescent; but he that shall inquire into the generality, will rather adhere unto Aristotle. Brown.
SEMINIFICATION. n. f.
Seminification is the propagation from the seed or feminal parts. Hale's Origin of Mankind.
SEMIOPACOUS. adj. [semi and opacus, Latin.] Half dark.
Semioacus bodies are such as, looked upon in an ordinary light, and not held betwixt it and the eye, are not wont to be discriminated from the rest of opacous bodies. Boyle.
SEMIPEDAL. adj. [semi and pedis, Latin.] Containing half a foot.
SEMPERPERICUOUS. adj. [semi and periculosus, Latin.] Half transparent; imperfectly clear.
A kind of amethystine flint, not composed of crystals or grains; but one intire massy stone, semperpericuous, and of a pale blue, almost of the colour of some cow's horns. Gray.
SEMIORDINATE. n. f. [In conick sections.] A line drawn at right angles to and bisected by the axis, and reaching from one side of the section to another; the half of which is properly the semioridinate, but is now called the ordinate. Harris.
SEMPIPELLOCID. adj. [semi and pellucidus, Latin.] Half clear;
imperfectly transparent.
A light grey semipellucid flint, of much the same complexion with the common Indian agat. Woodward.
SEMPIPROOF. n. f. [semi and proof.] The proof of a single evidence. Bailey.
SEMIQUADRATE. n. f. [In astronomy.] An aspect of the SEMIQUARTILE } planets when distant from each other forty five degrees, or one sign and a half. Bailey.
SEMIQUAVER. n. f. [In music.] A note containing half the quantity of the quaver. Bailey.
SEMIQUARTILE. n. f. [In astronomy.] An aspect of the planets when at the distance of thirty-six degrees from one another. Bailey.
SEMISEXILE. n. f. [In astronomy.] A semisextile; an aspect of the planets when they are distant from each other one twelfth part of a circle, or thirty degrees. Bailey.
SEMI SPHERICAL. adj. [semi and spherical.] Belonging to half a sphere. Bailey.
SEMI SPHEROIDAL. adj. [semi and spheroidal.] Formed like a half spheroid.
SEMI TERTIAN. n. f. [semi and tertian.] An ague compounded of a tertian and a quotidian. Bailey.
The natural product of such a cold moist year are tertians, semitertians, and some quartans. Arbutnot on Air.
SEMITONE. n. f. [semiton, French.] In music, one of the degrees of continuous intervals of concords. Bailey.
SEMI VOVEL. n. f. [semi and vowel.] A consonant which makes an imperfect sound, or does not demand a total occlusion of the mouth.
When Homer would represent any agreeable object, he makes use of the smoothest vowels and most flowing semi- vowels. Brown's Notes to the Odyssey.
SEMPER VIVE. n. f. [semper and vivus, Latin, that is, always alive.] A plant.
The greater sempervive will put out branches two or three years; but they wrap the root in an oil cloth once in half a year. Bacon.
SEMPITERNAL. adj. [sempternus, Fr. sempternus, from semper and eternus, Latin.]
1. Eternal in futurity; having beginning, but no end.
Those, though they suppose the world not to be eternal, a parte ante, are not contented to suppose it to be semi- perpetual, or eternal a parte post; but will carry up the creation of the world to an immense antiquity. Hale.
2. In poetry it is used simply for eternal.
Should we the long depending scale ascend
Of sons and fathers, will it never end?
If 'twill, then must we through the order run,
To some one man whose being ne'er begun;
If that one man was sempereternal, why Did he, since independent, ever die? Blackmore.
SEMPITERNITY. n. f. [sempternitas, Latin.] Future duration without end.
The future eternity, or sempternity of the world, being admitted, though the eternity a parte ante be denied, there will be a future infinity for the emanation of the divine goodness. Hale.
SEMPITRESS. n. f. [sempitress, Saxon.] A woman whose business is to sew; a woman who lives by her needle.
Two hundred sempitresses were employed to make me shirts, and linnen for bed and table, which they were forced to quilt together in several folds. Calliver's Travels.
SENNARY. adj. [senarius, semi, Latin.] Belonging to the number six; containing six.
SENATE.

SEN

SENATE. n. f. [senatus, Latin; senat, French.] An assembly of counsellors; a body of men set apart to consult for the publick good.

We debate

The nature of our feats, which will in time break ope
The locks o' th' senate, and bring in the crows
To peck the eagles. Shak. Coriolanus.

There they shall found

Their government, and their great senate chuse. Milton.
He had not us'd excursions, spears, or darts,
But counsel, order, and such aged arts;
Which, if our ancestors had not retain'd,
The senate's name our council had not gain'd. Denham.
Gallus was welcom'd to the sacred strand,
The senate rising to salute their guest. Dryden.

SENATEHOUSE. n. f. [senate and house.] Place of publick council.

The nobles in great earnestness are going

All to the senatehouse; some news is come. Shakespeare.

SENATOR. n. f. [senator, Latin; senateur, French.] A publick counsellor.

Most unwise patricians,

You grave but reckless senators. Shakespeare. Coriolanus.

As if to ev'ry sop it might belong,

Like senators, to censure, right or wrong. Granville.

SENATORIAL. adj. [senatorius, Lat. senatorial, senatorien, Fr.]

SENATORIAN. s. Belonging to senators; befitting senators.

TO SEND. v. a. [sendan, Gothick; senan, Saxon; senden, Dutch.]

1. To dispatch from one place to another.

There shalt thou serve thine enemies, which the Lord shall send against thee, in hunger and in thirst. Deut. xxviii. 48.

Send our brother with us, and we will go down. Gen. xliii.

His citizens sent a message after him, saying, we will not have this man to reign over us. Lu. xix. 14.

The messenger came, and shewed David all that Joab had sent him for. 2 Sa. xi. 22.

My overshadowing spirit and might with thee

I send along. Milton.

Servants, sent on messages, stay out somewhat longer than the message requires. Swift.

2. To commission by authority to go and act.

There have been commissions

Sent down among them, which have flow'd the heart

Of all their loyalties. Shakespeare. Henry VIII.

3. To grant as from a distant place: as, if God send life.

I pray thee send me good speed this day, and shew kindness unto my master. Gen. xxiv. 12.

O send out thy light and thy truth; let them lead me. Pf.

4. To inflict, as from a distance.

The Lord shall send upon thee curfings, vexation, and rebuke, in all that thou settest thine hand unto. Deut. xxviii.

5. To emit; to immit; to produce.

The water sends forth plants that have no roots fixed in the bottom, being almost but leaves. Bacon's Nat. History.

The senses send in only the influxes of material things, and the imagination and memory present only their pictures or images, when the objects themselves are absent. Chrys.

6. To diffuse; to propagate.

When the fury took her stand on high,

A hiss from all the knaky tire went round:

The dreadful signal all the rocks rebound,

And through the Achaian cities send the found. Pope.

7. To let fly; to cast or shoot.

TO SEND. v. n.

1. To deliver or dispatch a message.

I have made bold to send in to your wife:

My suit is that she will to Desdemona

Procure me some access. Shakespeare. Othello.

They could not attempt their perfect reformation in church and state, till those votes were utterly abolished; therefore they sent the same day again to the king. Clarendon.

2. To send for. To require by message to come, or cause to be brought.

Go with me some few of you, and see the place; and then you may send for your sick, which bring on land. Bacon.

He sent for me; and, while I rais'd his head,

He threw his aged arms about my neck,

And, feeling that I wept, he press'd me close. Dryden.

SENDER. n. f. [from send.] He that sends.

This was a merry message.

—We hope to make the sender blush at it. Shak. H. V.

Love that comes too late,

Like a remorseful pardon slowly carried,

To the great sender turns a four offence. Shakespeare.

Best with the best, the sender, not the sent. Milton.

SENESCENCE. n. f. [senescere, Latin.] The state of growing old; decay by time.

The earth and all things will continue in the state wherein they now are, without the least senescence or decay, without jarring, disorder, or invasion of one another. Woodward.

SEN

SENESCHAL. n. f. [seneschal, French, of uncertain original.]

1. One who had in great houses the care of feasts, or domestick ceremonies.

John earl of Huntingdon, under his seal of arms, made fir

John Arundel, of Trerice, seneschal of his household, as well in peace as in war. Carver's Survey of Cornwall.

Martha'd feast,

Serv'd up in hall with fowls and seneschals;

The skill of artifice, or office, mean! Milton's Par. Lost.

The seneschal rebuk'd, in haste withdrew;

With equal haste a menial train pursue. Pope's Odyssey.

2. It afterwards came to signify other offices.

SENGREEN. n. f. A plant. Ainsworth.

SENILE. adj. [senilis, Latin.] Belonging to old age; consequent on old age.

My green youth made me very unripe for a task of that nature, whose difficulty requires that it should be handled by a person in whom nature, education, and time have happily matched a senile maturity of judgment with youthful vigour of fancy. Boyle on Colours.

SENIOR. n. f. [senior, Latin.]

1. One older than another; one who on account of longer time has more superiority.

How can you admit your seniors to the examination or allowing of them, not only being inferior in office and calling, but in gifts also? Whitgift.

2. An aged person.

A senior of the place replies,

Well read, and curious of antiquities. Dryden.

SENIORITY. n. f. [from senior.] Eldership; priority of birth.

As in all civil insurrections the ringleader is looked on with a peculiar severity, so, in this case, the first provoker has, by his seniority and primogeniture, a double portion of the guilt.

Government of the Tongue.

He was the elder brother, and Ulysses might be assigned to his care, by the right due to his seniority. Brown.

SENNA. n. f. [senas, Latin.] A physical tree.

The flower, for the most part, consists of five leaves, which are placed orbicularly, and expand in form of a rose:

the point afterwards becomes a plain, incurved, bivalve pod, which is full of seeds, each being separated by a double thin membrane. The species are three. The third sort, that used in medicine, is at present very rare. Miller.

What rhubarb, senna, or what purgative drug,

Would scour these English hence! Shak. Macbeth.

Senna tree is of two sorts: the balsard senna, and the scorpion senna, both which yield a pleasant leaf and flower. Mort.

SENNIGHT. n. f. [Contracted from seven night.] The space of seven nights and days; a week. See FORTNIGHT.

Time trots hard with a young maid between the contract of her marriage and the day it is solemnized: if the interim be but a sennight, time's pace is so hard that it seems the length of seven years. Shakespeare. As you like it.

SENOULAR. adj. [seni and ocular, Latin.] Having six eyes.

Most animals are binocular, spiders octonocular, and some senocular. Darwin's Physico-Theology.

SENSATION. n. f. [sensation, French; sensatio, school Latin.]

Perception by means of the senses.

Diversity of constitution, or other circumstances, vary the sensations; and to them of Java pepper is cold. Glauco. Stiff.

The brain, distempered by a cold, beating against the root of the auditory nerve, and protracted to the tympanum, causes the sensation of noise. Harvey on Consumption.

This great source of most of the ideas we have, depending wholly upon our senses, and derived by them to the understanding, I call sensation. Locke.

When we are asleep, joy and sorrow give us more vigorous sensations of pain or pleasure than at any other time. Addison.

The happiest, upon a fair estimate, have stronger sensations of pain than pleasure. Rogers.

SENSE. n. f. [sens, French; sensus, Latin.]

1. Faculty or power by which external objects are perceived;

the sight; touch; hearing; smell; taste.

This pow'r is sense; which from abroad doth bring

The colour, taste, and touch, and scent, and sound,

The quantity and shape of ev'ry thing

Within earth's centre, or heav'n's circle found:

And though things sensible be numberless,

But only five the sense's organs be;

And in those five, all things their forms express,

Which we can touch, taste, feel, or hear or see. Davies.

Then is the soul a nature, which contains

The pow'r of sense within a greater pow'r,

Which doth employ and use the sense's pains;

But sits and rules within her private bow'r. Davies.

Both contain

Within them ev'ry lower faculty

Of sense, whereby they hear, see, smell, touch, taste. Milt.

Of the five senses, two are usually and most properly called the sense of learning, as being most capable of receiving communication of thought and notions by selected signs; and these are hearing and seeing. Holder's Elements of Speech.

There's

SEN

2. Perception by the senses; sensation.

In a living creature, though never so great, the sense and the affects of any one part of the body instantly make a transcursion throughout the whole. Bacon's Natural History.

If we had nought but sense, then only they Should have found minds which have their senses found;

But wisdom grows when senses do decay,

And folly most in quickest sense is found. Davies.

Such is the mighty swiftness of your mind,

That, like the earth's, it leaves the sense behind. Dryden.

3. Perception of intellect; apprehension of mind.

This Basilus, having the quick sense of a lover, took as though his mistress had given him a secret reprehension. Sidon.

God, to remove his ways from human sense,

Plac'd heav'n from earth so far. Milton.

Why hast thou added sense of endless woes?

He should have liv'd. Milton.

4. Sensibility; quickness or keenness of perception.

He should have liv'd,

Save that his riotous youth, with dangerous sense,

Might in the times to come have ta'en revenge. Shakespeare.

5. Understanding; soundness of faculties; strength of natural reason.

Opprest nature sleeps:

This rest might yet have balm'd thy broken sense. Shakespeare.

God hath endued mankind with powers and abilities, which we call natural light and reason, and common sense. Bentley.

There's something previous ev'n to taste; 'tis sense,

Good sense, which only is the gift of heav'n;

And, though no science, fairly worth the sev'n:

A light within yourself you must perceive;

Jones and Le Notre have it not to give. Pope.

6. Reason; reasonable meaning.

He raves; his words are loose

As heaps of sand, and scattering wide from sense:

You see he knows not me, his natural father;

That now the wind is got into his head,

And turns his brains to frenzy. Dryden. Spanish Fryar.

7. Opinion; notion; judgment.

I speak my private but impartial sense

With freedom, and, I hope, without offence. Roscommon.

8. Conscience; conviction.

In the due sense of my want of learning, I only make a confession of my own faith. Dryden.

9. Moral perception.

Some are so hardened in wickedness, as to have no sense of the most friendly offices. L'Estrange.

10. Meaning; import.

In this sense to be preferred from all sin is not impossible.

Hooker, b. v.

My hearty friends,

You take me in too dolorous a sense. Shakespeare.

This comes out of a haughty presumption, that because we are encouraged to believe that in some sense all things are made for man, that therefore they are not made at all for themselves. Mort.

More's Antidote against Atheism.

All before Richard I. is before time of memory; and what is since, is in a legal sense, within the time of memory. Hale.

In one sense it is, indeed, a building of gold and silver upon the foundation of Christianity. Tillotson.

When a word has been used in two or three senses, and has made a great inroad for error, drop one or two of those senses, and leave it only one remaining, and affix the other senses or ideas to other words. Watts's Logic.

SENSED. part. [from sense.] Perceived by the senses. A word not in use.

Let the scilist tell me, why things must needs be so as his individual senses represent them: is he sure that objects are not otherwise sens'd by others, than they are by him? And why

SEN

The verification is as beautiful as the description complete; every ear must be sensible of it. Broome's Notes on the Odyssey.

5. Having moral perception; having the quality of being affected by moral good or ill.

If thou wert sensible of courtesy, Shakespeare.

I should not make so great a shew of zeal. Shakespeare.

6. Having quick intellectual feeling; being easily or strongly affected.

Even I, the bold, the sensible of wrong, Dryden.

Refrain'd by shame, was forc'd to hold my tongue. Dryden.

7. Convinced; persuaded. A low use.

They are very sensible that they had better have pushed their conquests on the other side of the Adriatick; for then their territories would have lain together. Addison.

8. In low conversation it has sometimes the sense of reasonable; judicious; wise.

I have been tired with accounts from sensible men, furnished with matters of fact, which have happened within their own knowledge. Addison.

SENSIBLENESS, n. f. [from sensible.]

1. Possibility to be perceived by the senses.

2. Actual perception by mind or body.

3. Quickness of perception; sensibility.

The sensibleness of the eye renders it subject to pain, as also unfit to be dressed with sharp medicaments. Sharp.

4. Painful consciousness.

There is no condition of soul more wretched than that of the senseless obdurate finner, being a kind of numbness of soul; and, contrariwise, this feeling and sensibleness, and sorrow for sin, the most vital quality. Hammond.

5. Judgment; reasonableness. An use not admitted but in conversation.

SENSIBLY, adv. [from sensible.]

1. Perceptibly to the senses.

He is your brother, lords; sensibly fed

Of that self-blood, that first gave life to you. Shakespeare.

A sudden pain in my right foot increased sensibly. Temple.

The salts of human urine may, by the violent motion of the blood, be turned alkaline, and even corrosive; and so they affect the fibres of the brain more sensibly than other parts. Arb.

2. With perception of either mind or body.

That church of Christ, which we properly term his body mystical, can be but one; neither can that one be sensibly discerned by any, inasmuch as the parts thereof are some in heaven already with Christ. Hooker.

3. Externally; by impression on the senses.

With quick intellectual perception:

5. In low language, judiciously; reasonably:

SENSITIVELY, adv. [from sensitive.] Having sense or perception, but not reason.

The sensitive faculty may have a sensitive love of some sensitive objects, which though moderated so as not to fall into sin; yet, through the nature of man's sense, may express itself more sensitively towards that inferior object than towards God: this is a piece of human frailty. Hammond.

All the actions of the sensitive appetite are in painting called passions, because the soul is agitated by them, and because the body suffers and is sensibly altered. Dryden.

Bodies are such as are endued with a vegetative soul, as plants; a sensitive soul, as animals; or a rational soul, as the body of man. Ray.

SENSITIVE PLANT, n. f. [mimosa, Latin.] A plant.

The flower consists of one leaf, which is shaped like a funnel, having many lamina in the centre: these flowers are collected into a round head: from the bottom of the flower rises the pistillum, which afterwards becomes an oblong flat-jointed pod, which opens both ways, and contains in each partition one roundish seed. Of this plant the humble plants are a species, which are so called, because, upon being touched, the pedicle of their leaves falls downward; but the leaves of the sensitive plant are only contracted. Miller.

Vegetables have many of them some degrees of motion, and, upon the different application of other bodies to them, do very briskly alter their figure and motion, and so have obtained the name of sensitive plants, from a motion which has some resemblance to that which in animals follows upon sensation. Locke.

Whence does it happen, that the plant which well

We name the sensitive, should move and feel?

Whence know her leaves to answer her command,

And with quick horror fly the neighb'ring hand? Prior.

The sensitive plant is so call'd, because, as soon as you touch it, the leaf shrinks. Mortimer.

SENSITIVELY, adv. [from sensitive.] In a sensitive manner.

The sensitive faculty, through the nature of man's sense, may express itself more sensitively towards an inferior object than towards God: this is a piece of frailty. Hammond.

SENSORIUM, n. f. [Latin.]

SENSORY, n. f. [Latin.]

1. The part where the senses transmit their perceptions to the mind; the seat of sense.

Spiritual species, both visible and audible, will work upon the sensories, though they move not any other body. Bacon.

SEN

As found in a bell or musical string, or other sounding body, is nothing but a trembling motion, and the air nothing but that motion propagated from the object, in the sensorium; 'tis a sense of that motion under the form of sound. Newton.

Is not the senfery of animals the place to which the sensitive substance is present, and into which the sensitive species of things are carried through the nerves of the brain, that there they may be perceived by their immediate presence to that substance? Newton's Opt.

2. Organ of sensation.

That we all have double senfories, two eyes, two ears, is an effectual confutation of this atheistical sophism. Bouley.

SENSUAL, adj. [from senfual, French.]

1. Confining in sense; depending on sense; affecting the senses.

Men in general are too partial, in favour of a senfual appetite, to take notice of truth when they have found it. L'Espr.

Far as creation's ample range extends,

The scale of senfual, mental pow'rs ascends. Pope.

2. Pleasing to the senses; carnal; not spiritual.

The greatest part of men are such as prefer their own private good before all things, even that good which is senfual before whatsoever is most divine. Hooker.

3. Devoted to sense; lewd; luxurious.

From amidst them rose

Bellal, the dissolute spirit that fell,

The senfualist; and, after Asmodai,

The fleshliest incubus. Paradise Regain'd.

No small part of virtue consists in abstaining from that wherein senfual men place their felicity. Atterbury.

SENSUALIST, n. f. [from senfual.] A carnal person; one devoted to corporal pleasures.

Let atheists and senfualists satisfy themselves as they are able; the former of which will find, that, as long as reason keeps her ground, religion neither can nor will lose her's. Bacon.

SENSUALITY, n. f. [from senfual.] Devotedness to the senses; addition to brutal and corporal pleasures.

But you are more intemperate in your blood

Than Venus, or those pamper'd animals

That rage in savage senfuality. Shakespeare.

Kill not her quick'ning pow'r with surfeitings;

Mar not her sense with senfuality:

Cast not her serious wit on idle things;

Make not her free will slave to vanity. Davies.

Senfuality is one kind of pleasure, such an one as it is. Davies.

They avoid dress, lest they should have affections tainted by any senfuality, and diverted from the love of him who is to be the only comfort and delight of their whole beings. Addison.

Impure and brutal senfuality was too much confirmed by the religion of those countries, where even Venus and Bacchus had their temples. Bentley.

To SENSUALIZE, v. a. [from senfual.] To sink to senfual pleasures; to degrade the mind into subjection to the senses.

Not to suffer one's self to be senfualized by pleasures, like those who were changed into brutes by Circe. Pope.

SENSUALLY, adv. [from senfual.] In a senfual manner.

SENSUOUS, adj. [from senfual.] Tender; pathetic; full of passion.

To this poetry would be made precedent, as being less subtle and fine; but more simple, senfuous, and passionate. Mil.

SENT, n. f. The participle passive of send.

I make a decree that all Israel go with thee; forasmuch as thou art sent of the king. Ezr. vii. 14.

SENTENCE, n. f. [sententia, French; sententia, Latin.]

1. Determination or decision, as of a judge civil or criminal.

The rule of voluntary agents on earth is the sentence that reason giveth, concerning the goodness of those things which they are to do. Hooker.

If we have neither voice from heaven, that so pronounceth of them, neither sentence of men grounded upon such manifest and clear proof, that they, in whose hands it is to alter them, may likewise infallibly, even in heart and conscience, judge them so; upon necessity to urge alteration, is to trouble and disturb without necessity. Hooker.

How will I give sentence against them. Jer. iv. 12.

If matter of fact breaks out with too great an evidence to be denied, why, still there are other lenitives, that friendship will apply, before it will be brought to the decretory rigours of a condemning sentence. South's Sermons.

Let him set out some of Luther's works, that by them we may pass sentence upon his doctrines. Atterbury.

2. It is usually spoken of condemnation pronounced by the judge; doom.

By the consent of all laws, in capital causes, the evidence must be full and clear; and if so, where one man's life is in question, what say we to a war, which is ever the sentence of death upon many? Bacon's Essay.

What rests but that the mortal sentence pass? Milton.

3. A maxim; an axiom, generally moral.

A sentence may be defined a moral instruction couched in a few words. Broome's Notes on the Odyssey.

An excellent spirit, knowledge, understanding, and shewing of hard sentences were found in Daniel. Dan. v. 12.

To SENTENCE, v. a. [sentencier, Fr. from the noun.]

1. To pass the last judgment on any one.

After this cold confid'rance, sentence me;

And, as you are a king, speak in your state,

What I have done that misbecame my place. Shakespeare.

Came the mild judge and intercessor both,

To sentence man. Milton.

2. To condemn.

Could that decree from our brother come?

Nature herself is sentenc'd in your doom:

Pity is no more. Dryden.

Idleness, sentenced by the decurions, was punished by so many stripes. Temple.

SENTENTIOSITY, n. f. [from sententious.] Comprehension in a sentence.

Vulgar precepts in morality carry with them nothing above the line, or beyond the extemporary sententiousity of common conceits with us. Brown's Vulg. Errors.

SENTENTIOUS, adj. [sentencieux, Fr. from sentence.] Abounding with short sentences, axioms, and maxims, short and energetic.

He is very swift and sententious. Shakespeare. As you like it.

Eyes are vocal, tears have tongues:

Sententious showers! O let them fall;

Their cadence is rhetorical. Cresswell.

Eloquence, with all her pomp and charms,

Foretold us useful and sententious truths. Waller.

How he apes his fire,

Ambitiously sententious. Addison's Cato.

The making of those figures being tedious, and requiring much room, put men first upon contracting them; as by the most ancient Egyptian monuments it appears they did: next, instead of sententious marks, to think of verbal, such as the Chinese still retain. Grew's Cosmol.

SENTENTIOUSLY, adv. [from sententious.] In short sentences; with striking brevity.

They describe her in part finely and elegantly, and in part gravely and sententiously: they say, look how many feathers she hath, so many eyes she hath underneath. Bacon's Essays.

Nautica delivers her judgment sententiously, to give it more weight. Broome.

SENTENTIOUSNESS, n. f. [from sententious.] Pithiness of sentences; brevity with strength.

The Medea I esteem for the gravity and sententiousness of it, which he himself concludes to be suitable to a tragedy. Dryden.

SENTRY, n. f. [This is commonly written sentry, corrupted from sentinel.] One who is set to watch in a garrison, or in the outlines of an army.

What strength, what art can then

Suffice, or what evasion bear him fate

Through the strict sentries, and stations thick

Of angels watching round. Milton.

SENTINEL, adj. [sentinelle, Latin.] Perceiving; having perception.

This acting of the sentient phantasy is performed by a presence of sense, as the horse is under the sense of hunger, and that without any formal syllogism prebeth him to eat. Hale.

SENTIENT, n. f. [from the adjective.] He that has perception.

If the sentient be carried, passive acquis, with the body, whose motion it would observe, supposing it regular, the remove is insensible. Glauco. Scops.

SENTIMENT, n. f. [sentiment, French.]

1. Thought; notion; opinion.

The consideration of the reason, why they are annexed to so many other ideas, serving to give us due sentiments of the wisdom and goodness of the sovereign Disposer of all things, may not be unsuitable to the main end of these enquiries. Locke.

Alike to council or th' assembly came,

With equal souls and sentiments the same. Pope.

2. The sense considered distinctly from the language or things; a striking sentiment in a composition.

SENTINEL, n. f. [sentinelle, French, from sentis, Lat.] One who watches or keeps guard to prevent surprise.

Norfolk, his thee to thy charge;

Use careful watch, chuse truly sentinels. Shakespeare. R. III.

Counsellors are not commonly so united, but that one counsellor keepeth sentinel over another; so that if any do counsel out of faction or private ends, it commonly comes to the king's ear. Bacon's Essays.

First, the two eyes, which have the seeing pow'r,

Stand as one watchman, spy, or sentinel,

Being plac'd aloft, within the head's high tow'r;

And though both see, yet both but one thing tell. Davies.

Love to our citadel resorts,

Through those deceitful fallports;

Our sentinels betray our forts. Denham.

The senses are situate in the head, as sentinels in a watch-tower, to receive and convey to the soul the impressions of external objects. Ray on the Creation.

SEP

Perhaps they had sentinels waking while they slept; but even this would be unforderlike. Broome's Notes on the Odyssey.

SENTRY, n. f. [Corrupted, I believe, from sentinel.]

1. A watch; a sentinel; one who watches in a garrison, or army, to keep them from surprise.

If I do send, dispatch

Those sentries to our aid; the rest will serve

For a short holding. Shakespeare. Coriolanus.

The youth of hell strict guard may keep,

And set their sentries to the utmost deep. Dryden.

One goose they had, 'twas all they could allow,

A wakeful entry, and on duty now. Dryden.

2. Guard; watch; the duty of a sentry.

Here toils and death, and death's half brother, sleep,

Forms terrible to view, their entry keep. Dryden.

Thou, whose nature cannot sleep,

O'er my slumbers entry keep;

Guard me 'gainst those watchful foes,

Whose eyes are open while mine close. Brown.

SEPARABILITY, n. f. [from separable.] The quality of admitting division or discernment.

Separability is the greatest argument of real distinction. Glauco.

The greatest argument of real distinction is separability, and actual separation; for nothing can be separated from itself. Norris.

SEPARABLE, adj. [separable, Fr. separabilis, Lat. from separate.]

1. Susceptive of division; discernible.

2. Possible to be disjoined from something.

Expansion and duration have this farther agreement, that though they are both considered by us as having parts, yet their parts are not separable one from another. Locke.

The infusions and decoctions of plants contain the most separable parts of the plants, and convey not only their nutritious but medicinal qualities into the blood. Arbuthnot.

SEPARABLENESS, n. f. [from separable.] Capableness of being separable.

Trials permit me not to doubt of the separableness of a yellow tincture from gold. Boyle.

To SEPARATE, v. a. [separo, Latin; separer, French.]

1. To break; to divide into parts.

2. To disunite; to disjoin.

I'll to England.

—To Ireland, I: on separated fortunes

Shall keep us both the faster. Shakespeare. Macbeth.

Refolv'd,

Rather than death, or aught than death more dread,

Shall separate us. Milton.

3. To sever from the rest.

Can a body be inflammable, from which it would puzzle a chymist to separate an inflammable ingredient? Boyle.

Death from sin no power can separate. Milton.

SEP

- nicated, that which a moment since was part of ourselves, is now no more so. Locke.
2. The state of being separate; disunion.
As the confusion of tongues was a mark of separation, so the being of one language was a mark of union. Bacon.
3. The chemical analysis, or operation of disuniting things mingled.
A fifteenth part of silver, incorporate with gold, will not be recovered by any matter of separation, unless you put a greater quantity of silver, which is the last refuge in separations. Bacon.
4. Divorce; disjunction from a married state.
Did you not hear
A buzzing of a separation Between the king and Catharine? Shakespeare.
- SEPARATIST. n. f. [separatiste, Fr. from separate.] One who divides from the church; a schismatic; a seceder.
The anabaptists, separatists, and sectaries tenets are full of schism, and inconsistent with monarchy. Bacon.
- Our modern separatists pronounce all those heretical, or carnal, from whom they have withdrawn. Decay of Piety.
- Says the separatist, if those, who have the rule over you, should command you any thing about church affairs, you ought not, in conscience, to obey them. South's Sermons.
- SEPARATOR. n. f. [from separate.] One who divides; a divider.
- SEPARATORY. adj. [from separate.] Used in separation.
The most conspicuous gland of an animal is the system of the guts, where the lacteals are the emissary vessels, or separatory ducts. Cheyne's Phil. Prin.

- SEPT. n. f. [septum, Latin.] A clan; a race; a generation.
A word used only with regard or allusion to Ireland, and, I suppose, Irish.
This judge, being the lord's brehon, adjudgeth a better share unto the lord of the soil, or the head of that sept, and also unto himself for his judgment a greater portion, than unto the plaintiffs. Spenser on Ireland.
- The true and ancient Russians, a sept whom he had met with in one of the provinces of that vast empire, were white like the Danes. Boyle.
- The English forces were ever too weak to subdue so many warlike nations, or septs, of the Irish as did possess this island. Davies on Ireland.
- SEPTANGULAR. adj. [septem and angulus, Latin.] Having seven corners or sides.
- SEPTEMBER. n. f. [Latin; Septembre, French.] The ninth month of the year; the seventh from March.
September hath his name as being the seventh month from March; he is drawn with a merry and cheerful countenance, in a purple robe. Penham on Drawing.
- SEPTENARY. adj. [septenarius, Lat.] Consisting of seven.
Every controversy has seven questions belonging to it; tho' the order of nature seems too much neglected by a confinement to this septenary number. Watts.
- SEPTENARY. n. f. The number seven.
The days of men are cast up by septenaries, and every seventh year conceived to carry some altering character in temper of mind or body. Brown's Vulgar Errors.
- These constitutions of Moses, that proceed so much upon a septenary, or number of seven, have no reason in the nature of the thing. Burnet.
- SEPTENNIAL. adj. [septennis, Latin.]
1. Lasting seven years.
 2. Happening once in seven years.
Being once dispensed with for his septennial visit, by a holy instrument from Petropolis, he resolved to govern them by subaltern ministers. Hewel's Vocal Forest.
- With weekly libels and septennial ale,
Their wish is full, to riot and to rail. Anonym.
- SEPTENTRION. n. f. [Fr. septentrion, Latin.] The North.
Thou art as opposite to every good,
As the antipodes are unto us, Shakespeare. Hen. VI.
- SEPTENTRIONAL. adj. [septentrionalis, Latin; septentrional, French.] Northern.
- Back'd with a ridge of hills,
That green'd the fruits of th' earth and seats of men
From cold septentrion blasts. Milton's Par. Regain'd.
- If the Spring
Proceed should be destitute of rain,
Or blast septentrional with brushing wings
Sweep up the smoky mists and vapours damp,
Then woe to mortals. Philips.
- SEPTENTRIONALITY. n. f. [from septentrional.] Northerliness.
- SEPTENTRIONALLY. adv. [from septentrional.] Towards the North; northerly.

As a septic medicine, Galen commended the ashes of a salamander. Brown's Vulgar Errors.
- SEPTILATERAL. adj. [septem and lateris, Lat.] Having seven sides.
By an equal interval they make seven triangles, the bases whereof are the seven sides of a septilateral figure, described within a circle. Brown's Vulgar Errors.
- SEPTUAGENARY. adj. [septuagenarius, Lat. septuagenaire, Fr.] Consisting of seventy.
The three hundred years of John of times, or Nestor, cannot afford a reasonable encouragement beyond Moses's septuaginary determination. Brown's Vulgar Errors.
- SEPTUAGESIMAL. adj. [septuagesimus, Latin.] Consisting of seventy.
In our abridged and septuagesimal age, it is very rare to behold the fourth generation. Brown's Vulgar Errors.
- SEPTUAGINT. n. f. [septuaginta, Latin.] The old Greek version of the Old Testament, so called as being supposed the work of seventy-two interpreters.
Which way soever you try, you shall find the product great enough for the extent of this earth; and if you follow the septuagint chronology, it will still be far higher. Bacon.
- SEPTUPLE. adj. [septuplex, Latin.] Seven times as much. A technical term.
- SEPTULCRAL. adj. [sepulchral, Fr. sepulchralis, from sepulchrum, Lat.] Relating to burial; relating to the grave; monumental.
Whilst our souls negotiate there,
We like sepulchral statues lay;
All day the same our postures were,
And we said nothing all the day. Dante.
- Mine eye hath found that sad sepulchral rock,
That was the casket of heav'n's richest store. Milton.
- Septulcral lies our holy walls to grace,
And new-year odes. Pope's Dunciad.
- SEPULCHRE. n. f. [sepulchre, Fr. sepulchrum, Lat.] A grave; a tomb.
To entail him and his heirs unto the crown,
What is it but to make thy sepulchre? Shakespeare. Henry VI.
- Flies and spiders get a sepulchre in amber, more durable than the monument and embalming of any king. Bacon.
- There where the virgin's son his doctrine taught,
His miracles, and our redemption wrought;
Where, by three inspir'd, his praises sung,
And on his sepulchre my offering hung. Sandys.
- Perpetual lamps for many hundred years have continued burning, without supply, in the sepulchres of the ancients. Wilk.
- If not one common sepulchre contains
Our bodies, or one urn our last remains, Yet Ceyx and Alcyon shall join. Dryden.
- TO SEPULCHRE. v. a. [from the noun. It is accented on the second syllable by Shakespeare and Milton; on the fifth, more properly, by Johnson and Prior.] To bury; to entomb.
Go to thy lady's grave, and call her thence;
Or, at the least, in her's sepulchre thine. Shakespeare.
- I am glad to see that time survive,
Where merit is not sepulchred alive;
Where good men's virtues them to honours bring,
And not to dangers. Ben. Johnson.
- Thou so sepulchred in such pomp do'st lie,
That kings for such a tomb would wish to die. Milton.
- Disparted streams shall from their channels fly,
And, deep furchard, by sandy mountains lie, Obscurely sepulchred. Prior.
- SEPULTURE. n. f. [sepulture, Fr. sepultura, Lat.] Interment; burial.
That Niobe, weeping over her children, was turned into a stone, was nothing else but that during her life she erected over her sepultures a marble tomb of her own. Brown.
- Where we may royal sepulture prepare;
With speed to Melefinda bring relief,
Recall her spirits, and moderate her grief. Dryden.
- In England sepulture, or burial of the dead, may be deferred and put off for the debts of the person deceased. Ayliffe.
- SEQUEL. n. f. [sequens, Latin.]
1. Following; attendant.
Orpheus could lead the savage race,
And trees uprooted left their place,
Sequacious of the lyre;
But bright Cecilia rais'd the wonder higher:
When to her organ vocal breath was giv'n,
An angel heard and straight appear'd,
Mistaking earth for heav'n. Dryden.
- ABOVE

SEQ

- Above those superstitious horrors that enslave
The fond sequacious herd, to myfick faith
And blind amazement prone, th' enlighten'd few
The glorious stranger hail! Thomson.
2. Ductile; pliant.
In the greater bodies the forge was easy, the matter being ductile and sequacious, and obedient to the hand and stroke of the artificer, and apt to be drawn, formed, or moulded. Roy.
- SEQUALITY. n. f. [from sequax, Latin.] Ductility; toughness.
- Matter, whereof creatures are produced, hath a closeness, lentor, and sequacity. Bacon's Natural History.
- SEQUEL. n. f. [sequelle, French; sequela, Latin.]
1. Conclusion; succeeding part.
If black scandal or foul-fac'd reproach
Attend the sequel of your imposition,
Your meek enforcement shall acquaintance me. Shakespeare. R. III.
 2. Consequence; event.
Let any principal thing, as the sun or the moon, but once cease, fail, or ferve, and who doth not easily conceive that the sequel thereof would be ruin both to itself and whatsoever depend on it? Hooker.
 3. Consequence inferred; consequentialness.
The sequel each of parting and of fight. Milton's Par. Lost.
- What sequel is there in this argument? An archdeacon is the chief deacon: ergo, he is only a deacon. Whitgift.
- SEQUENCE. n. f. [from sequor, Latin.]
1. Order of succession.
How art thou a king,
But by fair sequence and succession? Shakespeare. R. II.
 2. Series; arrangement; method.
The cause proceedeth from a precedent sequence, and series of the seasons of the year. Bacon's Nat. History.
- SEQUENT. adj. [sequens, Latin.]
1. Following; succeeding.
Let my trial be mine own confession:
Immediate sentence then, and sequent death,
Is all the grace I beg. Shakespeare. Meas. for Meas.
 2. Consequential.
There he dies, and leaves his race
Growing into a nation; and now grown, Suspected to a sequent king, who seeks To stop their overgrowth. Milton's Paradise Lost.
 3. Consequential.
Here he hath framed a letter to a sequent of the stranger queen's, which accidentally miscarried. Shakespeare.
- TO SEQUESTER. v. a. [sequester, Fr. sequester, Spanish; sequestro, low Latin.]
1. To separate from others for the sake of privacy.
Why are you sequester'd from all your train? Shakespeare.
 2. To put aside; to remove.
To the which place a poor sequester'd flag,
That from the hunter's aim had ta'en a hurt,
Did come to languish. Shakespeare. As you like it.
 3. To withdraw; to segregate.
In shady bow'r,
More sacred and sequester'd, though but feign'd,
Pan or Sylvanus never slept. Milton.
 4. To set aside from the use of the owner to that of others.
Ye sacred Nine! that all my soul possesses,
Whose raptures fire me, and whose visions blest,
Bear me, oh bear me to sequester'd scenes
Of bowry mazes, and surrounding greens. Pope.
 5. To deprive of possessions.
Although I had wholly sequestered my civil affairs, yet I set down, out of long continued experience in business, and conversation in books, what I thought pertinent to this affair. Bacon.
- SEQUESTERABLE. adj. [from sequestro.]
1. Subject to privation.
Hartshorn, and divers other bodies belonging to the animal kingdom, abound with a not uneasily sequesterable salt. Boyle.
 2. Capable of separation.
In general contagions more perill for want of necessities than by the malignity of the disease, they being sequestered from mankind. Arbutnot on Air.

SER

- SEQUESTRATION. n. f. [sequestration, Fr. from sequestro.]
1. Separation; retirement.
His addition was to courses vain;
I never noted in him any study,
Any retirement, any sequestration
From open haunts and popularity. Shakespeare. Henry V.
 2. Disunion; disjunction.
There must be leisure, retirement, solitude, and a sequestration of a man's self from the noise and toils of the world; for truth scorns to be seen by eyes too much fixt upon inferior objects. South's Sermons.
 3. State of being set aside.
The metals remain unsevered, the fire only dividing the body into smaller particles, hindering rest and continuity, without any sequestration of elementary principles. Boyle.
 4. Deprivation of the use and profits of a possession.
Since Henry Monmouth first began to reign,
Before whose glory I was great in arms,
This loathsome sequestration have I had. Shakespeare. H. VI.
- If there be a single spot in the glebe more barren, the rector or vicar may be obliged, by the caprice or pique of the bishop, to build upon it, under pain of sequestration. Swift.
- SEQUESTRA'TOR. n. f. [from sequestro.] One who takes from a man the profit of his possessions.
I am fallen into the hands of publicans and sequestrators, and they have taken all from me. Taylor.
- SERAGLIO. n. f. [Italian, perhaps of Oriental original. The g is lost in the pronunciation.] A house of women kept for debauchery.
There is a great deal more solid content to be found in a constant course of well living, than in the voluptuousness of a seraglio. Norris.
- SERAPH. n. f. [סֵרָפִים, One of the orders of angels.]
He is infinitely more remote in the real excellency of his nature, from the highest and perfectest of all created beings, than the purest seraph is from the most contemptible part of matter, and consequently must infinitely exceed what our narrow understandings can conceive of him. Locke.
- As full, as perfect in vile man that mourns,
As the rapt seraph that adores and burns. Pope.
- SERAPHICAL. adj. [seraphique, French; from seraph.] Angelic; angelical.
Love is curious of little things, desiring to be of angelical purity, of perfect innocence, and seraphical fervour. Taylor.
- SERAPHICK. adj. [seraphicus, Latin.] Angelic; angelical.
Seraphick arms and trophies.
'Tis to the world a secret yet,
Whether the nymph, to please her swain,
Talks in high romantick strain;
Or whether he at last descends
To take with less seraphick ends. Swift.
- SERAPHIM. n. f. [This is properly the plural of seraph, and therefore cannot have a added; yet, in compliance with our language, seraphims is sometimes written.] Angels of one of the heavenly orders.
To thee cherubim and seraphim continually do cry. Com. Pr.
- Then flew one of the seraphims unto me, having a live coal in his hand. Is. vi. 6.
- Of seraphim another row. Milton.
- SERE. adj. [crepus, Saxon, to dry.] Dry; withered; no longer green. See SEAR.
The mules, that were wont green bays to wear,
Now bringen bitter elder-branches here. Spenser.
- He is deformed, crooked, old, and sere, Ill-fac'd, worse bodied, shapeless every where;
Vicious, ungente. Shakespeare. Comedy of Errors.
- Ere this diurnal star
Leave cold the night, how we his gather'd beams Reflected, may with matter sere lament. Milton.
- They sere wood from the rotten hedges took,
And seeds of latent fire from flints provoke. Dryden.
- On a sere branch,
Low bending to the bank, I sat me down, Musing and still. Rowe's Royal Convert.
- SERE. n. f. [Of this word I know not the etymology, nor, except from this passage, the meaning. Can it come, like sheers, from scyan, Saxon, to cut?] Claw; talon.
Two eagles,
That, mounted on the winds, together still
Their strokes extended; but arriving now
Amidst the council, over every brow
Shook their thick wings, and threatening death's cold fears,
Their necks and cheeks tore with their eager sere. Chapman.
- SERENADE. n. f. [serenade, Fr. serenata, Italian, whence, in Milton, serenate, from serenus, Latin, the lovers commonly attending their mistresses in fair nights.] Music or songs with which ladies are entertained by their lovers in the night.
Mixt dance, or wanton mask, or midnight ball,
Or serenade, which the starv'd lover sings
To his proud fair; best quitted with disdain. Milton.
- So often at my window do,
With thy tuneless serenade? Cowley.

To SERENADE. v. a. [from the noun.] To entertain with nocturnal music.
He continued to serenade her every morning, 'till the queen was charmed with his harmony. Spectator.
SERENE. adj. [from serenus, French; serenus, Latin.]
1. Calm; placid; quiet.
Spirits live inspherd
In regions mild, of calm and serene air. Milton.
The moon, serene in glory, mounts the sky. Pope.
2. Unruffled; undisturbed; even of temper; peaceful or calm of mind; shewing a calm mind.
There wanted yet a creature might erect
His stature, and upright with front serene Milton.
Govern the rest.
Exciting them, by a due remembrance of all that is past, unto future circumspection, and a serene expectation of the future life. Greav's Cynosol.
Gutta SERENA. n. f. An obstruction in the optic nerve.
These eyes that roll in vain,
So thick a drop serene hath quench'd their orbs. Milton.
SERENE. n. f. [from the adjective.] A calm damp evening.
Where ever death doth please to appear,
Seas, serenes, fwords, shot, lickenes, all are there. Ben. Jonson.
To SERENE. v. a. [from serenus, French; serenus, Latin.]
1. To calm; to quiet.
2. To clear; to brighten. Not proper.
Take care
Thy muddy bev'rage to serene, and drive
Precipitant the baser rosy lees. Philips.
SERENELY. adv. [from serene.]
1. Calmly; quietly.
The setting sun now shone serenely bright. Pope.
2. With unruffled temper; coolly.
Whatever practical rule is generally broken, cannot be su-posed innate; it being impossible that men would, without fame or fear, confidently and serenely break a rule, which they could not but evidently know that God had set up. Locke.
The nymph did like the scene appear,
Serenely pleasant, calmly fair: Prior.
Soft fell her words as flew the air.
SERENESS. n. f. [from serene.] Serenity.
SERENITUDE. n. f. [from serene.] Calmness; coolness of mind. Not in use.
From the equal distribution of the phlegmatick humour, will flow quietude and serenitude in the affections. Watson.
SERENITY. n. f. [from serenitas, Fr. from serenus, Latin.]
1. Calmness; temperance.
In the constitution of a perpetual equinox, the best part of the globe would be desolate; and as to that little that would be inhabited, there is no reason to expect that it would constantly enjoy that admired calm and serenity. Bentley.
Pure serenity apace
Induces thought, and contemplation still. Thomson.
2. Peace; quietness; not disturbance.
A general peace and serenity newly succeeded a general trouble and cloud throughout all his kingdoms. Temple.
3. Evenness of temper; coolness of mind.
I cannot see how any men should ever transgress those mortal rules, with confidence and serenity, were they innate, and stamp'd upon their minds.
SERGE. n. f. [from serge, French; serga, Spanish, which Covarruvias derives from sericea, Arabic; Skinner from serge, German, a mat.] A kind of cloth.
The same wool one man felt into a hat, another weaves into cloth, another into kersey or serges, and another into arras. Hale.
Ye weavers, all your shuttles throw,
And bid broad-cloaths and serges grow. Gay.
SERGEANT. n. f. [from sergent, French; sergente, Italian, from sericus, Latin.]
1. An officer whose business it is to execute the commands of magistrates.
Had I but time, as this fell sergeant, death,
Is strict in his arrest, oh, I could tell. Shakesp. Hamlet.
When it was day the magistrates sent the sergeants, saying, let these men go. Acti xvi. 35.
2. A petty officer in the army.
This is the sergeant,
Who, like a good and hardy soldier, fought. Shakesp. Macb.
3. A lawyer of the highest rank under a judge.
None should be made sergeants, but such as probably might be held fit to be judges afterwards. Bacon.
4. It is a title given to some of the king's servants: as, sergeant chirurgiens.
SERGEANTRY. n. f. [from sergeant.]
Grand sergeantry is that where one holdeth lands of the king by service, which he ought to do in his own person unto him: as to bear the king's banner or his spear, or to lead his host, or to be his marshal, or to blow a horn, when he seeth his enemies invade the land; or to find a man at arms to fight within the four seas, or else to do it himself; or to bear the king's sword before him at his coronation, or on that day to be his sewer, carver, butler, or chamberlain. Petit sergeantry is where a man holdeth land of the king, to yield him yearly some small thing toward his wars: as a sword, dagger, bow, knife, spear, pair of gloves of mail, a pair of spurs, or such like. Cowel.

SERGEANTSHIP. n. f. [from sergeant.] The office of a sergeant.
SERIES. n. f. [from series, Fr. series, Latin.]
1. Sequence; order.
Draw out that antecedent, by reflecting briefly upon the text as it lies in the series of the epistle. Ward of Infidelity.
The chafms of the correspondence I cannot supply, having destroyed too many letters to preserve any series. Pope.
2. Succession; course.
This is the series of perpetual woe,
Which thou, alas, and thine are born to know. Pope.
SERIOUS. adj. [from serius, Fr. serius, Latin.]
1. Grave; solemn; not volatile; not light of behav' Pope.
2. Important; weighty; not trifling.
I'll hence to London on a serious matter. Shakesp. H. VI.
There's nothing serious in mortality;
All is but toys. Shakesp. Macbeth.
SERIOUSLY. adv. [from serious.] Gravely; solemnly; in earnest; without levity.
It cannot but be matter of very dreadful consideration to any one, sober and in his wits, to think seriously with himself, what horror and confusion must needs surprize that man, at the last day of account, who had led his whole life by one rule, when God intends to judge him by another. South.
All laugh to find Unthinking plainness so o'erspread thy mind,
That thou could'st seriously persuade the crowd
To keep their oaths, and to believe a god. Dryden.
Justin Martyr, Tertullian, Lactantius, and Arnobius, tell us, that this martyrdom first of all made them seriously inquisitive into that religion, which could endure the mind with so much strength, and overcome the fear of death, nay, raise an earnest desire of it, though it appeared in all its terrors. Addi.
SERIOUSNESS. n. f. [from serious.] Gravity; solemnity; earnest attention.
That spirit of religion and seriousness vanished all at once, and a spirit of libertinism and profaneness started up in the room of it. Asterbury's Sermon.
The youth was received at the door by a servant, who then conducted him with great silence and seriousness to a long gallery, which was darkened at noon-day. Addison's Spectator.
SARMOCINATOR. n. f. [from sarmocinator, Latin.] The act or practice of making speeches.
SARMOCINATOR. n. f. [from sarmocinator, Latin.] A preacher; a speechmaker.
These ostentatious sarmocinators make easy impression upon the minds of the vulgar. Hewitt.
SERMON. n. f. [from sermo, Fr. sermo, Lat.] A discourse of instruction pronounced by a divine for the edification of the people.
As for our sermons, be they never so found and perfect, God's word they are not, as the sermons of the prophets were; no, they are but ambiguously termed his word, because his word is commonly the subject whereof they treat, and must be the rule whereby they are framed. Hewitt.
This our life, exempt from publick haunt,
Finds tongues in trees, books in the running brooks, Sermons in stones, and good in every thing. Shakesp. Lear.
In his sermons unto the soldiers, and in open talk with the nobility, it should seem that he himself had been enough to have overthrown the Turks. Knolles's History of the Turks.
Sermons he heard, yet not so many
As left no time to practise any;
He heard them reverently, and then
His practice preach'd them o'er again. Crofton.
Many, while they have preached Christ in their sermons, have read a lecture of atheism in their practice. South.
His preaching much, but more his practice wrought;
A living sermon of the truths he taught. Dryden.
To SERMON. v. a. [from sermon, Fr. from the noun.]
1. To discourse as in a sermon.
Some would rather have good discipline delivered plainly by way of precept, or sermon'd at large, than thus cloudily in-wrapped in allegorical devices. Spenser.
2. To tutor; to teach dogmatically; to lesson.
Come, sermon me no farther;
No villainous bounty yet hath pass'd my heart. Shak. Timon.
SERMOUNTAIN, or Serjell. n. f. [from serjell, Lat.] A plant.
It hath a rose and umbellated flower, consisting of several leaves, which are ranged orbicularly, and rest on the empalement, which becomes a fruit composed of two large oblong furrowed seeds, having foliaceous ridges on one side. To these notes must be added, that the lobes of the leaves are large, long, and intire, excepting their extremity, where they are slightly cut into three parts. Miller.

SERO'SITY.

SER

SERO'SITY. n. f. [from serosus, Fr.] Thin, or watery part of the blood.
In these the salt and lixiviated serosity is divided between the guts and the bladder; but it remains undivided in birds. Brown.
The tumour of the throat, which occasions the difficulty of swallowing and breathing, proceeds from a serosity obstructing the glands, which may be watery, oedematose, and scirrhus, according to the viscosity of the humour. Arbutnot.
SEROUS. adj. [from serus, French; serus, Latin.]
1. Thin; watery. Used of the part of the blood which separates in congelation from the grumous or red part.
2. Adapted to the serum.
This disease is commonly an extravasation of serum, received in some cavity of the body; for there may be also a droply by a dilatation of the serous vessels, as that in the ovarium. Arbutnot on Diet.
SERPENT. n. f. [from serpens, Latin.] An animal that moves by undulation without legs. They are often venomous. They are divided into two kinds; the viper, which brings young, and the snake, that lays eggs.
She was arrayed all in lily white,
And in her right hand bore a cup of gold,
With wine and water filled up to the height;
In which a serpent did himself enroll,
That horror made to all that did behold. Fairy Queen.
She struck me with her tongue,
Most serpent like, upon the very heart. Shakesp. K. Lear.
They, or under ground, or circuit wide,
With serpent error wand'ring, to find their way. Milton.
Haply piercing through the dark disguise,
The chief I challeng'd: he whose practis'd wit
Knew all the serpent mazes of deceit, Eludes my search. Pope's Odyssey.
SERPENTINE. adj. [from serpens, Lat. from serpent.]
1. Resembling a serpent.
I craved of him to lead me to the top of this rock, with meaning to free him from so serpentine a companion as I am. Sidney.
This of ours is described with legs, wings, a serpentine and winding tail, and a crest or comb somewhat like a cock. Brown.
Nothing wants, but that thy shape
Like his, and colour serpentine, may shew Thy inward fraud. Milton's Paradise Lost.
The figures and their parts ought to have a serpentine and flaming form naturally: these sorts of outlines have, I know not what of life and seeming motion in them, which very much resembles the activity of the flame and serpent. Dryden.
2. Winding like a serpent; sinuous.
Nor can the sun
Perfect a circle, or maintain his way
One inch direct; but where he rols to-day
He comes no more, but with a cozening line Steals by that point, and so is serpentine. Donne.
His hand the adorned firmament display'd,
Those serpentine, yet constant motions made.
How many spacious countries does the Rhine,
In winding banks, and mazes serpentine,
Traverse, before he splits in Belgia's plain,
And, lost in sand, creeps to the German main? Blackmore.
SERPENTINE. n. f. An herb. Ainsworth.
SERPENTINE STONE. n. f.
There were three species of this stone known among the ancients, all resembling one another, and celebrated for the same virtues. They were all of the marble kind: the one was green, variegated with spots of black, thence called the black opites; another, called the white opites, was green also, but variegated with spots of white: the third was called tephris, and was of a grey colour, variegated with small black spots. The first species was chiefly used in medicine, and found by the ancients only in Egypt; but it is frequent in the deserts of Arabia, in the islands of the Archipelago, in Italy, and we have whole quarries of it in Wales. The ancients tell us, that it was a certain remedy against the poison of the bite of serpents; but it is now justly rejected. Hill's Mat. Med.
Accept in good part a bottle made of a serpentine stone, which hath the quality to give any wine or water, that shall be infused therein for four and twenty hours, the taste and operation of the spaw-water, and is very medicinable for the cure of the spleen and gravel. Watt.
SERPENTS TONGUE. n. f. An herb. Ainsworth.
SERPET. n. f. A basket. Ainsworth.
SERPINOUS. adj. [from serpis, Latin.] Diseased with a serpigo.
The skin behind her ear downwards became serpiginous, and was covered with white scales. Wijeman.
SERPIGO. n. f. [Latin.] A kind of tetter.
For thy own bowels, which do call thee fire,
Do curse the gout, serpigo, and the rheum,
For ending thee no sooner.
She had a node with pains on her right leg, and a serpigo on her right hand. Shakesp. Measure for Measure.
To SERRE. v. a. [from serre, French.] To drive hard together; to crowd into a little space. Not received into use, nor deserving reception.

The frowning and knitting of the brows is a gathering or sering of the spirits, to resist in some measure; and also this knitting will follow upon earnest studying, though it be without dislike. Bacon's Nat. History.
Heat attenuates and sends forth the spirit of a body, and upon that the more gross parts contract and serre themselves together. Bacon.
SERRATE. adj. [from serratus, Latin.] Formed with jags or SERRATED. } indentures like the edge of a saw.
All that have serrate teeth are carnivorous. Roy.
The common heron hath long legs for wading, a long neck answerable thereto to reach prey, a wide throat to pouch it, and long toes with strong hooked talons, one of which is remarkably serrate on the edge. Derham's Physico-Theology.
This stick is usually knotted, and always armed: one of them with a curious shark's tooth near an inch long, and indentured or serrated on both edges: a scurvy weapon. Greav.
SERRATION. n. f. [from serra, Latin.] Formation in the shape of a saw.
SERRATURE. n. f. [from serra, Latin.] Indenture like teeth of saws.
These are serrated on the edges; but the serratures are deeper and grosser than in any of the rest. Woodward.
To SERRY. v. a. [from serrer, French; serrato, Italian.] To press close; to drive hard together. For serry Bacon uses serry; but neither serry nor serry are received.
With them role
A forest huge of spears; and thronging helms
Appear'd, and serr'd shields in thick array,
Of death immeasurable. Milton's Paradise Lost.
Foul dissipation follow'd, and fore'd rout;
Nor serv'd it to relax their serr'd files. Milton's Par. Lost.
SERVANT. n. f. [from servant, French; servus, Latin.]
1. One who attends another, and acts at his command. The correlative of master.
We are one in fortune; both Fell by our servants, by those men we lov'd most. Shakesp.
I had rather be a country servant maid,
Than a great queen with this condition. Shak. R. III.
He disdain'd not Thenceforth the form of servant to assume. Milton.
For master or for servant here to call
Was all alike, where only two were all. Dryden.
2. One in a state of subjection. Unusual.
Being unprepar'd,
Our will became the servant to defect,
Which else should free have wrong'd. Shak. Macbeth.
3. A word of civility used to superiors or equals.
This subjection, due from all men to all men, is something more than the compliment of course, when our betters tell us they are our humble servants, but understand us to be their slaves. Swift.
To SERVANT. v. a. [from the noun.] To subject. Not in use.
My affairs
Are servanted to others: though I owe My revenge properly, remission lies In Volcanic breaths. Shakesp. Coriolanus.
To SERVE. v. a. [from servir, French; servis, Latin.]
1. To attend at command.
Because thou art my brother, should'st thou therefore serve me for nought? Gen. xxix. 15.
A goddess among gods ador'd, and serv'd
By angels numberless, thy daily train. Milton.
2. To obey servilely or meanly.
When wealthy, shew thy wisdom not to be
To wealth a servant, but make wealth serve thee. Denham.
3. To supply with food ceremoniously.
Others, pamper'd in their shameless pride,
Are serv'd in plate, and in their chariots ride. Dryden.
4. To bring as a menial attendant.
Bid them cover the table, serve in the meat, and we will come in to dinner. Shakesp. Merch. of Venice.
Soon after our dinner was serv'd in, which was right good viands, both for bread and meat: we had also drink of three sorts, all wholesome and good. Bacon.
Besmeared with the horrid juice of sepia, they danced a little in phantastick postures, retired a while, and then returned serv'ing up a banquet as at solemn funerals. Taylor.
Some part he roasts; then serve it up so dress'd,
And bids me welcome to this humble feast:
Mov'd with disdain,
I with avenging flames the palace burn'd. Dryden.
The same melf should be serv'd up again for supper, and breakfast next morning. A bubn. History of John Bull.
5. To be subservient or subordinate to.
Bodies bright and greater should not serve
The less not bright. Milton.

- Just in the nick; the cook knock'd thrice;
 And all the waiters in a trice
 His summons did obey;
 Each serving-man, with dish in hand,
 March'd boldly up, like our train'd band,
 Presented and away. Suckling.
 With Dennis you did ne'er combine,
 Not you, to steal your master's wine;
 Except a bottle now and then,
 To welcome brother serving-man. Swift.
SE'RVITOR, n. f. [serviteur, French.]
 1. Servant; attendant. A word obsolete.
 This workman, whose servitor nature is, being only one, the heathens imagining to be more, gave him in the sky the name of Jupiter; in the air, of Juno; in the water, of Neptune; in the earth, of Vesta; and Ceres. Hooker.
 Your trusty and most valiant servitor,
 With his free duty recommends you thus. Shakefp.
 Thus are poor servitors,
 When others sleep upon their quiet beds,
 Constrain'd to watch in darkniels, rain and cold. Shakefp.
 Our Norman conqueror gave away to his servitors the lands and possessions of such as did oppose his invasion. Darwin.
 Fearful commenting
 Is leaden servitor to dull delay;
 Delay leads impotent and snail-paced beggary. Shakefp.
 My noble queen, let former grudges pass,
 And henceforth I am thy true servitor. Shakefp. Hen. VI.
 2. One of the lowest order in the university.
 His learning is much of a size with his birth and education; no more of either than what a poor hungry servitor can be expected to bring with him from his college. Swift.
SE'RVITUDE, n. f. [servitude, French; servitus, Latin.]
 1. Slavery; state of a slave; dependance.
 Aristotle speaketh of men, whom nature hath fram'd for the state of servitude, saying, they have reason so far forth as to conceive when others direct them. Hooker.
 You would have sold your king to slaughter,
 His princes and his peers to servitude,
 His subjects to oppression and contempt. Shakefp. Hen. V.
 Tho' it is necessary, that some persons in the world should be in love with a splendid servitude, yet certainly they must be much beholding to their own fancy, that they can be pleas'd at it; for he that rises up early, and goes to bed late, only to receive addresses, is really as much abridg'd in his freedom, as he that waits to present one. South Sermons.
 Unjustly thou deprav'st it with the name
 Of servitude, to serve whom God ordains,
 Or nature: God and nature bid the same,
 When he who rules is worthiest. Milton.
 2. Servants collectively.
 After him a cum'brous train
 Of herds, and flocks, and numerous servitude. Milton.
SE'RVUM, n. f. [Latin.]
 1. The thin and watry part that separates from the rest in any liquor, as in milk from the cream.
 2. The part of the blood, which in coagulation separates from the grume.
 Blood is the most universal juice in an animal body: the red part of it differs from the serum, the serum from the lymph, the lymph from the nervous juice, and that from the several other humours separated in the glands. Arbutnot.
SESQUIALTER, } adj. [sesquialtere, Fr. sesquialter, Lat.]
SESQUIALTERAL, }
 In geometry, is a ratio, where one quantity or number contains another once and half as much more, as 6 and 9. Dié.
 In all the revolutions of the planets about the sun, and of the secondary planets about the primary ones, the periodical times is in a sesquialter proportion to the mean distance. Chyene.
 As the six primary planets revolve about the sun, so the secondary ones are moved about them in the same sesquialteral proportion of their periodical motions to their orbs. Bentley.
SE'RSQUPLICATE, adj. [In mathematicks.] Is the proportion one quantity or number has to another, in the ratio of one half.
 The periodical times of the planets are in sesquuplicate proportion, and not a duplicate proportion of the distances from the center or the radii; and consequently the planets cannot be carried about by an harmonically circulating fluid. Chyene's Phil. Prin.
SE'RSQUIPEDAL, } adj. [sesquipedalis, Latin.] Containing SE'RSQUIPEDALIAN, } 2 foot and a half.
 As for my own part, I am but a sesquipedal, having only six foot and a half of stature. Addis. Guard.
 Half thou ever measured the gigantick Ethiopian, whose stature is above eight cubits high, or the sesquipedalian pigmy? Arbut. and Pope's Mart. Scrib.
SE'RSQUITTERTIAN, [in mathematicks.] Having such a ratio, as that one quantity or number contains another once and one third part more; as between 6 and 8. Dié.

14. To value; to estimate; to rate.

Be you contented
To have a son set your decrees at nought?
To pluck down justice from your awful bench,
To trip the course of law? Shakspeare, H. IV.

The backwardness parents shew in divulging their faults, will make them set a greater value on their credit themselves, and teach them to be the more careful to preserve the good opinion of others. Locke.

If we act by several broken views, and will not only be virtuous, but wealthy, popular, and every thing that has a value set upon it by the world, we shall live and die in misery. Addison.

Have I not set at nought my noble birth,
A spotless fame, and an unblemish'd race,
The peace of innocence, and pride of virtue?
My prodigality has giv'n thee all. Rowe's Jane Shore.

Though the same sun, with all diffusive rays,
Blush in the rose and in the diamond blaze,
We prize the stronger effort of his power,
And always set the gem above the flower. Pope.

15. To stake at play.

What sad disorders play begets!
Desperate and mad, at length he *set*s
Those darts, whose points make gods adore. Prior.

Carlike into the West Indies; in the which I set aside the taking of St. Jago and St. Domingo in Hispaniola, as surprizes rather than encounters. Bacon.
My highest interest is not to be deceived about these matters; therefore, setting aside all other considerations, I will endeavour to know the truth, and yield to that. Tillotson.
32. To set aside. To reject.
I'll look into the pretensions of each, and shew upon what ground 'tis that I embrace that of the deluge, and set aside all the rest. Woodward's Nat. History.
No longer now does my neglected mind
Its wonted stores and old ideas find:
Fix'd judgment there no longer does abide,
To taste the true, or set the false aside. Prior.
33. To set aside. To abrogate; to annul.
Several innovations, made to the detriment of the English merchant, are now intirely set aside. Addison.
There may be
Reasons of so much pow'r and cogent force,
As may ev'n set aside this right of birth:
If sons have rights, yet fathers have 'em too.
He shows what absurdities follow upon such a supposition, and the greater those absurdities are, the more strongly do they evince the falsity of that supposition from whence they flow, and consequently the truth of the doctrine set aside by that supposition. Atterbury.
34. To set by. To regard; to esteem.
David behaved himself more wisely than all, so that his name was much set by. 1 Sa. xviii. 30.
35. To set by. To reject or omit for the present.
You shall hardly edify me, that those nations might not, by the law of nature, have been subdued by any nation that had only policy and moral virtue; though the propagation of the faith, whereof we shall speak in the proper place, were set by,
and not made part of the case. Bacon.
36. To set down. To mention; to explain; to relate in writing.
They have set down, that a rose set by garlick is sweeter, because the more fetid juice goeth into the garlick. Bacon.

by the Venetians. Kneller's History of the Turki.
They agreed, all with one consent, at a prefixed day, to send unto Vienna such warlike forces, as they had in any time before set forth, for the defence of the Christian religion.
Kneller's History of the Turki.
When poor Rutilus spends all his worth,
In hopes of setting one good dinner forth,
'Tis downright madness. Dryden's Juvenal.
42. To set forth. To display; to explain.
As for words to set forth such lowliness, it is not hard for them to give a goodly and painted shew thereunto, borrowed even from the praises proper to virtue. Spenser.
So little have these false colours dishonoured painting, that they have only serv'd to set forth her praise, and to make her merit further known. Dryden's Dufresny.
43. To set forth. To arrange; to place in order.
Up higher to the plain, where we'll set forth
In best appointment all our regiments. Shakespeare. K. John.

suspicious diffidence of it, are very well set forth here for our instruction. L'Estrange.
45. To set forward. To advance; to promote.
They yield that reading may set forward, but not begin the work of salvation. Hucker.
Amongst them there are not those helps which others have,
to set them forward in the way of life. Hucker.
In the external form of religion, such things as are apparently or can be sufficiently proved effectual, and generally fit to set forward godliness, either as betokening the greatness of God, or as becoming the dignity of religion, or as concurring with celestial impressions in the minds of men, may be reverently thought of. Hucker.
They mar my path, they set forward my calamity.
Dung or chalk, applied seasonably to the roots of trees, doth set them forward. Bacon's Nat. History.

self. Calder.
47. To set off. To decorate; to recommend; to adorn; to embellish. It answers to the French relever.
Like bright metal on a fullen ground,
My reformation, glittering o'er my faults,
Shall shew more goodly, and attract more eyes,
Than that which hath no foil to set it off. Shakespeare. H. IV.
The prince put thee into my service for no other reason than to set me off. Shakespeare. Henry IV.
Neglect not the examples of those that have carried themselves ill in the same place; not to set off thyself by taxing their memory, but to direct thyself what to avoid.
May you be happy, and your sorrows pass
Set off those joys I wish may ever last. Waller.
The figures of the groupes must contrast each other by their several positions: thus in a play some characters must be raised to oppose others, and to set them off. Dryden.

Bring up your army.
11. To apply one's self.
If he set industriously and sincerely to perform the commands of Christ, he can have no ground of doubting but it shall prove successful to him.
12. To set about. To fall to; to begin.
We find it most hard to convince them, that it is necessary now, at this very present, to set about it: we are thought a little too hot and hasty, when we press wicked men to leave their sins to-day, as long as they have so much time before them to do it in.
How preposterous is it, never to set about works of charity, whilst we ourselves can see them performed?
13. To set in. To fix in a particular state.
When the weather was set in to be very bad, I have taken a whole day's journey to see a gallery furnished by great masters.
As November set in with keen frosts, so they continued through the whole of that month, without any other alteration than freezing with more or less severity, as the winds changed.
A storm accordingly happened the following day; for a southern monsoon began to set in.
14. To set on or upon. To begin a march, journey, or enterprize.
Be't your charge
To see perform'd the tenor of our word:
Set on.
He that would seriously set upon the search of truth, ought to prepare his mind with a love of it.
The understanding would presently obtain the knowledge
it is about, and then set upon some new inquiry.
15. To set on. To make an attack.
Hence every leader to his charge;
For on their answer we will set on them.
16. To set out. To have beginning.
If any invisible casualty there be, it is questionable whether its activity only set out at our nativity, and began not rather in the womb.
The dazzling lustre to abate,
He set not out in all his pomp and state,
Clad in the midst of lightning.
17. To set out. To begin a journey.
At their setting out they must have their commission from the king.
I shall put you in mind where you promised to set out, or begin your first stage.
Me thou think'st not slow,
Who since the morning-hour set out from heav'n,
Where God resides, and ere mid-day arriv'd
In Eden.
My soul then mov'd the quicker pace;
Your's first set out, mine reach'd her in the race.
These doctrines, laid down for foundations of any science, were called principles, as the beginnings from which we must set out, and look no farther backwards.

SET

- He that set out upon weak legs will not only go farther, but grow stronger too, than one who with firm limbs only sits still.
For these reasons I shall set out for London to-morrow.
Look no more on man in the first stage of his existence, in his setting out for eternity.
If we slacken our aims, and drop our oars, we shall be hurried back to the place from whence we first set out.
18. To set out. To begin the world.
Eudoxus, at his first setting out, threw himself into court.
Eugenio set out from the same university, and about the same time with Corulodes.

whether it go not against the hair with them to set to anything else.
20. To set up. To begin a trade openly.
We have stock enough to set up with, capable of infinite advancement, and yet no less capable of total decay.
A man of a clear reputation, though his bark be split, yet he saves his cargo; has something left towards setting up again, and so is in capacity of receiving benefit not only from his own industry, but the friendship of others.
Those who have once made their court to those mistress without portions, the mules, are never like to set up for futures.
This habit of writing and discoursing was acquired during my apprenticeship in London, and a long residence there after I had set up for myself.
21. To set up. To begin a project of advantage.
Eumenes, one of Alexander's captains, setting up for himself after the death of his master, persuaded his principal officers to lend him great sums; after which they were forced to follow him for their own security.
A severe treatment might tempt them to set up for a republik.
22. To set up. To profess publicly.
Scowring the warch grows out of fashion wit;
Now we set up for tilting in the pit.
Can Polyphemus, or Antiphatas,
Who gorge themselves with man,
Set up to teach humanity, and give,
By their example, rules for us to live?
It is found by experience, that those men who set up for morality, without regard to religion, are generally but vir-tuous in part.
Set, part. adj. [from the verb.] Regular; not lax; made in consequence of some formal rule.
Rude am I in my speech,
And little blest with the set phrase of peace.
Th' indictment of the good lord Hastings.
In a set hand fairly is ingro'd.
He would not perform that service by the hazard of one set battle, but by dallying off the time.
Set speeches, and a formal tale,
With none but statemen and grave fools prevail.
In ten set battles have we driv'n back
These heathen Saxons, and regain'd our earth.
What we hear in conversation has this general advantage over set discourses, that in the latter we are apt to attend more to the beauty and elegance of the composition than to the matter delivered.
Set, n. f. [from the verb.]
1. A number of things suited to each other; a number of things of which one cannot conveniently be separated from the rest.
Sensations and passions seem to depend upon a particular set of motions.
All corpufcles of the same set or kind agree in every thing.
'Tis not a set of features or complexion,
The tincture of a skin, that I admire.
I shall here lay together a new set of remarks, and observe the artifices of our enemies to raise such prejudices.
Homer introduced that monstrous character to show the marvellous, and paint it in a new set of colours.
He must change his comrades;
In half the time he talks them round,
There must another set be found.
They refer to those critics who are partial to some particular set of writers to the prejudice of others.
Perhaps there is no man, nor set of men, upon earth, whose sentiments I intirely follow.
2. Any thing not down, but put in a state of some growth into the ground.
'Tis raised by set or berries, like white thorn, and lies the same time in the ground.
3. The apparent fall of the sun, or other bodies of heaven, below the horizon.

SET

- The weary sun hath made a golden set;
And, by the bright track of his fiery car,
Gives signal of a goodly day to-morrow.
When the battle's lost and won.
That will be ere set of sun.
Before set of sun that day, I hope to reach my Winter-quarters.
4. A wager at dice.
That was but civil war, an equal set,
Where piles with piles, and eagles eagles fight.
5. A game.
Have I not here the best cards for the game,
To win this easy match plaid for a crown?
And shall I now give o'er the yielded set?
When we have match'd our rackets to these balls,
We will, in France, play a set
Shall strike his father's crown into the hazard.
6. A game.
Shall strike his father's crown into the hazard.
SET, n. f. [from set, Latin.] Briefly; set with strong hairs; consisting of strong hairs.
The parent insect, with its stiff setaceous tail, terbrates the rib of the leaf when tender, and makes way for its egg into the very pith.
SET, n. f. [from set, Latin.]
A seton is made when the skin is taken up with a needle, and the wound kept open by a twist of silk or hair, that humours may vent themselves. Farriers call this operation in cattle rowelling.
I made a seton to give a vent to the humour.
If the sinus be of great length depending, make a perforation in the lower part by a seton-needle with a twisted silk.
SETTER, n. f. [from set.]
1. One who sets.
When he was gone I cast this book away: I could not look upon it but with weeping eyes, in remembering him who was the only setter on to do it.
Shameless Warwick, peace!
Proud setter up and puller down of kings!
He seemeth to be a setter forth of strange gods.
2. A dog who beats the field, and points the bird for the sport-men.
3. A man who performs the office of a setting dog, or finds out persons to be plundered.
Another set of men are the devil's setters, who continually beat their brains how to draw in some innocent unguarded heir into their hellish net, learning his humour, prying into his circumstances, and observing his weak side.
SETTLE, n. f. [from settle, Latin.]
A dog taught to find game, and point it out to the sportsman.
Will obliges young heirs with a settling dog he has made himself.
SETTLE, n. f. [from settle, Latin.]

The father thought the time drew on
Of settling in the world his only son.
4. To fix in any place.
Settled in his face I see Sad resolution.
5. To establish; to confirm.
Justice submitted to what Abra pleas'd:
Her will alone could settle or revoke,
And law was fix'd by what the latest spoke.
6. To determine; to affirm; to free from ambiguity.
This exactness will be judged troublesome, and therefore most men will think they may be excused from settling the complex ideas of mixed modes so precisely in their minds.
Medals give a very great light to history, in confirming such passages as are true in old authors, and settling such as are told after different manners.
7. To fix; to make certain or unchangeable.
His banish'd gods restor'd to rites divine,
And still'd sure succession in his line.
If you will not take some care to settle our language, and

SET

- put it into a state of continuance, your memory shall not be preserved above an hundred years, further than by imperfect tradition.
7. To fix; not to suffer to continue doubtful in opinion, or desultory and wavering in conduct.
This, by a settled habit in things, whereof we have frequent experience, is performed so quick, that we take that for the perception of our sensation which is an idea formed by our judgment.
A pamphlet that talks of slavery, France, and the pre-tender; they desire no more: it will settle the wayerings, and confirm the doubtful.
8. To make close or compact.
Cover ant-hills up, that the rain may settle the turf before the Spring.
9. To fix unalienably by legal fancies.
I have given him the parsonage of the parish, and, because I know his value, have settled upon him a good annuity for life.

the due contemplation of whose loveliness may cure perfectly all hurts received from mortal beauty.
11. To affect so as that the dregs or impurities sink to the bottom.
So do the winds and thunders cleanse the air;
So working seas settle and purge the wine.
12. To compose; to put into a state of calmness.
When thou art settling thyself to thy devotions, imagine thou hearest thy Saviour calling to thee, as he did to Martha, Why art thou so careless?
13. To settle, v. n.
1. To subside; to sink to the bottom and repose there.
This is mere moral babble, and direct
Against the canon laws of our foundation:
I must not suffer this; yet 'tis the lees.
And settling of a melancholy blood.
2. To lose motion or fermentation; to deposit feces at the bottom.
Your fury then boil'd upward to a foam;
But since this melleage came, you sink and settle,
As if cold water had been pour'd upon you.
A government, upon such occasions, is always thick before it settles.
3. To fix one's self; to establish a residence.
The Spinetia, descended from the Pelegr, settled at the mouth of the river Po.
4. To chuse a method of life; to establish a domestick state.
As people marry now, and settle,
Fierce love abates his usual mettle;
Worldly desires, and household cares,
Disturb the godhead's soft affairs.
5. To become fixed so as not to change.
The wind came about and settled in the West, so as we could make no way.
6. To quit an irregular and desultory for a methodical life.
7. To take any lasting state.
That country became a gained ground by the mud brought down by the Nilus, which settled by degrees into a firm land.
According to laws established by the divine wisdom, it was wrought by degrees from one form into another, till it settled at length into an habitable earth.
Chyle, before it circulates with the blood, is whitish; by the force of circulation it runs through all the intermediate colours, till it settles in an intense red.
8. To rest; to repose.
When time hath worn out their natural vanity, and taught them discretion, their fondness settles on its proper object.
Warm'd in the brain the brazen weapon lies,
And shades eternal settle o'er his eyes.

 9. The figure formed upon any surface corresponding to the body by which the light is intercepted.
 Envy will merit as its shade pursue. P. p.
 10. The soul separated from the body; so called as supposed by the ancients to be perceptible to the light, not to the touch.
 A spirit; a ghost; a manes. Dryd.
 To Trachin swift as thought the fitting shade
 Thro' air his momentary journey made.
 Ne'er to these chambers where the mighty rest;
 Since their foundation, came a nobler guest;
 Nor e'er was to the bow'rs of bliss convey'd
 A fairer spirit or more welcome shade. Tickell.
 To SHADE. v. a. [from the noun.]

 For your good host. Shakefp. K. Lear.
 4. Obscure place.
 To the secret shadows I retire,
 To pay my penance till my years expire. Dryd.
 5. Dark part of a picture.
 A shadow is a diminution of the first and second light. The first light is that which proceeds immediately from a lighted body, as the beams of the sun. The second is an accidental light spreading itself into the air or medium proceeding from the other. Shadows are threefold: the first is a single shadow, and the least of all; and is proper to the plain surface where it is not wholly possessed of the light. The second is the double shadow, and it is used when the surface begins once to forsake your eye, as in columns. The third shadow is made by crossing over your double shadow again, which darkness by a third part. It is used for the inmost shadow, and farthest from the light, as in gulfs, wells, and caves. Peacoch.
 After great lights there must be great shadows. Dryden.
 6. Any thing perceptible only to the sight; a ghost; a spirit, or shade.
 Hence, terrible shadow!
 Unreal mock'ry, hence! Shakefp.
 7. An imperfect and faint representation; opposed to substance.
 If substance might be call'd that shadow seem'd. Mil.
 In the glorious lights of heaven we perceive a shadow of his divine countenance. Raleigh.

 A sudden youth the groves enjoy. Fenton.
 2. Not brightly luminous.
 More pleasant light
Shadowy sets off the face of things. Milton.
 3. Faintly representative; typical.
 When they see
 Law can discover sin, but not remove Save by those shadowy expiations weak,
 The blood of bulls and goats; they may conclude
 Some blood more precious must be paid for man. Mil.
 4. Unsubstantial; unreal.
 Milton has brought into his poems two actors of a shadowy and fictitious nature, in the persons of sin and death; by which he hath interwoven in his fable a very beautiful allegory. Addis.
 5. Dark; opaque.
 By command, e're yet dim night
 Her shadowy cloud withdraws, I am to haste Homeward. Mil. Parad. Lost.
 SHA'DY. adj. [from shade.]

 A lion's hide he wears;
 About his shoulders hangs the shaggy skin,
 The teeth and gaping jaws severely grin. Dryd.
 From the frosty north
 The early valiant Swede draws forth his wings,
 In battailous array, while Volga's stream Sends opposite, in shaggy armour clad
 Her borderers; on mutual slaughter bent. Philips.
 2. Rough; rugged.
 They pluck'd the seated hills with all their load,
 Rocks, waters, woods, and by the shaggy tops Uplifting bore them in their hands. Mil. Parad. Lost.
 There, where very desolation dwells,
 By grotts and caverns shaggy'd with horrid shades,
 She may pass on with unblench'd majesty,
 Be it not done in pride. Mil.
 Through Eden went a river large,
 Nor chang'd his course, but through the shaggy hill
 Pass'd underneath ingulph'd. Milton.
 How would the old king smile
 To see you weigh the paws when tip'd with gold,
 And throw the shaggy spoils about your shoulders. Addis.
 Ye rugged rocks! which holy knees have worn,
 Ye grotts and caverns shaggy'd with horrid thorn. Pope.
 SHAGREEN. n. f. [chagriner, French.] The skin of a kind of fish, or skin made rough in imitation of it.
 To SHAGREEN. v. a. [chagriner, French.] To irritate; to provoke. Both should be written chagriner.

 to their servants. Zech. ii. 9.
 I shook my lap and said, so God shake out every man from his house, even thus be he shaken out and emptied. Neb. v.
 The

S H A

- The stars fell onto the earth, even as a fig-tree casteth her untimely figs when she is shaken of a mighty wind. Rev. vi.
 He shook the sacred honours of his head: Shaksp.
 With terror trembled heav'n's subiding hill, Dryden.
 And from his shaken curls ambrosial dews distill.
 She first her husband on the poop espies,
 Shaking his hand at distance on the main; Dryden.
 She took the sign, and shook her hand again.
 2. To make to totter or tremble.
 The rapid wheels shake heav'n's basis, Milton.
 Let France acknowledge that her shaken throne
 Was once supported, sir, by you alone. Restormon.
 3. To throw down by a violent motion.

 of Christ is at hand. 2 Thes. ii. 2.
 Not my firm faith
 Can by his fraud be shaken or seduc'd. Milton.
 7. To SHAKE hands. This phrase, from the action used among friends at meeting and parting, sometimes signifies to join with, but commonly to take leave of.
 With the slave,
 He ne'er shook hands, nor bid farewell to him,
 'Till he unscam'd him from the nape to th' chops. Shaksp.
 Nor can it be safe to a king to tarry among them who are shaking hands with their allegiance, under pretence of laying faster hold of their religion. King Charles.
 8. To SHAKE off. To rid himself of; to free from; to divest of.
 Be pleas'd that I shake off these names you give me:
 Antonio never yet was thief or pirate. Shaksp.
 If I could shake off but one seven years,
 From these old arms and legs,
 I'd with thee every foot. Shaksp. Coriolanus.
 Says, sacred bard! what could bestow
 Courage on thee, to soar so high?
 Tell me, brave friend! what help'd thee so
 To shake off all mortality? Waller.
 Him I refused to be answered by himself, after I had shaken off the lesser and more barking creatures.
 Can I want courage for so brave a deed?
 I've shook it off: my soul is free from fear. Dryden.
 Here we are free from the formalities of custom and respect: we may shake off the haughty impertinent. Collier.
 How does thy beauty smooth
 The face of war, and make even horror smile!
 At sight of thee my heart shakes off its sorrows. Addison.
 To SHAKE, v. n.
 1. To be agitated with a vibratory motion.
 Darts are counted as stubble: he laugheth at the shaking of a spear. Job xli. 29.
 2. To totter.
 3. To tremble; to be unable to keep the body still.
 Thy fight, which should Make our eyes flow with joy, hearts dance with comforts, Constrains them weep, and shake with fear and sorrow. Shaksp.
 What said the wench, when he rose up again?
 — Trembled and shook; for why, he stamp'd,
 As if the vicar meant to cozen him. Shaksp.
 A shaking through their limbs they find,
 Like leaves saluted by the wind. Waller.
 4. To be in terror; to be deprived of firmness.
 He shrank of succours, and in deep despair,
 Shook at the dismal prospect of the war. Dryd. Zen.
 SHAKE, n. f. [from the verb.]
 1. Concussion.
 If that thy fame with ev'ry toy be pos'd,
 'Tis a thin web, which poisonous fancies make;
 But the great soldier's honour was compos'd
 Of thicker stuff, which could endure a shake:
 Wilford picks friends; civility plays the rest,
 A toy shunn'd cleanly passeth with thee best. Herbert.
 The freeholder is the basis of all other titles: this is the

S H A

- substantial stock, without which they are no more than blasphems that would fall away with every shake of wind. Addison.
 2. Vibratory motion.
 Several of his countrymen probably lived within the shake of the earthquake, and the shadow of the eclipse, which are recorded by this author. Addison.
 3. Motion given and received.
 Our salutations were very hearty on both sides, consisting of many kind shakes of the hand.
 SHA'KER, n. f. [from shake.] The person or thing that shakes.
 Go then, the guilty at thy will chastise.
 He said; the shaker of the earth replies. Pope's Odyssey.
 SHALE, n. f. [Corrupted, I think, for shell.] A hulk; the case of seeds in filiquous plants.
 Behold you poor and harved band,
 And your fair flesh shall fuck away their souls,
 Leaving them but the shales and husks of men. Shaksp.
 SHALL, v. defective. [reel, Sax. is originally low, or low, or low.
 In Chaucer, the faith I shall to God, means the faith I owe to God: thence it became a sign of the future tense. The French use devoir, devoir, devoir, in the same manner, with a kind of future signification; and the Swedes have shall, and the Islanders shall, in the same sense. It has no tenses but shall future, and should imperfect.
 The explanation of shall, which foreigners and provincials confound with will, is not easy; and the difficulty is increased by the poets, who sometimes give to shall an emphatical sense of will: but I shall endeavour, crassa Minerva, to show the meaning of shall in the future tense.
 1. I SHALL love. It will so happen that I must love; I am resolved to love.
 2. SHALL I love? Will it be permitted me to love? Will you permit me to love? Will it happen that I must love?
 3. THOU SHALT love. I command thee to love; it is permitted thee to love: [in poetry or solemn diction] it will happen that thou must love.
 4. SHALT thou love? Will it happen that thou must love?
 Will it be permitted to thee to love?
 5. HE SHALL love. It will happen that he must love; it is commanded him that he love.
 It is a mind, that shall remain a poison where it is.
 — Shall remain!
 Hear you this triton of the minnows? Mark you
 His absolute shall? Shaksp. Coriolanus.
 See Romulus the great:
 This prince a priestess of your blood shall bear,
 And like his sire in arms he shall appear. Dryden's En.
 That he shall receive no benefit from Christ, is the affirmation whereon all his despair is founded; and the one way of removing this dismal apprehension, is to convince him that Christ's death, and the benefits thereof, either do, or, if he perform the condition required of him, shall certainly belong to him. Hammond's Fundamentals.
 6. SHALL he love? Is it permitted him to love? In solemn language, Will it happen that he must love?
 7. The plural persons follow the signification of the singular.
 SHALL'VEEN, n. f. A slight woollen stuff.
 In blue shall'veen shall Hannibal be clad.
 And Scipio trail an Irish purple plaid. Swift.
 SHALL'VEEN, n. f. [chalcupe, French.] A small boat.
 You were resolved, after your arrival into Oronoque, to pass to the mine; and, to that end, you desired to have Sir John Fearn's shall'veen: I do not allow of that course, because ye cannot land so secretly but that some Indians on the river side may discover you, who giving knowledge of your passage to the Spaniards, you may be cut off before you can recover your boat.
 There with your shall'veen stay:
 The game's not lost; I have one card to play. Waller.
 Our hero set
 In a small shall'veen, fortune in his debt;
 So near a hope of crowns and scepters, more Than ever Priam, when he flourish'd, wore. Waller.
 SHALL'VEEN, adj. [This word is probably compounded of shall and even.]
 1. Not deep; having the bottom at no great distance from the surface or edge.
 I had been drowned, but that the shore was shelvy and shallow; a death that I abhor. Shaksp. Merry Wives of Windsor.
 That inundation, though it were shallow, had a long continuance, whereby they of the vale, that were not drowned, perished for want of food. Bacon.
 The like opinion he held of Meotis Palus, that by the floods of Tanais, and earth brought down thereby, it grew observably shallower in his days, and would in process of time become a firm land. Brown's Fugate River.
 I am made a shallow forded stream,
 Seen to the bottom: all my clearness scorn'd,
 And all my faults expos'd. Dryden's All for Love.
 Shallow brooks, that flow'd so clear,
 The bottom did the top appear. Dryden.
 In shallow furrows vint's securely grow. Not

S H A

2. Not intellectually deep; not profound; not very knowing or wise; empty; trifling; futile; silly.
 I'll shew my mind, Shaksp.
 According to my shallow simple skill.
 This is a very shallow monster:
 Afraid of him? A very shallow monster. Shaksp.
 The man 't' moon! A most poor credulous monster. Shaksp.
 The king was neither so shallow nor so ill advertised as not to perceive the intention of the French king, for the investing himself of Britaigne. Bacon's Henry VII.
 Uncertain and unsettled he remains,
 Deep vers'd in books, and shallow in himself. Milton.
 One would no more wonder to see the most shallow nation of Europe the most vain, than to find the most empty fellows in every nation more conceited than the rest. Addison.
 3. Not deep of sound.
 If a virginal were made with a double concave, the one all the length of the virginal, and the other at the end of the strings, as the harp hath, it must make the found perfecter, and not so shallow and jarring. Bacon.
 SHA'LOW, n. f. [from the adjective.] A shelf; a sand; a flat; a shoal; a place where the water is not deep.
 I should not see the sandy hour-glass run,
 But I should think of shallows and of flats;
 And see my wealthy Andrew dock'd in sand,
 Veiling her high top lower than her ribs,
 To kiss her burial. Shaksp. Coriolanus.
 A swift stream is not heard in the channel, but upon shallows of gravel. Bacon's Nat. History.
 Having but newly left those grammatical flats and shallows, where they stuck unreasonably, to learn a few words with lamentable confusion, and now on the sudden transported, to be tost with their unballasted wits inathomless and unquiet depths of controversy, they do grow into hatred of learning. Milt.
 You that do oft have founded
 And fathom'd all his thoughts, that know the deeps
 And shallows of his heart, should need no instruments
 To advance your ends. Denham.
 In arms of the sea, and among islands, there is no great depth, and some places are plain shallows. Burnet.
 He founds and fathoms him, to find
 The shallows of his soul. Dryd. Spanish Fryar.
 The wary Dutch
 Behind their treacherous shallows now withdraw,
 And there lay snares to catch the British host. Dryden.
 Three more fierce Eurus in his angry mood
 Dash'd on the shallows of the moving sand,
 And in mid ocean left them moor'd a-land. Dryd. En.
 Their spawn being lighter than the water, there it would not sink to the bottom, but be buoyed up by it, and carried away to the shallows. Ray on the Creation.
 With the use of diligence, and prudent conduct, he may decline both rocks and shallows. Norris.
 The sea could not be much narrower than it is, without a great loss to the world; and must we now have an ocean of mere flats and shallows, to the utter ruin of navigation? Bentley.
 SHALLOWBRAINED, adj. [shallow and brain.] Foolish; futile; trifling; empty.
 It cannot be matter of just indignation to all good men to see a company of lewd shallowbrained huffs making atheism, and contempt of religion, the sole badge of wit. South.
 SHA'LOWLY, adv. [from shallow.]
 1. With no great depth.
 The load lieth open on the grass, or but shallowly covered. Carew.
 2. Simply; foolishly.
 Most shallowly did you these arms commence,
 Fondly brought here, and foolishly sent hence:
 Strike up our drums, pursue the scatter'd fray. Shaksp.
 SHA'LOWNESS, n. f. [from shallow.]
 1. Want of depth.
 2. Want of thought; want of understanding; futility; illiness; emptiness.
 By it do all things live their measur'd hour:
 We cannot ask the thing which is not there,
 Blaming the shallowness of our request. Herbert.
 I cannot wonder enough at the shallowness and impertinent zeal of the vulgar sort in Druina, who were carried away with such an ignorant devotion for his successes, when it little concerned their religion or security. Hewel.
 SHALM, n. f. [German.] A kind of musical pipe.
 Every captain was commanded to have his soldiers in readinesses to set forward upon the sign given, which was by the found of a shalm or hoboy. Kneller's Hist. of the Turks.
 SHALT, Second person of shall.
 To SHAM, v. n. [shammi, Welsh, to cheat.]
 1. To trick; to cheat; to fool with a fraud; to delude with false pretences. A low word.
 Men tender in point of honour, and yet with little regard to truth, are sooner wrought upon by shame than by conscience, when they find themselves fooled and sham'd into a conviction. L'Estrange.

S H A

2. To obtrude by fraud or folly.
 We must have a care that we do not, for want of laying things and things together, sham fallacies upon the world for current reason. L'Estrange.
 Then all your wits that fear and sham,
 Down from Don Quixote to Tom Tram,
 From whom I jests and puns purloin,
 And sily put them off for mine, Prior.
 Fond to be thought a country wit.
 SHAM, n. f. [from the verb.] Fraud; trick; delusion; false pretence; imposture. A low word.
 No sham to gross but it will pass upon a weak man, that is pragmatcal and inquisitive. L'Estrange.
 It goes a great way when natural curiosity and vulgar prejudice shall be afflicted with the shams of astrological judgments. L'Estrange.
 He that first brought the sham, wheedle, or banter in use, put together, as he thought fit, those ideas he made it stand for. Locke.
 That in the sacred temple needs would try
 Without a fire th' unheated gums to fry,
 Believe who will the solemn sham, not I. Addison.
 SHAM, adj. False; counterfeit; fictitious; pretended.
 Never join the fray,
 Where the sham quarrel interrupts the way. Gay.
 SHAM'ABLES, n. f. [Of uncertain etymology. Scannasia, Ital.]
 1. The place where butchers kill or sell their meat; a butchery.
 Far be the thoughts of this from Henry's heart,
 To make a shamblies of the parliament-house. Shak. H. VI.
 I hope my noble lord esteems me honest.
 — Oh, ay, as summer-flies are in the shamblies,
 That quicken ev'n with blowing. Shaksp. Othello.
 He warn'd a flock of sheep, that were driving to the sham-blies, of their danger; and, upon uttering some sounds, they all fled. Arbutnot.
 2. It is here improperly used.
 When the person is made the jest of the mob, or his back the shamblies of the executioner, there is no more conviction in the one than in the other. Watts.
 SHAMBLING, adj. [See SCAMBLING.] Moving awkwardly and irregularly. A low bad word.
 By that shambling in his walk, it should be my rich banker, Gomez, whom I knew at Barcelona. Dryd. Span. Fryar.
 So when nurse Nokes to act young Ammon tries,
 With shambling legs, long chin, and toothless eyes,
 With dangling hands he strokes th' imperial robe,
 And with a cuckold's air commands the globe. Smith.
 SHAME, n. f. [reem, Saxon; sebaente, Dutch.]
 1. The passion felt when reputation is supposed to be lost; the passion expressed sometimes by blushes.
 Lamenting sorrow did in darkness lye,
 And shame his ugly face did hide from living eye. Fa. Qu.
 Peace, peace, for shame, if not for charity.
 — Urge neither charity nor shame to me:
 Uncharitably with me have you dealt,
 And shamefully my hopes by you are butcher'd:
 My charity is outrage, life my shame;
 And in my shame still lives my sorrow's rage. Shak. R. III.
 Hide, for shame,
 Romans, your grandfires images,
 That blush at their degenerate progeny. Dryden.
 In the schools men are allowed, without shame, to deny the agreement of ideas; or out of the schools, from thence have learned, without shame, to deny the connection of ideas. Locke.
 2. The cause or reason of shame; disgrace; ignominy.
 The more shame for him that he sends it me;
 For I have heard him say a thousand times,
 His Julia gave it him at his departure. Shaksp.
 Aaron had made them naked unto their shame amongst their enemies. Ex. xxxii. 25.
 God deliver the world from such guides, who are the shame of religion. South.
 This jest was first of the other house's making,
 And, five times try'd, has never fail'd of taking;
 For 'twere a shame a poet should be kill'd,
 Under the shelter of so broad a shield. Dryden.
 O shame to manhood! shall one daring boy
 The scheme of all our happiness destroy? Pope's Odyssey.
 3. Reproach.
 A foul shame is upon the thief. Exclus. v. 14.

SHA

Despoil'd
Of all our good, sham'd, naked, miserable, sham'd.
What hurt can there be in all the flanders and disgraces of this world, if they are but the arts and methods of providence to shame us into the glories of the next. South.
Were there but one righteous man in the world, he would hold up his head with confidence and honour; he would shame
the world, and not the world him. South.
He in a loathsome dungeon doom'd to lie,
In bonds retain'd his birthright liberty,
And sham'd oppression, till it set him free. Dryden.
The coward bore the man immortal spite,
Who sham'd him out of madness into flight. Dryden.
Who shames a scribbler, breaks a cobweb through;
He spins the slight self-pleasing thread a-new. Pope.
2. To disgrace.
Certes, sir knight, ye been too much to blame;
Thus for to blot the honour of the dead,
And with foul cowardice his carcass shame. Fairy Queen.
So bent, the more shall shame him his repulse. Milton.
To SHAME. v. n. To be ashamed.
Great shame it is, thing to divine in view,

Ill-fac'd, worse-bodied, shapeless ev'ry where. Shakespeare.
What fools were here,
Disguis'd like Mucowites in shapeless gear? Shakespeare.
Thrice had I lov'd thee,
Before I knew thy face or name;
So in a voice, to in a shapeless flame,
Angels affect us oft, and worshipp'd be. Donne.
Now the victor stretch'd his eager hand,
Where the tall nothing stood, or seem'd to stand;
A shapeless shade, it melted from his sight,
Like forms in clouds, or visions of the night! Pope.
Some objects please our eyes,
Which out of nature's common order rise,
The shapeless rock, or hanging precipice. Pope.

SHA

An overgrown estate falling into the hands of one that has many children, it is broken into so many portions as render the sharers rich enough.

You must have known it.
—Indeed I did, then favour'd by the king,
And by that means a sharer in the secret.
If, by taking on himself human nature at large, he hath a compassionate and tender sense of the infirmities of mankind in general, he must needs, in a peculiar manner, feel and commiserate the infirmities of the poor, in which he himself was so eminent a sharer.

I suffer many things as an author militant, whereof in your days of probation you have been a sharer.
SHARK. n. f. [canis charcharias, Latin.]

1. A voracious sea-fish.
His jaws horridly arm'd with threefold fate,
The direful shark.
2. A greedy artful fellow; one who fills his pockets by fly tricks.
David's messengers are sent back to him, like so many sharks and rannagates, only for endeavouring to compliment an ill-nature out of itself, and seeking that by petition which they might have commanded by their sword.

Trick; fraud; petty rapine.
Wretches who live upon the shark, and other mens fins, the common poisoners of youth, equally desperate in their fortunes and their manners, and getting their very bread by the damnation of souls.

To SHARK. v. a. To pick up hastily or slyly.
Of unimproved mettle, hot and full,
Hath in the skirts of Norway, here and there,
Shark'd up a list of landless resolute.

Now as fine in his apparel as if he would make me in love with a cloak, and verse for verse with the sharpest witted lover in Arcadia.

If we had nought but sense, each living wight,
Which we call brute, would be more sharp than we.
Sharp to the world, but thoughtless of renown,
They plot not on the stage, but on the town.

There is nothing makes men sharper, and sets their hands and wits more at work, than want.
Many other things belong to the material world, wherein the sharpest philosophers have never yet arrived at clear and distinct ideas.

Quick, as of light or hearing.
As the sharpest eye discerneth nought,
Except the sun-beams in the air do shine;
So the best soul, with her reflecting thought,
Sees not herself, without some light divine.

SHA

To sharp eye'd reason this would seem untrue;
But reason I through love's false opticks view.
5. Sour without astringency; four but not austere; acid.

So we, if children young diseased we find,
Anoint with sweets the vessel's foremost parts,
To make them taste the potions sharp we give;
They drink deceiv'd, and so deceiv'd they live.

Sharp tasted citrons Median climes produce;
Bitter the rind, but generous is the juice.
Different simple ideas are sometimes expressed by the same word, as sweet and sharp are applied to the objects of hearing and tasting.

6. Shrill; piercing the ear with a quick noise; not flat.
In whistling you contract the mouth, and, to make it more sharp, men use their finger.
Let one whistle at the one end of a trunk, and hold your ear at the other, and the sound strikes so sharp as you can scarce endure it.

For the various modulation of the voice, the upper end of the windpipe is endued with several cartilages to contract or dilate it, as we would have our voice flat or sharp.
7. Severe; harsh; biting; sarcastick.

If he should intend his voyage towards my wife, I would turn her loose to him; and what he gets more of her than sharp words, let it lie on my head.

How often may we meet with those who are one while courteous, but within a small time after are so supercilious sharp, troublesome, fierce and exceptionous, that they are not only short of the true character of friendship, but become the very foes and burdens of society!

Cease contention: be thy words severe,
Sharp as he merits; but the sword forbear.

SHARPER. n. f. [from sharp.] A tricking fellow; a petty thief; a rascal.

Sharper, as pikes, prey upon their own kind.
He should retrench what he lost to sharpeners, and spent upon puppet-plays, to apply it to that use.
1. Only wear it in a land of Hector's,
Thieves, supercargo's, sharpeners, and directors.

2. With keenness; with good edge or point.
3. Severely; rigorously; roughly.
They are more sharply to be chastised and reformed than the rude Irish, which being very wild at the first, are now become more civil.

3. Keenly; acutely; vigorously.
The mind and memory are more sharply exercised in comprehending another man's things than our own.
4. Afflictively; painfully.

At the arrival of the English ambassadors the soldiers were sharply assailed with wants.
5. With quickness.
You contract your eye when you would see sharply; and erect your ear when you would hear attentively.

6. Judiciously; acutely; wittily.
SHARPNESS. n. f. [from sharp.]
1. Keenness of edge or point.
Palladius neither suffering us nor himself to take in hand the party till the afternoon; when we were to fight in troops, not differing otherwise from earnest, but that the sharpness of the weapons was taken away.

A second glance came gliding like the first;
And he who saw the sharpness of the dart,
Without defence receiv'd it in his heart.
2. Not obtuse.

Force consisteth in the roundings and raifings of the work, according as the limbs do more or less require it; so as the beholder shall spy no sharpness in the bordering lines.
3. Sourness without astringency.

There is a sharpness in vinegar, and there is a sharpness in pain, in sorrows, and in reproach; there is a sharp eye, a sharp wit, and a sharp sword: but there is not one of these severe sharpnesses the same as another of them; and a sharp east wind is different from them all.

SHA

Provoking sweat extremely, and taking away all sharpness from whatever you put in, must be of good effect in the cure of the gout.

4. Severity of language; satirical sarcasm.
There's gold for thee,
Thou must not take my former sharpness ill,
I will employ thee back again.

Some did all folly with just sharpness blame,
While others laugh'd and scorn'd them into shame;
But, of these two, the last succeeded best,
As men aim rightest when they shoot in jest.

This is a subject of which it is hard to speak without satirical sharpness and particular reflections on many churches of christians.
The sharpness of his satire, next to himself, falls most heavily on his friends.

5. Painfulness; afflictiveness.
At this time
We sweat and bleed; the friend hath lost his friend;
And the best quarrels in the heat are curst
By those that feel their sharpness.

Not a single death only that then attended this profession; but the terror and sharpness of it was redoubled in the manner and circumstances.

6. Intellectual acuteness; ingenuity; wit.
Till Arianism had made it a matter of great sharpness, and subtilty of wit to be a sound believing christian, men were not curious what syllables or particles of speech they used.

The daring of the soul proceeds from thence,
Sharpness of wit and active diligence.
The son returned with strength of constitution, sharpness of understanding, and skill in languages.

7. Quickness of senses.
If the understanding or faculty of the soul be like unto bodily sight, not of equal sharpness in all; what can be more convenient than that, even as the dark-sighted man is directed by the clear about things visible, so likewise in matters of deeper discourse the wife in heart doth shew the simple where his way lieth.

SHARP-SET. [sharp and set.] Eager; vehemently desirous.
Basilus forced her to stay, tho' with much ado, she being sharp-set upon the fulfilling of a shrewd office, in overlooking Philoclea.

An eagle sharp-set, looking about her for her prey, spy'd a leveret.
Our senses are sharp-set on pleasures.
A comedy of Johnson's, not Ben, held seven nights; for the town is sharp-set on new plays.

SHARP-VISAGED. adj. [sharp and visaged.] Having a sharp countenance.
The Wells that inhabit the mountains are commonly sharp-visaged.

SHARP-SIGHTED. adj. [sharp and sight.] Having quick sight.
If she were the body's quality,
Then would she be with it sick, maim'd, and blind;
But we perceive, where these privations be,
An healthy, perfect, and sharp-sighted mind.

I am not so sharp-sighted as those who have discerned this rebellion contriving from the death of Q. Elizabeth.
Your majesty's clear and sharp-sighted judgment has as good a title to give law in matters of this nature, as in any other.

Nothing so fierce but love will soften, nothing so sharp-sighted in other matters but it throws a mist before the eyes on't.
To SHATTER. v. a. [schuteren, Dutch.]

1. To break at once into many pieces; to break so as to scatter the parts.
He rais'd a sigh so piteous and profound,
That it did seem to shatter all his bulk,
And rend his being.

Ye myrtles brown, with ivy never fear,
I come to pluck your berries harsh and crude,
And with forc'd fingers rude
Shatter your leaves before the mellowing year.

They escape dissolution, because they can scarce ever meet with an agent minute, and swiftly enough moved, to shatter or dislocate the combined parts.
A monarchy was shattered to pieces, and divided amongst revolted subjects, into a multitude of little governments.

Black from the stroke above, the smouldring pine Stands as a shatter'd trunk.
2. To dissipate; to make incapable of close and continued attention.

A man of a loose, volatile and shattered humour, thinks only by fits and starts.
To SHATTER. v. n. To be broken, or to fall, by any force applied, into fragments.

Of bodies, some are fragil; and some are tough and not fragil; and in the breaking, some fragil bodies break but where the force is; some shatter and fly in many places.

SHATTER. n. f. [from the verb.] One part of many into which any thing is broken at once.

TO SHAVE. v. a. preterit shaved, part. shaved or shaven. [reapen, Saxon; schaven, Dutch.]

1. To pare off with a razor.

He that is to be cleansed shall shave off all his hair. Levit.
 Zelim was the first of the Ottomans that did shave his beard: a bashaw ask'd why he alter'd the custom of his predecessors? He answered, because you bashaws may not lead me by the beard, as you did them. Bacon.

Dost thou not know this shaven pate? Truly it is a great man's head. Knolles's Hist. of the Turks.

I cauled the hair of his head to be shaved off. Wylman.

2. To pare close to the surface.

Sweet bird!

Three chauntrels, oft the woods among,

I woo'd to hear the evening song:

And missing thee, I walk unseen

On the dry smooth shaven green. Milt.

The bending scythe

Shaves all the surface of the waving green. Gay.

3. To skim by passing near, or slightly touching.

He shaves with level wing the deep; then soars

Up to the fiery concave tow'ring high. Milt.

4. To cut in thin slices.

Make some medley of earth, with some other plants bruised or shaven in leaf or root. Bacon.

5. To strip; to oppress by extortion; to pillage.

SHAVELING. n. f. [from shave.] A man shaved; a friar, or religious. Used in contempt.

Of elves, there be no such things; only by bald friars and knavish shavelings so feigned. Spenser.

SHAVEN. n. f. [from shave.]

1. A man that practices the art of shaving.

2. A man closely attentive to his own interest.

My lord

Was now dispos'd to crack a jest,

And bid friend Lewis go in quest;

This Lewis is a cunning shaver. Swift.

3. A robber; a plunderer.

They fell all into the hands of the cruel mountain people, living for the most part by theft, and waiting for wrecks, as hawks for their prey: by these shavers the Turks were strip'd of all they had. Knolles.

SHAVING. n. f. [from shave.] Any thin slice pared off from any body.

Take lignum aloes in gross shavings, steep them in sack, changed twice, till the bitterness be drawn forth; then take the shavings forth and dry them in the shade, and beat them to powder. Bacon.

By electrick bodies I do not conceive only such as take up shavings, straws, and light bodies, but such as attract all bodies palpable whatsoever. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

The shavings are good for the fining of wine. Mart.

SHAW. n. f. [reua, Saxon; shaw, Dutch; shuga, Hindick.]

A thicket; a small wood. A tuft of trees near Lichfield is called Gentle shaw. Bailey.

net.

With trumpets also and shawms. Psalms Common Prayer.

SHE. pronoun. In oblique cases her. [si, Gothick; reo, Sax. she, old English.]

1. The female pronoun demonstrative: the woman; the woman before mentioned.

She, of whom the ancients seem'd to prophesy,

When they call'd virtues by the name of she;

She, in whom virtue was so much refin'd,

That for allay unto pure mind

She took the weaker sex. Dante.

This once disclos'd,

The ladies did change favours, and then we Following the signs, woo'd but the sign of she. Shaksp.

What, at any time, have you heard her say?

The most upright of mortal men was he;

The most sincere, and holy woman, she. Dryden.

2. It is sometimes used for a woman absolutely, with some degree of contempt.

The she of Italy shall not betray mine interest, and his honour. Shaksp.'s Cymbeline.

Lady, you are the cruellest she alive,

If you will lead these graces to the grave,

and leave the world no copy. Shaksp.'s Twelfth Night.

SHE

I was wont

To load my she with knacks, I wou'd have ranack'd

the pedlar's silken treasury, and have pour'd it to her acceptance. Shaksp.'s Winter's Tale.

3. The female; not the male.

I would outface the sternest eyes that look,

Pluck the young sucking cubs from the she bear

'To win thee, lady. Shaksp.'s Merchant of Venice.

Let us do it with no shew of fear;

No, with no more, than if we heard that England

Were busied with a Whitson morris-dance;

For my good liege, she is so idly king'd,

That fear attends her not. Shaksp.'s Hen. V.

The nightingale, if she would sing by day,

When every goose is cackling, wou'd be thought

No better a musician than the wren. Shaksp.'s

He lions are hirsute, and have great manes, the she are smooth like cats. Bacon.

Stand it in Judah's chronicles confest,

That David's son, by impious passion mov'd,

Smote a she-slave, and murder'd what he lov'd. Prior.

SHEAF. n. f. sheaves plural. [reap, Saxon; sheaf, Dutch.]

1. A bundle of stalks of corn bound together, that the ears may dry.

These be the sheaves that honour's harvest bears,

The seed thy valiant acts, the world the field. Fairfax.

He beheld a field,

Part arable and tith; whereon were sheaves

New-reap'd: the other part sheep-walks and folds. Milt.

The reaper fills his greedy hands,

And binds the golden sheaves in brittle bands. Dryden.

I pitch'd the sheaves (oh could I do so now)

Which lie in rows pil'd. Gay's Foptricks.

2. Any bundle or collection held together.

She vanish'd;

The sheaf of arrows shook and rattled in the case. Dryden.

In the knowledge of bodies, we must glean what we can;

since we cannot, from a discovery of their real essences, grasp at a time whole sheaves; and in bundles comprehend the nature of whole species. Locke.

TO SHEAL. v. a. To shell. See SHALE.

Thou art a shealed peacock. Shaksp.'s K. Lear.

TO SHEAR. preter. shores, or sheared; part. pass. shorn. [reapen, Saxon.]

1. To clip or cut by interception between two blades moving on a rivet.

So many days, my ewes have been with young;

So many weeks, e're the poor fools will yean;

So many months, e're I shall shear the fleece. Shaksp.

I am shepherd to another man,

And do not shear the fleeces that I graze. Shaksp.

Laban went to shear his sheep. Gen. xxxi. 19.

When wool is new shorn, they set pails of water by in the same room to increase its weight. Bacon's Nat. Hist.

To lay my head and hollow pledge

Of all my strength, in the lascivious lap

Of a deceitful concubine, who shores me, Milton.

Like a tame weather, all my precious fleece.

The same ill taste of sense wou'd serve to join

Dog foxes in the yolk, and shear the swine. Dryden.

May'st thou henceforth twelvety sleep,

Shear, swains, oh shear your softest sheep

To swell his couch. Gay.

O'er the congenial dust injoin'd to shear

The graceful curl, and drop the tender tear. Pope.

2. To cut.

The sharp and toothed edge of the nether chap strikes into a canal cut into the bone of the upper; and the toothed protuberance of the upper into a canal in the nether: by which means he easily shears the grafs whereon he feeds. Grew.

SHEAR. } n. f. [from the verb. It is seldom used in the SHEARS. } singular, but is found once in Dryden.]

1. An instrument to cut, consisting of two blades moving on a pin, between which the thing cut is intercepted. Shears are large, and scissors a smaller instrument of the same kind.

Alas, thought Philocteta to herself, your shears come too late to clip the bird's wings that already is flown away. Sidney.

Why do you bend such solemn brows on me?

Think you I bear the shears of destiny?

Have I commandment on the pulse of life? Shaksp.'s

The fates prepar'd their sharpen'd shears. Dryden.

When the fleece is shorn,

Then their defenceless limbs the brambles tear;

Short of their wool, and naked from the shears. Dryden.

That people live and die, I knew,

An hour ago, as well as you;

And if fate spins us longer years,

Or is in haste to take the shears,

I know, we must both fortunes try,

And bear our evils, wet or dry. Prior.

How happy should we be if we had the privilege of employing the shears for want of a mint, upon foreign gold, by clipping it into half crowns. Swift.

SHE

Fate urg'd the sheers and cut the sylph in twain,

But airy subdance soon unites again. Pope.

Beneath the sheers they felt no lasting smart,

They lost but fleeces, while I lost a heart. Gay.

2. The denomination of the age of sheep.

When sheep is one shear, they will have two broad teeth before; when two shear, four; when three, six; when four, eight; and after that, their mouths break. Mortimer.

3. Any thing in the form of the blades of sheers.

Wings, in sheers.

Two sharp-wing'd sheers

Deck'd with divers plumes, like painted jays,

Were fix'd at his back to cut his airy ways. Spenser.

SHEARD. n. f. [reapen, Sax.] A fragment. It is now commonly written shard, and applied only to fragments of earthen ware.

In the busting of it, not a shard to take fire from the hearth, or to take water out of the pit. Isa. xxx. 14.

SHEARER. n. f. [from shear.] One that clips with shears; particularly one that fleeces sheep.

Of other care they little reck'ning make,

Than how to scramble at the shearers seat,

And shove away the worthy bidden guest. Milton.

Was he to be led as a lamb to the slaughter, patient and reign'd as a sheep before her shearers? Rogers.

SHEARMAN. n. f. [shear and man.] He that shears.

Thy father was a plaiterier,

And thou thyself a shear man. Shaksp.'s

the scabbard of a weapon.

The dead knight's sword out of his sheath he drew,

With which he cut a lock off all their hair. Fa. Queen.

Dath not each look a shaft of lightning feel,

Which spares the body's sheath, yet melts the steel? Cleau.

Swords, by the lightning's subtle force diffill'd,

And the cold sheaths with running metal fill'd. Addison.

TO SHEATH. } v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To inclose in a sheath or scabbard; to inclose in any case.

This drawn but now against my sovereign's breast,

Before 'tis sheath'd, shall give him peace and rest. Waller.

Those active parts of a body are of differing natures when sheath'd up, or wedged in amongst others in the texture of a concrete; and when extricated from these impediments. Boyle.

In his hair one hand he wreaths,

His sword, the other, in his bosom sheaths. Denham.

Is this her hate to him, his love to me!

'Tis in my breast the sheaths her dagger now. Dryden.

The left foot naked, when they march to fight,

But in a bull's raw hide they sheath the right. Dryden.

The leopard, and all of this kind as goes, keeps the claws of his forefeet turned up from the ground, and sheaths in the skin of his toes, whereby he preserves them sharp for rapine, extending them only when he leaps at the prey. Grew.

Other substances opposite to acrimony are called demulcent or mild; because they blunt or sheath those sharp fal-

as peels, and beans. Arbuthnot.

2. To fit with a sheath.

There was no ink to colour Peter's hat,

Walter's dagger was not come from sheathing. Shaksp.

of public trusts, as well as of private.
SHEEPBITER. n. f. [sheep and bit.] A little inclosure for sheep.
Bedlam beggars, with roaring voices,
From low farms, sheepbits and mills
Inforce their charity.
Up to a hill anon his steps he rear'd,
From whose high top to ken the prospect round,
If cottage were in view, sheepbit or herd;
But cottage, herd, or sheepbit none he saw.
SHEEPBITER. n. f. [sheep and bit.] The place where sheep are inclosed.
The bear, the lion, terrors of the plain,
The sheepfold scatter'd and the shepherd slain.
SHEEPHOOK. n. f. [sheep and hook.] A hook fastened to a pole by which shepherds lay hold on the legs of their sheep.
The one carried a crozier of balm-wood, the other a pastoral staff of cedar like a sheep-hook.
If you dare think of deserting our charms,
Away with your sheephook, and take to your arms.
SHEEPISH. adj. [from sheep.] Bashful; over-modest; timor-ously and meanly diffident.
Wanting change of company, he will, when he comes abroad, be a sheepish or conceited creature.
SHEEPISHNESS. n. f. [from sheepish.] Bashfulness; mean and timorous diffidence.
Thy gentry bleats, as if thy native cloth
Transfus'd a sheepishness into thy story.
SHEEPISHNESS and ignorance of the world, are not consequences of being bred at home.

Part arable and tith; whereon were sheaves
New reap'd; the other part sheepwalks and folds.
SHEER. adj. [sheer, Saxon;] Pure; clear; unmingled.
If the day, I am not fourteen pence on the score for sheer ale, score me up for the lying it rogue in Christendom.
Sheer argument is not the talent of the man; little wrested sentences are the bladders which bear him up, and he sinks downright, when he once pretends to swim without them.
SHEER. adv. [from the adjective.] Clean; quick; at once.
Thrown by angry Jove
Sheer o'er the crystal balements; from morn
To noon he fell, from noon to dewy eve,
A summer's day; and with the setting sun,
Drop'd from the zenith, like a falling star,
On Lemnos.
The sword of Satan, with steep force to smite Descending, and in half cut sheer.
Due entrance he disdain'd, and in contempt
At one slight bound high overleap'd all bound Of hill or highest wall, and sheer within Lights on his feet.

Receives her lord.
3. Ecoutes, French; echoten, Dutch.] In a ship are ropes bent to the clews of the sails, which serve in all the lower fails to hale or round off the clew of the sail; but in topfails they draw the sail close to the yard arms. Sheet—Dryden seems to understand it otherwise.
The little word behind the back, and undoing whisper, like pulling off a sheet-rope at sea, slackens the sail.
Fierce Boreas drove against his flying sails,
And rent the sheets.

Our transported souls shall congratulate each other their having now fully escap'd the numerous rocks, *sheet*s, and quick-sands.
Near the *sheet*s of Circe's shores they run,
A dang'rous coast.
He call'd his money in;
But the prevailing love of pelf
Soon split him on the former sheet,
He put it out again.
3. The plural is analogically *sheet*s; Dryden has *sheet*s, probably by negligence.
He seiz'd the helm, his fellows cheer'd,
Turn'd short upon the *sheet*s and madly steer'd.
SHEET. adj. [from sheet.]
1. Full of hidden rocks or banks; full of dangerous shallows.
Glides by the fycen's cliffs a sheet coast,
Long infamous for ships and sailors lost,
And white with bones.
2. I know not well the meaning in this passage, perhaps rocky.
The tillable fields are in some places so tough, that the plough will scarcely cut them; and in some to sheet that the corn hath much ado to fasten its root.
SHEET. n. f. [sheet, Saxon;] schale, schelle, Dutch.
1. The hard covering of any thing; the external crust.
The sun is as the fire, and the exterior earth is as the sheet of the colipile, and the abyss as the water within it; now when the heat of the sun had pierc'd thro' the sheet and reach'd the waters, it rarely'd them.
Whatever we fetch from under ground is only what is lodged in the sheet of the earth.
2. The covering of a testaceous or crustaceous animal.
Her women wear
The spoils of nations in an ear;
Chang'd for the treasure of a sheet,
And in their loose attires do swell.

3. The covering of the seeds of filiquous plants.
Some fruits are contained within a hard shell, being the seeds of the plants.
4. The covering of kernels.
Chang'd loves are but chang'd sorts of meat;
And when he hath the kernel eat,
Who doth not throw away the shell?
5. The covering of an egg.
I think him as a serpent's egg,
Which, hatch'd, would, as his kind, grow mischievous,
And kill him in the shell.
6. The outer part of a house.
The marquis of Medina Sidonia made the shell of a house, that would have been a very noble building, had he brought it to perfection.
7. It is used for a musical instrument in poetry, from testudo, Latin; the first lyre being said to have been made by straining strings over the shell of a tortoise.
Let's than a god they thought there could not dwell
Within the hollow of that shell,
That spoke so sweetly.
8. The superficial part.
So devout are the Romanists about this outward shell of religion, that if an altar be moved, or a stone of it broken, it ought to be reconsecrated.
To SHELL. v. a. [from the noun.] To take out of the shell; to strip of the shell.
To SHELL. v. n.
1. To fall off as broken shells.

in with a pond.
SHELL. n. f. [shell and fish.] Fifth invested with a hard covering, either testaceous, as oysters, or crustaceous, as lobsters.
The shells, being found, were so like those they saw upon their shores, that they never questioned but that they were the exuvie of *shell*fish, and once belonged to the sea.
SHELLY. adj. [from shell.]
1. Abounding with shells.
The ocean rolling, and the shelly shore,
Beautiful objects, shall delight no more.
2. Consisting of shells.
The conceit of Anaximander was, that the first men and all animals were bred in some warm moisture, inclosed in crustaceous skins, as lobsters; and so continued 'till their shelly prisons, growing dry and breaking, made way for them.
SHELLER. n. f. [Of this word the etymology is unknown:
Saxons deduce it from shell, Danish from scyll, a shield,
Saxon.]
1. A cover from any external injury or violence.
We hear this fearful tempest sing,
Yet seek no shelter to avoid the storm.
They with'd the mountains now might be again
Thrown on them, as a shelter from his ire.
Heroes of old, when wounded, shelter sought;
But he who meets all dangers with disdain, Ev'n in their face his ship to anchor brought,
And fledge high flood propt upon the main,
They may learn experience, and avoid a cave as the worst shelter from rain, when they have a lover in company.
The healing plant shall aid,
From storms a shelter, and from heat a shade.
2. A protector; a defender; one that gives security.
Thou hast been a shelter for me, and a strong tower from the enemy.
3. The state of being covered; protection; security.
Low at his foot a spacious plain is plac'd,
Between the mountain and the stream embrac'd;
Which shade and shelter from the hill derives,
While the kind river wealth and beauty gives.
To SHELTER. v. a. [from the noun.]
1. To cover from external violence.
We bethought the deep to shelter us.
Those ruins *shelter*d once his sacred head,
When he from Worcester's fatal battle fled,
Watch'd by the genius of this royal place.

Where piercing winds blow sharp.
SHELTING. adj. [from shell.] Sloping; inclining; having de-clivity.
Her chamber is aloft, far from the ground;
And built to shelving, that one cannot climb it,
Without apparent hazard of his life.
Amidst the brake a hollow den was found,
With rocks and shelving arches vaulted round.
SHELTY. adj. [from shell.] Shallow; rocky; full of banks.
I had been drown'd, but that the shore was shelty and shallow.
To SHEUD. v. a. preter. and part. pass. shent. [schewen, Saxon; shenden, Dutch.]
1. To ruin; to spoil; to mischief.
Provide for thy wife, or else look to be shent.
Good milchcow for Winter, another for Lent.
Shepherds, should it not shent
Your roundels fresh, to hear a doleful yerte
Of Rosalind, that Colin made?
Such a dream I had of dire portent,
That much I fear my body will be shent;
It bodes I shall have wars.
2. To disgrace; to degrade; to blame.
Debateful strife, and cruel enmity,
The famous name of knighthood foully shend.
Sore bruited with the fall, he flow uprois,
And all enraged thus, thus him loudly shent, Dilect knight, whose coward courage chose
To wreak itself on beast.
My tongue and soul in this be hypocrites,
How in my words soever she be shent,
To give them seals never my soul consent.
3. To overpower; to crush; to surpass.
She pass'd the rest as Cynthia doth shend
The lesser stars.
4. It is, though used by Dryden, wholly obsolete.

And do not cheer the fleeces that I graze.
A shepherd next
More meek came with the firstlings of his flock.
2. A swain; a rural lover.
If that the world and love were young,
And truth in ev'ry shepherd's tongue,
These pretty pleasures might me move
To live with thee, and be thy love.
3. One who tends the congregation; a pastor.
Lead up all those who heard thee, and believ'd;
Midst thy own flock, great shepherd, be receiv'd,
And glad all heav'n with millions thou hast sav'd.
SHEPHERDESS. n. f. [from shepherd.] A woman that tends sheep; a rural lass.
She put herself into the garb of a shepherdess, and in that disguise lived many years; but discovering herself a little before her death, did profess herself the happiest person alive, not for her condition, but in enjoying him the first loved; and that she would rather, ten thousand times, live a shepherdess in contentment and satisfaction.
These your unusual weeds, to each part of you Do give a life: no shepherdess, but Flora Peering in April's front.
She like some shepherdess did shew,
Who sat to bathe her by a river's side.
His doric dialect has an incomparable sweetness in its clownishness, like a fair shepherdess in her country ruffet.
SHEPHERDS NEEDLE. n. f. [scandix, Lat.] Venus comb. An herb.
SHEPHERDS PURSE, or Pouch. n. f. [bursa pastoris, Latin.] A High on a pile th' unconquer'd chief is plac'd. Dryden.

TO SHIELD. v. a. [from the noun.]
 1. To cover with a ſhield.
 2. To defend; to protect; to ſecure.

Were't my ſineſs to let theſe hands obey my boiling blood,
 They're apt enough to diſlocate and tear
 Thy fleſh and bones: howe'er
 A woman's ſhape doth ſhield thee. Shakeſp. King Lear.

Shouts of applauſe ran ringing through the field,
 To ſee the ſon the vanquiſh'd father ſhield. Dryden.

Hear one that comes to ſhield his injur'd honour,
 And guard his life with hazard of her own. Smith.

3. To keep off; to defend againſt.
 Out of their cold caves and frozen habitations, into the ſweet ſoil of Europe, they brought with them their uſual weeds, fit to ſhield the cold, to which they had been inured. Spenser.

My lord, I muſt intreat the time alone.
 —God ſhield I ſhould diſturb devotion. Shakeſp.

TO SHIELD. v. n. [Of this word the original is obſcure: ſhipta, Runick, is to change.]

1. To change place.
 Vegetables being fixed to the ſame place, and ſo not able to ſhift and ſeek out after proper matter for their increment, it was neceſſary that it ſhould be brought to them. Woodward.

2. To change; to give place to other things.
 If the ideas of our minds conſtantly change and ſhift, in a continual ſucceſſion, it would be impoſſible for a man to think long of any one thing. Locke.

For the poor ſhifſels irrational, it is a prodigious act of the great Creator's indulgence, that they are all ready furniſhed with ſuch cloathing. Derham's Phyſico-Theology.

SHILLING. n. f. [ſcylling, Sax. and Erſe; ſchelling, Dut.] A coin of various value in different times. It is now twelve pence.

Five of theſe pence made their ſhilling, which they called ſcilling, probably from ſcillingus, which the Romans uſed for the fourth part of an ounce; and forty-eight of theſe ſcillings made their pound, and four hundred of theſe pounds were a legacy for a king's daughter, as appeareth by the laſt will of King Alfred. C Camden's Remains.

The very ſame ſhilling may at one time pay twenty men in twenty days, and at another reſt in the ſame hands one hundred days. Locke.

SHILL-I-SHALL-I. A corrupt reduplication of ſhall I? The queſtion of a man heſitating. To ſtand ſhill-I-ſhall-I, is to continue heſitating and procratiſtating.

I am ſomewhat dainty in making a reſolution, becauſe when I make it, I keep it: I don't ſtand ſhill-I-ſhall-I then; if I ſay't, I'll do it. Conſtant's Way of the World.

SHIN. n. f. [from ſhyn.] Not familiarly; not frankly.
SHIN. n. f. [ſcina, Saxon; ſchinn, German.] The forepart of the leg.

I bruſt my ſhin the other day with playing at ſword and dagger. Shakeſp. Merry Wives of Windsor.

The ſhin bone, from the knee to the iſtap, is made by thadowing one half of the leg with a ſingle ſhadow. Peaſham.

His leg, then broke,
 Had got a deputy of oak;
 For when a ſhin in fight is cropt,
 The knee with one of timber's propt. Hudibras.

As when to an houſe we come,
 To know if any one's at home,
 We knock; ſo one muſt kick your ſhin,
 Ere he can find your ſoul's within. Anonymous.

I 'th' shipman's card. Shaksp. Macbeth.

Hiram sent in the navy shipmen that had knowledge of the sea. 1 Kings ix. 27.

SHIPMASTER. n. f. Master of the ship.
The shipmaster came to him, and said unto him, what meanest thou, O sleeper! arise, call upon thy God. Jon. i. 6.

SHIPPING. n. f. [from ship.]
1. Vessels of navigation.
Before Caesar's invasion of this land, the Britons had not any shipping at all, other than their boats of twigs covered with hides. Raleigh.

The numbers and courage of our men, with the strength of our shipping, have for many ages past made us a match for the greatest of our neighbours at land, and an overmatch for the strongest at sea. Temple.

Fishes first to shipping did impart;
Their tail the rudder, and their head the prow. Dryden.

2. Passage in a ship.
They took shipping and came to Capernaum, seeking for Jesus. Jo. vi. 24.

SHIPWRECK. n. f. [ship and wreck.]
1. The destruction of ships by rocks or shelves.
Bold were the men, which on the ocean first Spread their new sails, when shipwreck was the worst. Waller.
We are not to quarrel with the water for inundations and shipwrecks. L'Estrange.

This sea war cost the Carthaginians five hundred quinquiremes, and the Romans seven hundred, including their ship- wrecks. Arbutnot.

2. The parts of a shattered ship.
They might have it in their own country, and that by gathering up the shipwrecks of the Athenian and Roman theatres. Dryden.

3. Destruction; miscarriage.
Holding faith and a good conscience, which some having put away, concerning faith, have made shipwreck. 1 Tim. i.

To SHIPWRECK. v. a. [from the noun.]
1. To destroy by dashing on rocks or shallows.
Whence the sun 'gins his reflection,
Shipwrecking storms and direful thunders break. Shaksp.

2. To make to suffer the dangers of a wreck.
Thou that can'st still the raging of the seas,
Chain up the winds, and bid the tempests cease,
Redeem my shipwreck'd soul from raging gulls
Of cruel passion and deceitful lusts. Prior.

A square piece of marble shews itself to have been a little pagan monument of two persons who were shipwrecked. Addis.

3. To throw by loss of the vessel.
Shipwreck'd upon a kingdom, where no pity,
No friends, no hope! no kindred weep for me. Shaksp.

SHIPWRIGHT. n. f. [ship and wright.] A builder of ships.
Why such imprefs of shipwrights, whose fore talk
Does not divide the Sunday from the week. Shaksp.

A miserable frame it were for our shipwrights, if they did not exceed all others in the setting up of our royal ships. Ral.

Vast numbers of ships in our harbours, and shipwrights in our sea-port towns. Swift.

The Roman fleet, although built by shipwrights, and conducted by pilots, both without experience, defeated that of the Carthaginians. Arbutnot.

As when a shipwright stands his workmen o'er,
Who ply the wimble some huge beam to bore,
Urg'd on all hands it nimbly spins about,
The grain deep piercing, 'till it scoops it out. Pope.

SHIRE. n. f. [from, from scire, to divide, Sax. scyre, eric.]

SHI

A division of the kingdom; a county; so much of the kingdom as is under one sheriff.

His blazing eyes, like two bright shining shields,
Did burn with wrath, and sparkled living fire;
As two broad beacons, set in open fields,
Send forth their flames far off to every fire. Fa. Quen.

The noble youths from distant shires resort. Prior.

SHIRT. n. f. [Shert, Danish; reyns, reyns, Saxon.] The under linen garment of a man.
Shift a shirt: the violence of action hath made you reek as a sacrifice. Shaksp. Cymbeline.

I take but two shirts out with me, and I mean not to sweat extraordinarily. Shaksp. Henry IV.

When we lay next us what we hold most dear,
Like Hercules, evenom'd shirts we wear,
And cleaving mischiefs. Dryden.

Several persons in December had nothing over their shoulders but their shirts. Addis. on Italy.

To SHIRT. v. a. [from the noun] To cover; to clothe as in a shirt.

Ah! for so many souls, as but this morn
Were cloth'd with flesh, and warm'd with vital blood,
But naked now, or shirted but with air. Dryden.

SHIRTLESS. adj. [from shirt.] Wanting a shirt.
Linsey-woolsey brothers,
Grave mimmers! sleeveless some, and shirtless others. Pope.

SHITTAN. n. f. A fort of precious wood, of which Adisu SHITTIM. made the greatest part of the tables, altars, and planks belonging to the tabernacle. The wood is hard, tough, smooth, without knots, and extremely beautiful. It grows in Arabia. Calmat.

I will plant in the wilderness the shittah-tree. Is. xli. 19.

Bring me an offering of badgers skins and shittim-wood. Ex.

SHUTTLECOCK. n. f. [Commonly and perhaps as properly shut- tlecock.] Of shuttle or shuttle the etymology is doubtful: Shit- ner derives it from shutten, German, to shake; or reccan, Saxon, to throw. He thinks it is called a cock from its feathers. Perhaps it is properly shuttlecock, a cork driven to and fro, as the instrument in weaving, and loosened by frequent and rapid utterance from cock to cock. A cork stuck with feathers, and driven by players from one to another with bat-tledores.

You need not discharge a cannon to break the chain of his thoughts: the pat of a shuttlecock, or the creaking of a jack, will do his business. Cullen.

SHIVE. n. f. [shyves, Dutch.]
1. A slice of bread.
Easy it is
Of a cut loaf to steal a shive. Shaksp. Titus Andronicus.

2. A thick splinter, or lamina cut off from the main substance.
Shavings made by the plane are in some things differing from those shives, or thin and flexible pieces of wood, that are obtained by borers. Bp. de

To SHIVER. v. n. [shawren, German.] To quake; to tremble; to shudder, as with cold or fear.
Any very harsh noise will set the teeth on edge, and make all the body shiver. Bacon.

What religious palsy's this,
Which makes the boughs divert their bliss?
And that they might her footsteps strow,
Drop their leaves with shivering awe. Cleaveland.

Why stand we longer shivering under fear? Milton.

The man that shiver'd on the brink of sin,
Thus steel'd and harden'd, ventures boldly in.
He described this march to the temple with so much horror, that he shiver'd every joint. Addis.

Give up Laisus to the realms of day,
Whose ghost, yet shivering on Cocytus' land,
Expects its passage to the farther strand. Pope.

Prometheus is laid
On icy Caucasus to shiver, Swift.

While vultures eat his growing liver.
To SHIVER. v. n. [from shive.] To fall at once into many parts or shives.

Had'st thou been aught but gossamer, feathers, air,
So many fathom down precipitating, Thou'd'st shiver'd like an egg. Shaksp. King John.

Upon the breaking and shivering of a great state, you may be sure to have wars. Bacon.

The natural world, should gravity once cease, or be withdrawn, would instantly shiver into millions of atoms. Waller.

To SHIVER. v. a. To break by one act into many parts; to shatter.

The ground with shiver'd armour strown.
Show'rs of granado's rain, by sudden burst
Disploding murderous bowels; fragments of steel
A thousand ways at once, the shiver'd orbs Fly diverse, working torment. Philips.

SHIVER. n. f. [from the verb.] One fragment of many into which any thing is broken.
He would pound thee into shivers with his fist, as a tailor breaks a bifket. Shaksp. Troilus and Cressida.

SHO

As brittle as the glory is the face;
For there it is crack'd in an hundred shivers. Shaksp. Lear.

If you strike a solid body that is brittle, it breaketh not only where the immediate force is, but breaketh all about into shiv- ers and fritters. Bacon's Nat. History.

Surging waves against a solid rock,
Though all to shivers dash'd, th' assault renew,
Vain battery, and in froth or bubbles end. Milton.

SHIVERY. adj. [from shiver.] Loose of coherence; incompact; easily falling into many fragments.
There were observed incredible numbers of these shells
thus flatted, and extremely tender, in shivery stone. Woodward.

SHOADSTONE. n. f.
Shoadstone is a small stone, smooth without, of a dark liver colour, and of the same colour within, only with the addition of a faint purple. It is a fragment broke of an iron vein. Woodward on Fossils.

Certain tin-stones ly on the face of the ground which they call shoads, as shed from the main load, and made somewhat round by the water. Cowley's Survey of Corswall.

The loads or veins of metal were by this action of the departing water made easy to be found out by the shoads, or trains of metallic fragments born off from them, and lying in trains from those veins towards the sea, in the same course that water falling thence would take. Woodward.

SHOAL. n. f. [scrole, Saxon.]
1. A crowd; a great multitude; a throng.
When there be great shoads of people, which go on to populate, without foreseeing means of sustentation: once in an age they discharge a portion of their people upon other nations. Bacon.

A league is made against such routs and shoads of people as have utterly degenerated from nature. Bacon.

The vices of a prince draw shoads of followers, when his virtue leaves him the more eminent, because single. Decay of Piety.

A shoad of silver fishes glides
And plays about the barges. Waller.

God had the command of famine, whereby he could have carried them off by shoads. Woodward.

Around the goddess roll
Broad hats, and hoods, and caps, a fable shoad, Thick, and more thick the black blockade extends. Pope.

2. A shallow; a sand bank.
The haven's mouth they durst not enter, for the dangerous shoads. Abbot's Description of the World.

He heaves them off the shoad. Dryden.

The depth of your pond should be six foot; and on the sides some shoads for the fish to lay their spawn. Mortimer.

To SHOAL. v. n. [from the noun.]
1. To crowd; to throng.
The wave-sprung entrails, about which fauns and fish did shoad. Chapman.

2. To be shallow; to grow shallow.
What they met
Solid, or slimy, as in raging sea, Took up and down, together crowded drove,
From each side shading towards the mouth of hell. Milton.

SHOAL. adj. Shallow; obstructed or incumbered with banks.
SHOALNESS. n. f. [from shoal.] Shallowness; frequency of shallow places.

SHOALY. adj. [from shoal.] Full of shoals; full of shallow places.

The tossing vessel fail'd on shoaly ground. Dryden.

SHOCK. n. f. [shoc, French; shocken, Dutch.]
1. Conflict; mutual impression of violence; violent concourse.
Thro' the shock
Of fighting elements on all sides round
Environ'd, wins his way. Milton.

2. Concussion; external violence.
It is inconceivable how any such man that hath stood the shock of an eternal duration, without corruption or alteration, should after be corrupted or altered. Judge Hale.

These strong unshaken mounds resist the shocks
Of tides and seas tempestuous, while the rocks,
That secret in a long continu'd vein
Pass through the earth, the pond'rous pile sustain.
Such is the haughty man, his tow'ring soul,
Midst all the shocks and injuries of fortune,
Rises superior and looks down on Caesar.
Long at the head of his few faithful friends,
He stood the shock of a whole host of foes.
The tender apples from their parents rent,
By stormy shocks must not neglected lye,
The prey of worms. Philips.

3. The conflict of enemies.
The adverse legions, not less hideous join'd
The horrid shock.
Those that run away are in more danger than the others that stand the shock. Milton.

SHO

The mighty force
Of Edward twice o'erturn'd their desp'rate king:
Twice he arose, and join'd the horrid shock. Philips.

4. Offence; impression of disgust.
Fewer shocks a statesman gives his friend. Young.

5. [Shocket, old Dutch.] A pile of sheaves of corn.
Corn tithed, in parson, together to get,
And cause it on shocks to be by and by set. Tuff.

In a full age, like as a shock of corn cometh in, in his season. Job.

Thou, full of days, like weighty shocks of corn,
In season reap'd, shall to thy grave be born.
Behind the master walks, builds up the shocks, Feels his heart heave with joy. Thomson.

6. [from shag.] A rough dog.
I would fain know why a shock and a hound are not di-

To SHOCK. v. a. [shocken, Dutch.]

These her princes are come home again:
Come the three corners of the world in arms,
And we will shock them. Shaksp. K. John.

2. To offend; to disgust.
Supposing veries are never so beautiful, yet if they contain any thing that shocks religion or good manners, they are verus inopes rerum nugaeque canore. Dryden.

Those who in reading Homer are shock'd that 'tis always a lion, may as well be angry that 'tis always a man. Pope.

My son,
I bade him love, and bid him now forbear:
If you have any kindness for him, still Advise him not to shock a father's will. Dryden.

To SHOCK. v. n. To be offensive.
The French humour, in regard of the liberties they take in female conversations, is very shocking to the Italians, who are naturally jealous. Addis. on Remarks on Italy.

To SHOCK. v. n. [from the noun.] To build up piles of sheaves.

SHOE. n. f. plural shoes, anciently shoon. [scœo, scœo, Saxon;
shoe, Dutch.] The cover of the foot.
Your hose should be ungarter'd, your shoe untied, and every thing about you demonstrating a careless desolation. Shaksp.

Spare none but such as co in clouted shoon,
For they are thrifty honest men. Shaksp. Hen. VI.

This hollow cylinder is fitted with a sucker, upon which is nailed a good thick piece of tanned shoe-leather. Boyle.

Unknown and like esteem'd, and the dull swain
Treads on it daily with his clouted shoon,
And yet more medicinal than that moly
That Hermes once to wife Ulysses gave;
He call'd it haemony. Milton.

I was in pain, pulled off my shoe, and some ease that gave me. Temple.

To SHOE. v. a. preterit, I shoed; participle passive shod. [from the noun.]

God thanks that thou art not forced to carry a rich fool upon thy shoulders, as those poor men do. Taylor.

The head of the shoulder-bone being round, is inserted into so shallow a cavity in the scapula, that were there no other guards for it, it would be thrust out upon every occasion. Wife.

2. The upper joint of the foreleg.

We must have a shoulder of mutton for a property. Shaksp.

He took occasion, from a shoulder of mutton, to cry up the plenty of England. Addison's Freeholder.

3. The upper part of the back.

Emily dress'd herself in rich array;
Fresh as the month, and as the morning fair,
Adown her shoulders fell her length of hair. Dryden.

4. The shoulders are used as emblems of strength, or the act of supporting.

Ev'n as thou wilt, sweet Warwick, let it be;
For on thy shoulders do I build my seat. Shaksp. H. VI.

The king has cur'd me; and from these shoulders,
These ruin'd pillars, out of pity taken
A load would sink a navy. Shaksp. Henry VIII.

5. A rising part; a prominence.

When you rivet a pin into a hole, your pin must have a shoulder to it thicker than the hole is wide, that the shoulder slip not through the hole as well as the flank. Mason.

To SHO'ULDER. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To push with insolence and violence.

The rolling billows beat the ragged shore,
As they the earth would shoulder from her seat. Fairy Queen.

SHO

Dudman, a well-known foreland to most sailors, here shoulders out the ocean, to shape the same a large bosom between itself. Carew's Survey of Cornwall.

You debate yourself,

To think of mixing with th' ignoble herd:

What, shall the people know their god-like prince

Headed a rabble, and profan'd his person,

Shoulder'd with filth? Dryden.

So vast the navy now at anchor rides,

That underneath it the press'd waters fail,

And, with its weight, it shoulders off the tides. Dryden.

Around her numberless the rabble flow'd,

Should'ring each other, crowding for a view. Rouse's 7. Shon.

When Hopkins dies, a thousand lights attend

The wretch, who living sav'd a candle's end;

Should'ring God's altar a vile image stands,

Belies his features, nay extends his hands. Pope.

2. To put upon the shoulder.

Archimedes's lifting up Marcellus's ships finds little more credit than that of the giants shouldering mountains. Glan.

SHO'ULDERBELT. n. f. [shoulder and belt.] A belt that comes across the shoulder.

Thou hast an ulcer, which no leech can heal,

Though thy broad shoulder belt the wound conceal. Dryden.

SHO'ULDERCLAPPER. n. f. [shoulder and clap.] One who at-fects familiarity, or one that mischiefs privily.

A fiend, a fury, pitiless and rough;

A back friend, a shoulderclapper, one that commands

The passages of alleys. Shak. Comedy of Errors.

with only a strain or a shoulderslip. Swift.

To SHOUT. v. n. [A word of which no etymology is known.]

To cry in triumph or exhortation.

They shouted thrice: what was the last cry for? Shaksp.

Shout unto God with the voice of triumph. Pf. xlviii. 1.

It is not the voice of them that shout for mastery. Ev. xxxii.

The shouting for thy summer fruits and harvest is tallen. If.

He storms and shouts; but flying bullets now

To execute his rage appear too slow:

They miss, or sweep but common souls away;

For such a loss Opdam his life must pay. Waller.

There had been nothing but howlings and shoutings, of poor naked men, belabouring one another with fragg'd sticks. Merr.

All clad in skins of beasts the jav'lin bear,

And shrieks and shoutings rend the suff'ring air. Dryden.

What hinders you to take the man you love?

The people will be glad, the soldier shout;

And Bertran, though repining, will be aw'd. Dryden.

SHOUT. n. f. [from the verb.] A loud and vehement cry of triumph or exhortation.

Thanks, gentle citizens:

This general applause, and cheerful shout,

Argues your wisdom and your love to Richard. Shakspere.

The Rhodians, seeing the enemy turn their backs, gave a great shout in derision. Knolles's History of the Turks.

Then he might have dy'd of all admir'd,

And his triumphant soul with shouts expir'd. Dryden.

SHOUTER. n. f. [from shout.] He who shouts.

A peal of loud applause rang out,

And thinn'd the air, 'till even the birds fell down

Upon the shouters heads. Dryden's Cimonides.

To SHOW. v. a. pret. showed and shown; part. pass. shown.

[scapan, Saxon; schewen, Dutch.] This word is frequently written shew; but since it is always pronounced and often written show, which is favoured likewise by the Dutch schewen,

I have adjusted the orthography to the pronunciation.]

1. To exhibit to view.

If I do feign,

O let me in my present wildness die,

And never live to show th' incredulous word. Shaksp. H. IV.

The noble change that I have purposed.

Show me a token for good, that they which hate me may see

it. Pf. lxxxvii. 17.

Wilt thou show wonders to the dead? Shall the dead arise and praise thee? Pf. lxxxviii. 10.

Men should not take a charge upon them that they are not fit for, as if singing, dancing, and showing of tricks, were qualifications for a governor. L'Estrange.

2. To give proof of; to prove.

This I urge to show

Invalid that which thee to doubt it mov'd. Milton.

them, nor show mercy unto them. Deutr. vii. 2.

7. To explain; to expound.

Forasmuch as knowledge and showing of hard sentences, and dissolving of doubts, were found in the same, Daniel let him be called. Dan. v. 12.

8. To teach; to tell.

I'm sent to show thee what shall come. Milton.

To SHOW. v. n.

1. To appear; to look; to be in appearance.

She shows a body rather than a life,

A statue than a brother. Shaksp. Ant. and Cleopatra.

Just such the shows before a rising storm.

Still on we press; and here renew the carnage,

So great, that, in the stream, the moon show'd purple. Philips.

2. To have appearance.

My lord of York, it better show'd with you,

When that your flock assembled by the bell,

Encircled you to hear with reverence

Your exposition on the holy text,

Than now to see you here an iron man,

Cheering a rout of rebels with your drum. Shak. Henry IV.

SHOW. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. A spectacle; something publicly exposed to view for money.

I do not know what the may produce me; but, provided it be a show, I shall be very well satisfied. Addison.

The dwarf kept the gates of the show room. Arbutnot.

He through pass'd the midst unmark'd,

In show plebeian angel militant. Milton.

7. Speciousness; plausibility.

The places of Ezechiel have some show in them; for there the Lord commandeth the Levites, which had committed idolatry, to be put from their dignity, and serve in inferior ministries. Whitgift.

The kindred of the slain forgive the deed;

But a short exile must for show precede. Dryden.

SHR

His panegyric is made up of half a dozen shreds, like a schoolboy's theme, beaten general topics. Swift.
A beggar might patch up a garment with such shreds as the world throws away. Pope.

2. A fragment.
They said they were an hungry; sigh'd forth proverbs,
That hunger broke stone walls; that dogs must eat:
And with these shreds they vented their complainings. Shak.
Shreds of wit and sentence rhimes Blunder'd out a thousand times. Swift.

SHREW. n. f. [shrew, German, to clamour.] A peevish, malignant, clamorous, spiteful, vexatious, turbulent woman. [It appears in Robert of Gloucester, that this word signified anciently any one perverse or obstinate of either sex.]
There dede of hem vor hunger a thousand and mo,
And yat nolde the shrewen to none pes go. Robert of Gloucester.
Be merry, my wife has all;
For women are shrews both short and tall. Shak. H. IV.
By this reckoning he is more shrew than she. Shakespeare.
A man had got a shrew to his wife, and there could be no quiet in the house for her. L'Estrange.
Her fallow cheeks her envious mind did frow,
And ev'ry feature spoke aloud the shrew. Dryden.
Every one of them, who is a shrew in domestic life, is now become a scold in politics. Addis. Freeholder.

SHREW. adj. [Contracted from shrewd.]
1. Having the qualities of a shrew; malicious; troublesome; mischievous.
Her eldest sister is so curst and shrewd,
That till the father rids his hands of her,
Your love must live a maid. Shakespeare.

2. Maliciously; cunning; more artful than good.
It was a shrewd saying of the old monk, that two kind of prisons would serve for all offenders, an inquisition and a bedlam: if any man should deny the being of a God, and the immortality of the soul, such a one should be put into the first, as being a desperate heretic; but if any man should profess to believe these things, and yet allow himself in any known wickedness, such a one should be put into bedlam. Tillotson.
A spiteful saying gratifies so many little passions, that it meets with a good reception; and the man who utters it is looked upon as a shrewd satirist. Addison.
Corruption proceeds from employing those who have the character of shrewd worldly men, instead of such as have had a liberal education, and trained up in virtue. Addison.

3. Bad; ill-betokening.
Scarce any man passes to a liking of sin in others, but by first practising it himself; and consequently we may take it for a shrewd indication, and sign, whereby to judge of those who have sinned with too much caution, to suffer the world to charge sins directly upon their conversation. South's Sermon.

4. Painful; pinching; dangerous; mischievous.
Every of this number,
That have endur'd shrewd nights and days with us,
Shall share the good of our returned fortune. Shakespeare.
When a man thinks he has a servant, he finds a traitor that eats his bread, and is readier to do him a mischief, and a shrewd turn, than an open adversary. South's Sermon.
No enemy is so despicable but he may do a body a shrewd turn. L'Estrange.

SHREWDLY. adv. [from shrewd.]
1. Mischievously; destructively.
This practice hath most shrewdly past upon thee. Shakespeare.
At Oxford, his youth and want of experience in maritime service, had somewhat been shrewdly touched, even before the sluices of popular liberty were set open. Wotton.

2. Vexatiously. It is used commonly of slight mischief, or in ironical expression.
The obnoxious and schismatical are like to think themselves shrewdly hurt, forsooth, by being cut off from that body which they choose not to be of. South's Sermon.
This last allusion rubb'd upon the fore;
Yet seem'd the not to winch, tho' shrewdly pain'd. Dryden.

3. With strong suspicion.
Four per cent. increases not the number of lenders; as any man at first hearing will shrewdly suspect it. Locke.

SHREWNESS. n. f. [from shrewd.]

My wife is shrewish when I keep not hours. Shakespeare.

SHREWISHLY. adv. [from shrewish.] Petulantly; peevishly; clamorously; frowardly.
He speaks very shrewishly; one would think his mother's milk were scarce out of him. Shakespeare.

SHR

SHREWISHNESS. n. f. [from shrewish.] The qualities of a shrew; frowardness; petulance; clamorousness.
I have no gift in shrewishness,
I am a right maid for my cowardice;
Let her not strike me. Shakespeare.

SHREWMOUSE. n. f. [shrewmouse, Saxon.] A mouse of which the bite is generally supposed venomous, and to which vulgar tradition assigns such malignity, that she is said to lame the foot over which she runs. I am informed that all these reports are calumnious, and that her feet and teeth are equally harmless with those of any other little mouse. Our ancestors however looked on her with such terror, that they are supposed to have given her name to a scolding woman, whom for her venom they call a shrew.
To SHRIEK. v. n. [shrieker, Danish; sericciare, Italian.] To cry out inarticulately with anguish or horror; to scream.
On top whereof ay dwelt the ghastly owl, Shrieking his baleful note. Fa. Queen.
It was the owl that shriek'd, the fatal belman
Which gives the sternest good-night.
Were I the ghost that walk'd,
I'd shriek, that even your ears should rift to hear me. Shak.
In a dreadful dream
I saw my lord to near destruction,
Then shriek'd myself awake. Denham.
Hark! Peace!
At this she shriek'd aloud; the mournful train Echo'd her grief. Dryden's Knight's Tale.
Why did you shriek out?
SHRIEK. n. f. [shriek, Danish; sericciare, Italian.] An inarticulate cry of anguish or horror.
Una heaving evermore
His useful shrieks and groanings, often tore
Her guiltless garments, and her golden hair,
For pity of his pain. Fa. Queen.
Time has been my senses would have cool'd,
To hear a night shriek, and my fell of hair
Would at a dismal treatise rouse and stir
As life were in't. Shakespeare's Macbeth.
The corps of Almon, and the rest are shown,
Shrieks, clamours, murmurs, fill the frighted town. Dryd.

SHRIFT. n. f. [shrift, Saxon.] Confession made to a priest.
A word out of use.
Off with Bernardine's head: I will give a present shrift,
And will advise him for a better place. Shakespeare.
My lord shall never rest;
I'll watch him tame, and talk him out:
His bed shall seem a school, his board a shrift. Shakespeare.
The duke's commands were absolute,
Therefore my lord, address you to your shrift,
And be yourself; for you must die this instant. Rome.

SHRIGHT, for shrieked. Spenser.

SHRILL. [A word supposed to be made per onomatopoeiam, in imitation of the thing expressed, which indeed it images very happily.] Sounding with a piercing, tremulous, or vibratory sound.
Thy hounds shall make the welkin answer them,
And fetch shrill echoes from the hollow earth. Shakespeare.
I have heard
The cock that is the trumpet to the morn,
Doth with his lofty and shrill-sounding throat
Awake the god of day. Shakespeare's Hamlet.
Have I fall'n,
From the dread summit of this chalky bourn!
Look up a height, the shrill gorg'd lark so far Cannot be seen or heard. Shakespeare's Lear.
Upstarts the lark,
Shrill voic'd and loud, the messenger of morn. Thomson.

To SHRILL. v. n. [from the adjective.] To pierce the ear with sharp and quick vibrations of sound.
The fun of all the world is dim and dark;
O heavy herse,
Break we our pipes that shrill'd as loud as larks,
O careful verbe. Spenser.
Hark how the minstrel's 'gin to shrill aloud
Their merry music that rebounds from far,
The pipe, the tabor, and the trembling crowd
That well agree withouten breach or jar.
A shrilling trumpet sounded from on high,
And unto battle bade themselves address. Shakespeare.
Here, no clarion's shrilling note
The mule's green retreat can pierce;
The grove, from noisy camps remote,
Is only vocal with my verse. Fenton's Ode to Lord Gower.
The females round,
Maids, wives, and matrons mix a shrilling sound. Pope.

SHRILLY. adv. [from shrill.] With a shrill noise.

2. A little wrinkled man; a dwarf. In contempt.
It cannot be, this weak and writhed shrimp
Should strike such terror in his enemies. Shakespeare.
He hath found,
Within the ground,
At last, no shrimp,
Whereon to imp
His jolly club. Ben. Jonson.

SHRINE. n. f. [shrin, Saxon; serinum, Latin.] A case in which something sacred is deposited.
You living powers enclos'd in stately shrines
Of growing trees; you rural gods that wield
Your scepters here, if to your cares divine
A voice may come, which troubled soul doth yield. Sidney.
All the world come
To kiss this shrine, this mortal breathing faint. Shakespeare.
Come offer at my shrine and I will help thee. Shakespeare.
They often plac'd
Within his sanctu'ry itself their shrines, Abominations! and with cursed things
His holy rites profan'd. Milton.
Falling on his knees before her shrines,
He thus implor'd her pow'r. Dryden.
Lovers are in rapture at the name of their fair idol; they lavish out all their incense upon that shrine, and cannot bear the thought of admitting a blemish therein. Watts.

To SHRINK. v. n. preterite, I shrunk, or shrank; participle, shrunk. [shrinkan, Saxon.]

ing themselves in them, should with more ease besiege the town. Knut's Hist. of the Turks.
One of these trees, with all his young ones, may shroud
four hundred horsemen. Raleigh.
Besides the faults men commit, with this immediate avowed aspect upon their religion, there are others which slyly shroud themselves under the skirt of piety. Deity of Piety.
So Venus, from prevailing Greeks did shroud
The hope of Rome, and sav'd him in a cloud. Waller.
2. To dress for the grave.
If I die before thee, shroud me
In one of these same sheets. Shakespeare's Othello.
The antient Egyptian mummies were shrouded in a number of folds of linen, be-mead with gums, like ferecloth. Bacon.
Whoever comes to shroud me, do not harm
That subtle wreath of hair about mine arm. Donne.
3. To clothe; to dress.
4. To cover or conceal.
That same evening, when all shrouded were
In careless sleep, all, without care or fear,
They fell upon the flock. Spenser.
Under this thick-grown brake we'll shroud ourselves,
For through this land anon the deer will come,
And in this covert will we make our stand, Culling the principal. Shakespeare's Hen. VI.
Moon, slip behind some cloud: some tempest rise,
And blow out all the stars that light the skies,
To shroud my shame. Dryden.
Thither the loud tumultuous winds resort,
And on the mountain keep their boisterous court,
That in thick show'rs her rocky summit shrouds,
And darkens all the broken view with clouds. Addison.
5. To defend; to protect.
To SHROUD. v. n. To harbour; to take shelter.

Plinlimmon, the goats their shrubby browze Grav pendent. Philips.
To SHRUG. v. n. [from shrug, Dutch; to tremble.] To express horror or dissatisfaction by motion of the shoulders or whole body.

SHU

Like a fearful deer that looks most about when he comes to the best feed, with a shrugging kind of tremor through all her principal parts, she gave these words. Sidney.
The touch of the cold water made a pretty kind of shrug- ging come over her body like the twinkling of the fairest among the fixed stars. Sidney.
Be quick, thou wert best
To answer other business; *shrug*st thou malice? Shakspeare.
He grins, smacks, shrugs, and such an itch endures,
As prentices or school-boys which do know
Of some gay sport abroad, yet dare not go. Donne.
They grin, they shrug,
They bow, they snarl, they scratch, they hug. Swift.
To SHRUG. v. a. To contract or draw up.
He shrugs his shoulders when you talk of securities. Addison.
Zealots will shrug up their shoulders.
As if he felt his sturdy back,
He shrug'd his sturdy back. Hudibras.
To SHRUG. n. f. [from the verb.] A motion of the shoulders usually expressing dislike or aversion.
And yet they ramble not to learn the mode,
How to be dress'd, or how to lip abroad,
To return knowing in the Spanish shrug. Cleveland.
As Spaniards talk in dialogues,
Of heads and shoulders, nods and shrugs. Hudibras.
Put on the crick's brow, and fit
At Will's, the puny judge of wit.
A nod, a shrug, a scornful smile,
With caution us'd may serve a while. Swift.
SHRUNK. The preterite and part. passive of shrink.
Leaving the two friends alone, I shrank aside to the Banqueting house where the pictures were.
The wicked shrank for fear of him, and all the workers of iniquity were troubled. 1 Maccabees.
SHRUNKEN. The part. passive of shrink.
She weighing the decaying plight,
And shrunken linens of her chosen knight;
Would not a while her forward course pursue. Fa. Queen.
If there were taken out of mens minds, vain opinions, it would leave the minds of a number of men, poor shrunken things, full of melancholy. Bacon.
To SHUDDER. v. a. [from shudder, Dutch.] To quake with fear, or with aversion.
All the other passions fleet to air,
As doubtful thoughts, and rash embrac'd despair,
And shudd'ring fear. Shakespeare.
The fright was general; but the female band
With horror shudd'ring on a heap they run. Dryden.
I love, alas! I shudder at the name,
My blood runs backward, and my fault'ring tongue Sticks at the sound. Smith.
Cesar will shrink to hear the words thou utter'st.
And shudder in the midst of all his conquests. Addison.
Youth's bold courage cools,
Each shudd'ring owns the genius of the schools. Daniel.
To SHUFFLE. v. a. [from shuffle, Saxon, a tumult.]
1. To throw into disorder; to agitate tumultuously, so as that one thing takes the place of another; to confuse; to throw together tumultuously.
When the heavens shuffle all in one,
The torrid, with the frozen zone,
Then, sybil, thou and I will greet. Cleveland.
From a new shuffling and disposition of the component particles of a body, might not nature compose a body dissoluble in water.
In most things good and evil lie shuffled, and thrust up together in a confused heap; and it is study which must draw them forth and range them. South's Sermons.
When lots are shuffled together in a lap or pitcher, what reason can a man have to presume, that he shall draw a white stone rather than a black. South's Sermons.
A glimpse of moonshine sheath'd with red,
A shuffl'd, fullen and uncertain light. Dryden.
That dances thro' the clouds and shuts again.
Children should not lose the consideration of human nature in the shufflings of outward conditions. The more they have, the better humoured they should be taught to be. Lact.
We shall in vain, shuffling the little money we have from one another's hands, endeavour to prevent our wants; decay of trade will quickly waste all the remainder.
These vapours soon, miraculous event,
Shuffl'd by chance, and mix'd by accident. Blackmer.
Shuffl'd and entangl'd in their race,
They clasp each other. Blackmer.
He has shuffled the two ends of the sentence together, and by taking out the middle, makes it speak just as he would have it.
'Tis in no wife strange that such a one should believe, that things were blindly shuffled and hurled about in the world;
that the elements were at constant strife with each other. Wed.

SHUFFLE. n. f. [from the verb.]
1. The act of disordering things, or making them take confusedly the place of each other.
Is it not a firmer foundation for contentment, to believe that all things were at first created, and are continually disposited for the best, than that the whole universe is mere bungling, nothing effected for any purpose, but all ill-favour'dly cobled and jumbled together, by the unguided agitation and rude shuffle of matter. Bentley's Sermons.
2. A trick; an artifice.
The gifts of nature are beyond all shams and shuffles. L'Estr.
SHUFFLECAP. n. f. [from shuffle and cap.] A play at which mo-

Shows in her cheek the roses of eighteen;
Practis'd to lips, and hang the head aside,
Faints into airs, and languishes with pride. Pope.

When on my sickly couch I lay,
Impatient both of night and day,
Then Stella ran to my relief. Swift.

2. Faint; weak; languid.
To animate the doubtful fight,
Namur in vain expects that ray;
In vain France hopes the sickly light
Should shine near William's fuller day. Prior.

To SICKLY. v. a. [from the adjective.] To make diseased;
to taint with the hue of disease. Not in use.

The native hue of resolution
Is sicklied o'er with the pale cast of thought. Shaksp. Lear.

SICKNESS. n. f. [from sick.]
1. State of being diseased.
I do lament the sickness of the kings,
As loth to lose him. Shaksp. Rich. III.

2. Disease; malady.
My people are with sickness much enfeebled,
My numbers less'n'd. Shaksp. Henry V.

Himself took our infirmities, and bare our sicknesses. Mat.
When I lay every sickness has a tendency to death, I mean every individual sickness as well as every kind. Watts.

Trust not too much your now refitless charms;
Those age or sickness soon or late disarms. Pope.

3. Disorder in the organs of digestion.
SIDE. n. f. [trose, Saxon; side, Dutch.]

1. The parts of animals fortified by the ribs.
When two boars with rankling malice meet,
Their gory sides fresh bleeding fiercely fret. Fairy Queen.

The clamour much,
Ere the soft fearful people to the flood Commit their wailing sides. Thomson.

2. Any part of any body opposed to any other part.
The tables were written on both their sides, on the one side and on the other. Ex. xxxii. 15.

The force of these outward streams might well enough serve for the turning of the screw, if it were so that both its sides would equiperate. Wilkins.

3. The right or left.
4. Margin; edge; verge.
Or where Hydaspes' wealthy side
Pays tribute to the Persian pride. Rescrammon.

Poor wretch! on stormy seas to lose thy life;
For now the flowing tide
Had brought the body nearer to the side. Dryden.

The temple of Diana chaste,
A sylvan scene, with various greens was drawn,
Shades on the sides, and in the midst a lawn. Dryden.

I could see persons dressed in glorious habits, with garlands upon their heads, lying down by the sides of fountains. Addis.

5. Any kind of local respect.
They looking back, all the eastern side beheld Of Paradise. Milton.

If our substance be indeed divine,
And cannot cease to be, we are at worst
On this side nothing. Milton.

6. Party; interest; faction; sect.
To take the widow,
Exasperates, makes mad her sister Goneril;
And hardly shall I carry out my sides,
Her husband being alive. Shaksp. King Lear.

Their weapons only
Seem'd on our side; but for their spirits and souls,
This word rebellion, it had froze them up,
As fish are in a pond. Shaksp. Henry IV.

Favour, custom, and at last number, will be on the side of grace. Spens.

SID

Men he always took to be
His friends, and dogs his enemy;
Who never so much hurt had done him,
As his own side did falling on him. Hubbard's Tale.

In the serious part of poetry the advantage is wholly on Chaucer's side. Dryden.

That person, who fills their chair, has justly gained the esteem of all sides by the impartiality of his behaviour. Addis.

Let not our James, though foil'd in arms, despair,
Whilst on his side he reckons half the fair. Tickell.

Some valuing those of their own side, or mind,
Still make themselves the measure of mankind:
Fondly we think we honour merit then,
When we but praise ourselves in other men. Pope.

He from the taste obscene reclaims our youth,
And sets the passions on the side of truth;
Forms the soft bosom with the gentlest art,
And pours each human virtue in the heart. Pope.

7. Any part placed in contradistinction or opposition to another.
It is used of persons, or propositions respecting each other.
There began a sharp and cruel fight, many being slain and wounded on both sides. Knolly's Hist. of the Turks.

The plague is not easily received by such as continually are about them that have it: on the other side, the plague taketh soonest hold of those that come out of a fresh air. Bacon.

I am too well satisfied of my own weakness to be pleased with any thing I have written; but, on the other side, my reason tells me, that what I have long considered may be as just as what an ordinary judge will condemn. Dryden.

My secret wishes would my choice decide;
But open justice bends to neither side. Dryden.

It is granted on both sides, that the fear of a Deity doth universally possess the minds of men. Tillotson's Sermons.

Two nations still pursu'd
Peculiar ends, on each side resolute
To fly conjunction. Philips.

SIDE. adj. [from the noun.] Lateral; oblique; not direct;
being on either side.
They presume that the law doth speak with all indifference, that the law hath no side respect to their persons. Hooker.

Take of the blood, and strike it on the two side posts, and on the upper door post of the houses. Ex. xii. 7.

People are sooner reclaimed by the side wind of a surprise, than by downright admonition. L'Estrange.

One mighty squadron with a side wind sped. Dryden.

The parts of water, being easily separable from each other, will, by a side motion, be easily removed, and give way to the approach of two pieces of marble. Locke.

What natural agent could turn them aside, could impel them so strongly with a transverse side blow against that tremendous weight and rapidity, when whole worlds are a falling. Bentley's Sermons.

He not only gives us the full prospects, but several unexpected peculiarities, and side views, unobserved by any painter but Homer. Pope's Preface to the Iliad.

My secret enemies could not forbear some expressions, which by a side wind reflected on me. Swift.

To SIDE. v. n. [from the noun.] To take a party; to engage in a faction.
Vex'd are the nobles who have sided
In his behalf. Shaksp. Coriolanus.

All rising to great place is by a winding stair; and if there be factions, it is good to side a man's self whilst rising, and balance himself when placed. Bacon.

As soon as discontents drove men into siding, as ill humours fall to the disaffected part, which causes inflammations, so did all who affected novelties adhere to that side. King Charles.

Terms rightly conceived, and notions duly fitted to them, require a brain free from all inclination to siding, or affection to opinions for the authors sakes, before they be well understood. Digby on Bodies.

Not yet so dully desperate
To side against ourselves with fate;
As criminals, condemn'd to suffer,
Are blinded first, and then turn'd over. Hubbard's Tale.

The princes differ and divide;
Some follow law, and some with beauty side. Granville.

It is pleasant to see a verse of an old poet revolting from its original sense, and siding with a modern subject. Addis.

All side in parties, and begin th' attack. Pope.

Those who pretended to be in with the principles upon which her majesty proceeded, either absented themselves where the whole cause depended, or sided with the enemy. Swift.

The equitable part of those who now side against the court, will probably be more temperate. Swift.

SIDEBOARD. n. f. [side and board.] The side table on which conveniences are placed for those that eat at the other table.
At a stately sideboard by the wine
That fragrant smell diffus'd. Mil. Paradise Regain'd.
No sideboards then with gilded plate were dress'd,
No sweating slaves with massive dishes press'd. Dryden.

SID

The snow white damask ensigns are display'd,
And glittering falcons on the sideboard laid.
The shining sideboard, and the burnish'd plate,
Let other ministers, great Anne, require.
Scipio Africanus brought from Carthage to Rome, in silver vessels, to the value of 11956*l.* 15*s.* 9*d.* a quantity exceeded afterwards by the sideboards of many private tables.
Arbutnot.
SIDERON, n. f. [side and box.] Seat for the ladies on the side of the theatre.
Why round our coaches crowd the white-glov'd beaux?
Why bows the sidebox from its inmost rows? Pope.
SIDELY, n. f. An insect.
From a rough whitish maggot, in the intestine rectum of horses, the sidefly proceeds. Derham's Physico-Theology.
To SIDLE, v. n. [from side.] To go with the body the narrowest way.
The chattering with dissenters is but like opening a few wickets, and leaving them no more than one can get in at a time, and that not without stooping and sidling, and squeezing his body. Swift.
I passed very gently and sidling through the two principal streets. Gulliver's Travels.
A fellow nailed up maps in a gentleman's closet, some sidling, and others upside down, the better to adjust them to the pannels. Swift.
SIDELONG, adj. [side and long.] Lateral; oblique; not in front; not direct.
She darted from her eyes a sidelong glance,
Just as the spoke, and, like her words, it flew;
Seem'd not to beg what she then bid me do. Dryden.
The deadly wound is in thy soul:
When thou a tempting harlot do'st behold,
And when the casts on thee a sidelong glance,
Then try thy heart, and tell me if it dance? Dryden.
The reason of the planets motions in curve lines is the attraction of the sun, and an oblique or sidelong impulse. Locke.
The kiss snatch'd hasty from the sidelong maid. Thomson.
SIDELONG, adv.
1. Laterally; obliquely; not in pursuit; not in opposition.
As if on earth
Winds under ground, or waters, forcing way,
Sidelong had push'd a mountain from his seat,
Half sunk with all his pines. Milton's Paradise Lost.
As a lion, bounding in his way,
With force augmented bears against his prey, Sidelong to seize. Dryden's Cæsar and Alcibiades.
2. On the side.
If it prove too wet, lay your pots sidelong; but shade those which blow from the afternoon sun. Evelyn's Kalendar.
SIDER, n. f. See CIDER.
SIDERAL, adj. [from sidus, Latin.] Starry; astral.
These changes in the heav'ns, though slow, produc'd
Like change on sea, and land; sidereal blast,
Vapour and mist, and exhalation hot,
Corrupt and pestilent! Milton's Paradise Lost.
The musk gives
Sure hopes of racy wine, and in its youth,
Its tender nonage, loads the spreading boughs
With large and juicy offspring, that defies
The vernal nippings and cold sidereal blasts. Philips.
SIDERATED, adj. [from sideratus, Latin.] Blasted; planet struck.
Parts cauterized, gangrenated, siderated, and mortified, become black; the radical moisture, or vital sulphur, suffering an extinction. Brown's Vulgar Errors.
SIDERATION, n. f. [sideration, French; sideratio, Latin.]
A sudden mortification, or, as the common people call it, a blast; or a sudden deprivation of sense, as in an apoplexy.
The contagious vapour of the very eggs produce a mortification or sideration in the parts of plants on which they are laid. Ray on the Creation.
SIDESADDLE, n. f. [side and saddle.] A woman's seat on horseback.
SIDESMAN, n. f. [side and man.] An assistant to the church-warden.
A gift of such goods, made by them with the consent of the sidesmen or vestry, is void. Ayliffe's Parergon.
SIDEWAYS, adv. [from side and way, or wise.] Laterally;
SIDEWISE, adv. on one side.
The fair blossom hangs the head
Sideways, as on a dying bed;
And those pearls of dew the wears,
Prove to be prefiging tears. Milton.
If in the third experiment the image of the sun should be drawn out into an oblong form, either by a dilatation of every ray, or by any other casual inequality of the refractions, the same oblong image would, by a second refraction made side- ways, be drawn out as much in breadth by the like dilatation of the rays, or other casual inequality of the refraction side- ways. Newton's Optics.

SIG

Stace, n. f. [siege, French.]
1. The act of besieging a fortified place; a league.
Our cattle's strength
Will laugh a siege to scorn: here let them lie, Till famine eat them up. Shakespeare's Macbeth.
It seem'd, by the manner of their proceeding, that the Turks purposed rather by long siege than by assault to take the town. Knut's History of the Turks.
The more I see pleasures about me, so much more I feel Torment within me, as from the hateful siege
Of contraries. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. ix.
2. Any continued endeavour to gain possession.
Beat away the busy meddling fiend,
That lays strong siege unto this wretch's soul,
And from his bosom purge this black despair. Shakespeare's H.V.
Give me so much of your time, in exchange of it, as to lay an amiable siege to the honesty of Ford's wife. Shakespeare.
Love flood the siege, and would not yield his breast. Dryden.
3. [Siege, French.] Seat; throne. Obsolete.
Drawing to him the eyes of all around,
From lofty siege began these words aloud to found. Fa. Qu.
4. Place; class; rank. Obsolete.
I fetch my life and being
From men of royal siege. Shakespeare's Othello.
Your form of parts
Did not together pluck such envy from him,
As did that one, and that in my regard
Of the unworthiest siege. Shakespeare's Hamlet.
5. [Siege, French.] Stool.
It entereth not the veins, but taketh leave of the permeant parts, as the mouths of the meadows, and accompanieth the inconvertible portion unto the siege. Brown's Vulg. Errours.
TO SIEGE, v. a. [sieger, Fr. from the noun.] To besiege. A word not now in use.
Him he had long oppress'd with tort,
And fast imprison'd in sieged fort. Fairy Queen.
SIEVE, n. f. [from sift.] Hair or lawn strain'd upon a hoop, by which flower is separated from bran, or fine powder from coarse; a boulder; a searce.
Thy counsel
Falls now into my ears as profitless
As water in a sieve. Shakespeare's As You Like It.
In a sieve I'll thither sail,
And like a rat without a tail,
I'll do—I'll do—I'll do. Shakespeare's Macbeth.
An innocent found a sieve, and presently fell to stopping the holes. L'Estrange.
If life sunk through you like a leaky sieve,
Accuse yourself you liv'd not while you might. Dryden.
TO SIF, v. a. [sifan, Saxon; siften, Dutch.]
1. To separate by a sieve.
In the sifting of such favour all that came out could not be expected to be pure meal, but must have a mixture of pander and bran. Wotton.
2. To separate; to part.
When yellow sands are sifted from below,
The glittering billows give a golden show. Dryden.
3. To examine; to try.
We have sifted your objections against those pre-eminences royal. Hooker's Preface.
All which the wit of Calvin could from thence draw, by sifting the very utmost sentence and syllable, is no more than that certain speeches seem to intimate, that all Christian churches ought to have their elderships. Hobbes.
I fear me, if thy thoughts were sifted,
The king thy sovereign is not quite exempt
From envious malice of thy swelling heart. Shakespeare's Hamlet.
As near as I could sift him on that argument. Shakespeare.
Opportunity I here have had To try thee, sift thee, and confels have found thee
Proof against all temptation as a rock
Of adamant. Milton's Paradise Regain'd.
One would think, that every member who embraces with vehemence the principles of either of these parties, had thoroughly sifted and examined them, and was secretly convinced of their preference to those he rejects. Addison.
SIFTER, n. f. [from sift.] He who sifts.
SIG was used by the Saxons for victory: Sigbert, famous for victory; Sigward, victorious preserver; Sigard, conquering temper: and almost in the same sense are Nicoles, Nicomys- chus, Nicander, Victor, Victorinus, Vincencius, &c. Gloss.
TO SIGN, v. n. [signan, piecetan, Saxon; signen, Dutch.]
To emit the breath audibly, as in grief.
I lov'd the maid I married; never man Sigh'd truer breath. Shakespeare's Coriolanus.
I'll not be made a soft and dull-eyed fool,
To shake the head, relent, and sigh, and yield
To Christian intercessors. Shakespeare's Merchant of Venice.
He sigh'd deeply in his spirit, and faith, why doth this generation seek after a sign? Mar. viii. 12.
For the oppression of the poor, for the sighing of the needy will I arise. Ps. xii. 5.

SIG

Happier he,
Who seeks not pleasure through necessity,
Than such as once on slippery thrones were plac'd,
And chafing, sign to think themselves are chas'd. Dryden.
The nymph too longs to be alone;
Leaves all the swains, and signs for one. Prior.
Thus sign'd he away the melancholy night. Arb. and Pope.
TO SIGN, v. a. To lament; to mourn. Not in use.
Ages to come, and men unborn,
Shall bless her name, and sign her fate. Prior.
SIGN, n. f. [from the verb.] A violent and audible emission of the breath which has been long retained, as in sadness.
Full often has my heart swollen with keeping my signs imprisoned; full often have the tears I drove back from mine eyes, turned back to drown my heart. Sidney.
Love is a smoke rais'd with the fume of signs;
Being purg'd, a fire sparkling in lovers eyes. Shakespeare.
What a sign is there! The heart is forely charg'd. Shakespeare.
Laughing, if loud, ends in a deep sign; and all pleasures have a sting in the tail, though they carry beauty on the face. Taylor.
In Venus' temple, on the sides were seen Issuing signs, that smok'd along the wall. Dryden.
SIGN, n. f. [zeichen, Saxon; sign, gezeichnet, Dutch.]
1. Perception by the eye; the sense of seeing.
If bees go forth right to a place, they must needs have sign. Bacon.
O loss of sign, of thee I most complain!
Blind among enemies, O worse than chains,
Dungeon or beggary, decrepit age!
Things invisible to mortal sign. Milton's Agonistes.
'Tis still the same, although their airy shape
All but a quick poetick sign escape. Denham.
My eyes are somewhat dimly grown;
For nature, always in the right,
To your decays adapts my sign. Swift.
2. Open view; a situation in which nothing obstructs the eye.
Undaunted Hotspur
Brings on his army, eager unto fight,
And plac'd the same before the king in sign. Daniel.
Æneas cast his wond'ring eyes around,
And all the Tyrrhene army had in sign,
Stretch'd on the spacious plain from left to right. Dryden.
I met Brutus in a mortal sign;
He's dipt for certain, and plays least in sign. Dryden's Juven.
3. Act of seeing or beholding.
Nine things to sign required are;
The pow'r to see, the light, the visible thing,
Being not too small, too thin, too high, too far,
Clear space and time, the form distinct to bring. Davies.
Mine eye purf'd him still, but under shade
Lost sign of him. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. iv.
What form of death could him affright,
Who unconcern'd, with steadfast sign,
Could view the furies mounting sleep,
And monsters rolling in the deep! Dryden's Horace.
Having little knowledge of the circumstances of those St.
Paul writ to, it is not strange that many things lie concealed to us, which they who were concerned in the letter understood at first sign. Locke.
4. Notice; knowledge.
It was writ as a private letter to a person of piety, upon an assurance that it should never come to any one's sign but her own. Wake.
5. Eye; instrument of seeing.
From the depth of hell they lift their signs,
And at a distance see superior light. Dryden.
6. Aperture pervious to the eye, or other point fixed to guide the eye; as, the signs of a quadrant.
Their armed staves in charge, their heavers down,
Their eyes of fire sparkling through signs of steel. Shakespeare.
7. Spectacle; show; thing wonderful to be seen.
Thus are my eyes still captive to one sign;
Thus all my thoughts are slaves to one thought still. Sidney.
Them seem'd they never saw a sign so fair
Of fowls so lovely, that they fure did deem Them heavenly born. Spenser.
Not an eye
But is a weary of thy common sign,
Save mine, which hath desir'd to see thee more. Shakespeare.
Moses said, I will turn aside and see this great sign, why the bull is not burnt. Ex. iii. 3.
I took a felucca at Naples to carry me to Rome, that I might not run over the same signs a second time. Addison.
Not proud Olympus yields a nobler sign,
Though gods assembled grace his tow'ring height,
Than what more humble mountains offer here,
Where, in their blessings, all those gods appear. Pope.
Before you pass th' imaginary signs
Of lords and earls, and dukes and garter'd knights,
While the spread fan o'erhades your cloving eyes,
Then give one flint, and all the vision flies. Pope.

SIG

SIGHTED, adj. [from sign.] Seeing in a particular manner.
It is used only in composition, as quick-sighted, short-sighted.
As they might, to avoid the weather, pull the joints of the coach up close, so they might put each end down, and remain as discovered and open signed as on horseback. Sidney.
The king was very quick signed in discerning difficulties, and raising objections, and very slow in mastering them. Clarendon.
SIGHTFULNESS, n. f. [from sign and full.] Perspicuity; clearness of sight. Not in use.
But still, although we fail of perfect rightfulness,
Seek we to tame these childish superfluities;
Let us not wink, though void of purest *signed*ness. Sidney.
SIGHTLESS, adj. [from sign.]
1. Wanting sight; blind.
The latent tracts, the giddy heights explore,
Of all who blindly creep, or *signed*ness soar. Pope.
2. Not sightly; offensive to the eye; unpleasing to look at.
Full of unpleasing blots and *signed*ness stains, Patch'd with foul moles, and eye-offending marks. Shak.
SIGHTLY, adj. [from sign.] Pleasing to the eye; striking to the view.
It lies as signed on the back of him,
As great Alcides shews upon an ass. Shakespeare's K. John.
Their having two eyes and two ears so placed, is more signed and useful. Moré's Antidote against Atheism.
A great many brave *signed*ness horses were brought out, and only one plain nag that made sport. L'Estrange.
We have thirty members, the most *signed*ness of all her majesty's subjects: we elected a president by his height. Addison.
SIGN, n. f. [signum, Latin.] Seal.
Sorceries to raise th' infernal pow'rs,
And *signed*ness fram'd in planetary hours. Dryden's Knight's Tale.
SIGN, n. f. [signe, French; signum, Latin.]
1. A token of any thing; that by which any thing is shown.
Signs must resemble the things they signify. Hooker.
Signs for communication may be contrived from any variety of objects of one kind appertaining to either sense. Holder.
To express the passions which are seated in the heart by outward signs, is one great precept of the painters, and very difficult to perform. Dryden's Dunciad.
When any one uses any term, he may have in his mind a determined idea which he makes it the sign of, and to which he should keep it steadily annexed. Locke.
2. A wonder; a miracle.
If they will not hearken to the voice of the first sign, they will not believe the latter sign. Ex. iv. 8.
Cover thy face that thou see not; for I have set thee for a sign unto Israel. Exek. xii. 6.
Compell'd by signs and judgments dire.
3. A picture hung at a door, to give notice what is sold within.
I found my mis, struck hands, and pray'd him tell,
To hold acquaintance still, where he did dwell;
He barely nam'd the street, promis'd the wine;
But his kind wife gave me the very sign. Donne.
Underneath an alehouse' paltry sign. Shakespeare's H. VI.
True sorrow's like to wine,
That which is good does never need a sign. Suckling.
Wit and fancy are not employed in any one article so much as that of contriving signs to hang over houses. Swift.
4. A monument; a memorial.
The fire devoured two hundred and fifty men, and they became a sign. Num. xxvi. 10.
5. A constellation in the zodiac.
There stay until the twelve celestial signs
Have brought about their annual reckoning. Shakespeare's As You Like It.
Now did the sign reign, and the constellation was come, under which Perkin should appear. Bacon's Henry VII.
After ev'ry foe subdu'd, the sun
Thrice through the signs his annual race shall run. Dryden.
6. Note of resemblance.
7. Ensign.
The ensign of Messiah blaz'd,
Aloft by angels borne, his sign in heaven. Milton.
8. Typical representation; symbol.
The holy symbols or signs are not barely significative; but what they represent is as certainly delivered to us as the symbols themselves. Brerewood.
9. A subscription of one's name: as, a sign manual.
TO SIGN, v. a. [signe, Latin.]
1. To mark.
You sign your place and calling in full seeming
With meekness and humility; but your heart Is cramm'd with arrogance. Shakespeare's Henry VIII.
2. [Signer, French.] To ratify by hand or seal.
Be pleas'd to sign these papers: they are all
Of great concern! Dryden's Cleomenes.
3. To betoken; to signify; to represent typically.
The sacraments and symbols are just such as they seem;
but because they are made to be signs of a secret mystery, they receive the names of what themselves do sign. Taylor.
SIGNAL, n. f. [signal, French; señale, Spanish.] Notice given by a sign; a sign that gives notice.

SIG

- The weary sun hath made a golden set,
And, by the bright track of his fiery car,
Gives signal of a goodly day to-morrow. Shaksp. R. III.
Scarce the dawning day began to spring,
As at a signal giv'n, the streets with clamours ring. Dryden.
SIGNAL, adj. [signal, French.] Eminent; memorable; remarkable.
He was esteemed more by the parliament, for the signal acts of cruelty committed upon the Irish. Clarendon.
The Thames frozen twice in one year, so as men to walk on it, is a very signal accident. Swift.
SIGNALITY, n. f. [from signal.] Quality of something remarkable or memorable.
Of the ways whereby they enquired and determined its signalty, the first was natural, arising from physical causes. Brown.
It seems a signalty in providence, in erecting your society in such a juncture of dangerous humours. Glauv. Serf. Pref.
TO SIGNALIZE, v. a. [signaler, French.] To make eminent; to make remarkable.
Many, who have endeavoured to signalize themselves by works of this nature, plainly discover that they are not acquainted with the most common systems of arts and sciences. Addison's Spectator.
Some one eminent spirit, having signalized his valour and fortune in defence of his country, or by the practice of popular arts at home, becomes to have great influence on the people. Swift.
SIGNALLY, adv. [from signal.] Eminently; remarkably; memorably.
Persons signally and eminently obliged, yet missing of the utmost of their greedy designs in swallowing both gifts and giver too, instead of thanks for received kindnesses, have betook themselves to barbarous threatnings. South's Sermons.
SIGNATION, n. f. [from signe, Latin.] Sign given; act of betokening.
A horsehoe Baptista Porta hath thought too low a signation, he raised unto a lunar representation. Brown.
SIGNATURE, n. f. [signature, Fr. signatura, from signus, Lat.]
1. A sign or mark impressed upon any thing; a stamp; a mark.
The brain being well furnished with various traces, signatures, and images, will have a rich treasure always ready to be offered to the soul. Watts.
That natural and indelible signature of God, which human souls, in their first origin, are supposed to be stamped with, we have no need of in disputes against atheism. Bentley.
Vulgar parents cannot stamp their race.
With signatures of such majestick grace. Pope's Odyssey.
2. A mark upon any matter, particularly upon plants, by which their nature or medicinal use is pointed out.
All bodies work by the communication of their nature, or by the impression and signatures of their motions: the diffusion of species visible, seemeth to participate more of the former, and the species audible of the latter. Bacon's Nat. History.
Some plants bear a very evident signature of their nature and use. More against Atheism.
Seek out for plants, and signatures,
To quack of universal cures. Hudibras.
Herbs are described by marks and signatures, so far as to distinguish them from one another. Baker on Learning.
3. Proof; evidence.
The most despicable pieces of decayed nature are curiously wrought with eminent signatures of divine wisdom. Glauv.
Some rely on certain marks and signatures of their election, and others on their belonging to some particular church or sect. Rogers's Sermons.
4. [Among printers.] Some letter or figure to distinguish different sheets.
SIGNATURIST, n. f. [from signature.] One who holds the doctrine of signatures.
Signaturists seldom omit what the ancients delivered, drawing unto inference received distinctions. Brown.
SIGNET, n. f. [signette, French.] A seal commonly used for the seal-manual of a king.
I've been bold,
For that I knew it the most gen'ral way,
To them to use your signet and your name. Shaksp. Timon.
Here is the hand and seal of the duke: you know the character, I doubt not, and the signet. Shaksp. Meas. for Meas.
Give thy signet, bracelets, and staff. Gen. xxxviii. 18.
He delivered him his private signet. Knolles.
He knew my pleasure to discharge his hands:
Proof of my life my royal signet made,
Yet still he arm'd. Dryden's Aurengzebe.
The impression of a signet ring. Ayliffe's Parergon.
SIGNIFICANCE, n. f. [from signify.]
SIGNIFICANCY, n. f. [from signify.]
1. Power of signifying; meaning.
Speaking is a sensible expression of the notions of the mind by discriminations of utterance of voice, used as signs, having by consent several determinate significances. Holder.
If he declares he intends it for the honour of another, he takes away by his words the significance of his action. Stillingfl.

SIG

2. Force; energy; power of impressing the mind.
The clearness of conception and expression, the boldness maintained to majesty, the significancy and sound of words, not strained into bombast, must escape our transient view upon the theatre. Dryden.
As far as this duty will admit of privacy, our Saviour hath enjoined it in terms of particular significancy and force. Aster.
I have been admiring the wonderful significancy of that word perfection, and what various interpretations it hath acquired. Swift.
3. Importance; moment; consequence.
How fatal would such a distinction have proved in former reigns, when many a circumstance of less significancy has been construed into an overt act of high treason? Addison.
SIGNIFICANT, adj. [signifiant, Fr. significans, Latin.]
1. Expressive of something beyond the external mark.
Since you are tongue-ty'd, and so loth to speak,
In dumb significant proclaim your thoughts. Shaksp. H. VI.
2. Betokening; standing as a sign of something.
It was well said of Plotinus, that the stars were significant, but not efficient.
3. Expressive or representative in an eminent degree; forcible to impress the intended meaning.
Whereas it may be objected, that to add to religious duties such rites and ceremonies as are significant, is to institute new sacraments.
Common life is full of this kind of significant expressions, by knocking, beckoning, frowning, and pointing; and dumb persons are sagacious in the use of them. Holder on Speech.
The Romans joined both devices, to make the emblem the more significant; as, indeed, they could not too much extol the learning and military virtues of this emperor. Addison.
4. Important; momentous. A low word.
SIGNIFICANTLY, adv. [from significant.] With force of expression.
Christianity is known in Scripture by no name to significantly as by the simplicity of the Gospel. South's Sermons.
SIGNIFICATION, n. f. [signification, French; significatio, Latin; from signify.]
1. The act of making known by signs.
A lie is properly a species of injustice, and a violation of the right of that person to whom the false speech is directed; for all speaking, or signification of one's mind, implies an act or address of one man to another. South.
2. Meaning expressed by a sign or word.
An adjective requirerth another word to be joined with him, to shew his signification. Academy.
Brute animals make divers motions to have several significations, to call, warn, cherish, and threaten. Holder.
SIGNIFICATIVE, adj. [significatif, Fr. from signify.]
1. Betokening by an external sign.
The holy symbols or signs are not barely significative, but what by divine institution they represent and testify unto our souls, is truly and certainly delivered unto us. Brerewood.
2. Forcible; strongly expressive.
Neither in the degrees of kindred they were destitute of significative words; for whom we call grandfather, they call caldader; whom we call great-grandfather, they call third-fader. Camden's Remains.
SIGNIFY, v. a. [from signify.] That which signifies or betokens.
Here is a double significatory of the spirit, a word and a sign. Taylor.
TO SIGNIFY, v. a. [signifier, French; significat, Latin.]
1. To declare by some token or sign.
The maid from that ill omen turn'd her eyes,
Nor knew what signify'd the boding sign,
But found the pow'r's displeas'd. Dryden.
Those parts of nature, into which the chaos was divided, they signify'd by dark and obscure names; as the night, tartarus, and oceanus. Burnet's Theory of the Earth.
2. To mean; to express.
Life's but a walking shadow; a poor player,
That struts and frets his hour upon the stage,
And then is heard no more! It is a tale,
Told by an idiot, full of sound and fury, Signifying nothing! Shakspere's Macbeth.
Stephano, signify
Within the house your mistress is at hand. Shakspere.
3. To import; to weigh. This is seldom used but interrogatively, what signifies? or with much, little, or nothing.
Though he that sins frequently, and repents frequently, gives reason to believe his repentances before God signify nothing; yet that is nothing to us. Taylor.
What signifies the splendor of courts, considering the slavish attendances that go along with it? L'Estrange.
He hath one way more, which although it signify little to men of sober reason, yet unhappily hits the suspicious humour of men, that governors have a design to impose. Tillson.
If the first of these fail, the power of Adam, were it never so great, will signify nothing to the present societies in the world. Locke.
What

SIL

- What signifies the people's consent in making and repealing laws, if the person who administers hath no tie. Swift.
4. To make known.
I'll to the king, and signify to him,
That thus I have resign'd to you my charge. Shaksp. R. III.
He sent and signified it by his angel unto John. Rev. i. 1.
The government should signify to the protestants of Ireland, that want of silver is not to be remedied. Swift.
TO SIGNIFY, v. n. To express meaning with force.
If the words be but comely and signifying, and the sense gentle, there is juice; but where that wanteth, the language is thin. Ben. Johnson.
SIGNIORY, n. f. [seignoria, Italian.] Lordship; dominion.
If ancient sorrow be most reverent,
Give mine the benefit of signiory,
And let my griefs frown on the upper hand. Shaksp. R. III.
At that time
Through all the signiories it was the first,
And Prospero the prime duke. Shaksp. Tempest.
The carls, their titles and their signiories
They must restore again.
My brave progenitors, by valour, zeal,
Gain'd those high honours, princely signiories,
And proud prerogatives. West.
SIGNPOST, n. f. [sign and post.] That upon which a sign hangs.
He should share with them in the preserving
A shed or signpost. Ben. Johnson's Catiline.
This noble invention of our author's hath been copied by so many signpost dawblers, that now 'tis grown fullsome, rather by their want of skill than by the commonness. Dryden.
SILBER, adv. The old word for sure, or surely. Spenfer.
SILBERNESS, n. f. [from silber.] Sureness; safety.
SILENCE, n. f. [silence, French; silentium, Latin.]
1. The state of holding peace.

Here all their rage, and ev'n their murmurs cease,
And sacred silence reigns, and universal peace. Pope.
5. Not mention.
Thus fame shall be achiev'd,
And what most merits fame in silence hid. Milton.
SILENCE, interj. An authoritative restraint of speech.
Sir, have pity; I'll be his surety.—
—Silence: one word more Shall make me chide thee, if not hate thee. Shakspere.
TO SILENCE, v. a. [from the noun.] To still; to oblige to hold peace.
We must suggest the people, that to's pow'r
He wou'd have made them mules, silenc'd their pleaders,
And dispossessed their freedoms. Shakspere.
The ambassador is silenc'd. Shakspere's Hen. VIII.
Silence that dreadful bell; it frights the life
From her propriety. Shakspere's Othello.
This passed as an oracle, and silenced those that moved the question. Bacon's Hen. VII.
Thus could not the mouths of worthy martyrs be silenced, who being exposed unto wolves, gave loud expressions of their faith, and were heard as high as heaven. Brown's Vulgar Err.
This would silence all further opposition. Clarendon.
Since in dark sorrow I my days did spend,
I could not silence my complaints. Denham.
These dying lovers, and their floating sons,
Suspend the fight and silence all our guns. Waller.
Had they duly considered the extent of infinite knowledge and power, these would have silenced their scruples, and they had adored the amazing mystery. Rogers's Sermons.
If it please him altogether to silence me, so that I shall not only speak with difficulty, but wholly be disabled to open my mouth, to any articulate utterance; yet I hope he will give me grace, even in my thoughts, to praise him. Wake.
The thunder spoke, nor durst the queen reply;
A reverend horror silenc'd all the sky. Pope's Iliad.
SILENT, adj. [silent, Latin.]
1. Not speaking; mute.
O my God, I cry in the day time, and in the night season I am not silent. Psalms xxii. 2.
Silent, and in face
Confounded long they sat as stricken mute. Milton.
Be not silent to me: left if thou be silent, I become like those that go down into the pit. Psalms xxviii. 1.
2. Not talkative; not loquacious.
Ulysses, adds he, was the most eloquent and most silent of men; he knew that a word spoken never wrought so much good as a word conceal'd. Notes on the Odyssey.

SIL

3. Still; having no noise.
Deep night, dark night, the silent of the night,
The time of night when Troy was set on fire,
The time when screech-owls cry, and ban-dogs howl. Shak.
Now is the pleasant time,
The cool, the silent, save where silence yields
To the night-warbling bird. Milton.
4. Wanting efficacy. I think an Hebraism.
Second and instrumental causes, together with nature itself, without that operative faculty which God gave them, would become silent, virtuelless and dead. Raleigh's History.
The sun to me is dark,
And silent as the moon,
When she deserts the night,
Hid in her vacant interlunar cave. Milton.
5. Not mentioning.
This new created world, whereof in hell Fame is not silent. Milton.
SILENTLY, adv. [from silent.]

Nor judgment under silver tresses lies.
Others on silver-lakes and rivers bath'd
Their downy breast. Shakespeare.
3. Having a pale lustre.
- So sweet a kiss the golden sun gives not
To those fresh morning drops upon the rose,
As thy eye beams, when their fresh rays have smote
The night of dew that on my cheeks down flows;
Nor shines the silver moon one half so bright,
Through the transparent tears of mine eye light. Shakespeare.
4. Soft of voice.
- This phrase is Italian, voce argentina.
From all their groves, which with the heavenly noises,
Of their sweet instruments were wont to found,
And th' hollow hills, from which their silver voices
Were wont redoubled echoes to rebound,
Did now rebound with nought but rueful cries,
And yelling shrieks thrown up into the skies. Spenser.

And shew me simples of a thousand names,
Telling their strange and vigorous faculties. Milton.
- What virtue is in this remedy lies in the naked simple itself, as it comes over from the Indies. Temple.
- Around its entries nodding poppies grow,
And all cool simples that sweet rest bestow;
Night from the plants their sleepy virtue drains,
And passing, sheds it on the silent plains.
Med'cine is mine: what herbs and simples grow
In fields and forests, all their powers I know,
And am the great physician call'd. Dryden.
- To SIMPLE. v. n. To gather simples.
- As once the foaming boar he chas'd,
Lascivious Circe well the youth survey'd,
As simpling on the flow'ry hills he stray'd. Garth.
- SIMPLESS. n. f. [simple, French.] Simplicity; filliness; folly.
- An obsolete word.

such laws as are positive, and do make that now good or evil, by being commanded or forbidden, which otherwise of itself were not simply the one or the other. Hooker.
3. Merely; solely.
Under man, no creature in the world is capable of felicity and bliss; because their chiefest perfection consisteth in that which is best for them, but not in that which is simply best, as ours doth. Hooker.
I will eat and drink, and sleep as soft
As captain shall; simply the thing I am Shall make me live. Shakespeare.
To say, or to do ought with memory and imitation, no purpose or respect should sooner move us, than simply the love of God and of mankind. Milton.
4. Foolishly; sillily.
SIMULAR. n. f. [from simulus, Latin.] One that counterfeits.
Hide thee, thou bloody hand,
Thou perjuror, thou simular of virtue,
That art incestuous. Shakespeare's King Lear.
SIMULATION. n. f. [from simulatio, French; simulatio from simulus, Latin.] That part of hypocrisy which pretends that to be which is not.
Simulation is a vice rising of a natural falseness, or fear-fulness; or of a mind that hath some main faults; which because a man must needs disguise, it maketh him practise simulation. Bacon.
For the unquestionable virtues of her person and mind, he well expressed his love in an act and time of no simula- tion towards his end, bequeathing her all his mansion-houses, and a power to dispose of his whole personal estate. Watson.
For distinction sake, a deceiving by word is commonly called a lie; and deceiving by actions, gestures, or behaviour, is called simulation or hypocrisy. South's Sermons.
SIMULTANEOUS. adj. [from simultaneus, Latin.] Acting together; existing at the same time.
If the parts may all change places at the same time, without any respect of priority or posteriority to each other's motion, why may not bullets, closely crowded in a box, move by a like mutual and simultaneous exchange? Glanville.
SIN. n. f. [from syn, Saxon.]
1. An act against the laws of God; a violation of the laws of religion.

A joy which never was sincere till now;
That which my conquest gave, I could not prize,
Or 'twas imperfect till I saw your eyes. Dryden.
The pleasures of sense beats taste sincere and pure always, without mixture or alloy, without being distracted in the pursuit, or disquieted in the use of them. Atterbury.
Animal substances differ from vegetable, in that being reduced to ashes, they are perfectly insipid, and in that there is no sincere acid in any animal juice. Arbutnot on Aliments.
3. Honest; undissembling; uncorrupt.
This top proud fellow,
Whom from the flow of gall I name not, but
From sincere motions by intelligence
I do know to be corrupt. Shakespeare's Hen. VIII.
Nor troubled at these tidings from the earth,
Which your sincerest care could not prevent;
Foretold so lately what would come to pass,
When first this temper cross'd the gulf from hell. Milton.

SIN

 As the partridge sitteth on eggs, and hatcheth them not, so he that getteth riches not by right, shall leave them in the midst of his days. Jer. xvii. 11.
 The egg laid and sever'd from the body of the hen, hath no more nourishment from the hen; but only a quickening heat when the sitteth. Bacon's Natural History.
 She mistakes a piece of chalk for an egg, and sits upon it in the same manner. Addison.
 8. To be adjusted; to be with respect to fitness or unfitness, decorum or indecorum.
 This new and gorgeous garment, majesty,
Sits not so easy on me as you think. Shakespeare.
 Heav'n knows,
 By what by-paths, and indirect crook'd ways
 I met this crown; and I myself know well,
 How troublesome it sate upon my head;
 To thee it shall descend with better quiet. Shakespeare.
 Your preferring that to all other considerations does, in the eyes of all men, sit well upon you. Locke.
 9. To be placed in order to be painted.
 One is under no more obligation to extol every thing he finds in the author he translates, than a painter is to make every face that sits to him handsome. Garth.
 10. To be in any situation or condition.
 As a farmer cannot husband his ground so well, if he sit at a great rent; so the merchant cannot drive his trade so well, if he sit at great usury. Bacon.
